Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, when the first session of this Congress began I was, unfortunately for myself, made a member of the committee on patronage. We found that Mr. Clark was employed as one of the doorkeepers in the gallery; that he had been faithful and efficient, his services satisfactory to all those who had come in contact with him. But that he was more so than the rest of the doorkeepers I deny. Others were and are as good as he, every one of them. Now, it was up to our committee necessarily to determine whether or not Mr. Clark should remain. Pressure was brought to bear on us to keep him, and as long as we could keep him we did. He remained in his place until the pressure naturally made from this side of the House for the appointment of a Republican became so strong that the place had to be given to one entitled to Republican patronage. I learned at that time that the question of whether or not Mr. Clark should be retained in some position in the House as one of the minority employees was brought up in the minority caucus and it decided in favor of another man.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is mistaken. We had no caucus on that matter.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It was in some way taken up and determined by minority Members, and they decided that of all places at their disposal there was none for Mr. Clark. However, since leaving the door up there he has been employed on one of the doors in the House Office Building, and he is there now. The position he occupied as doorkeeper in the gallery pays, as all others of similar character are paid, $1,180 per annum, with a bonus of $240, which increases the salary to that extent. I have no objection to this resolution. I am willing to see the minority receive another appointment if they show they need it, but inasmuch as Mr. Clark was so long employed at the salary of $1,180 and was so anxious to keep it, and evidently will be satisfied with that salary, I question very much the wisdom of providing by resolution for his employment at $125 per month, certainly as his employment will be permanent; and if a motion to amend is in order, I shall move to amend by making the salary $1,180 per annum instead of $125 per month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has not yielded the floor to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$125 per month" and insert "$1,180 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I say the gentleman did not get the floor to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is an extraordinary circumstance when any man appreciates attention paid to his wife by some other man. [Laughter.] But I am sure that there is not a married Representative in this House who sat in the Sixty-fifth Congress who does not highly appreciate the special, courteous attention that Mr. Clark paid to his wife and to the wife of each one of us in finding them seats in the gallery during the last session. You can not find any Member's wife who sought seats up in the gallery who was not accommodated frequently by Mr. Clark at times when seats were at a premium. I am sure the House will do as little as could be expected in passing this resolution.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; I first yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. I do not question the fact that Mr. Clark is a very courteous and accommodating employee, but I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if we are justified in appropriating money on the basis that some employee was courteous and accommodating to members of our families. We ought to look further than that. I think if gentlemen will inquire into this a little further they will find there has been in the past quite a fair sized row on the minority side of the House over this particular piece of patronage, a row in which some other employee is involved, and that the minute this gentleman goes on the roll some other gentleman as a minority employee will go on the roll at $1,800 per annum. Gentlemen, of course, must realize that this man is being appointed as a special messenger at $125 per month when all the veterans who are carried on the soldiers' roll under that title are getting $1,180 per annum.

Now, I want to say this: I have seen no indication of a need of further special employees round about the House. We have got a great many of them here now, even on the majority side, that are incompetent, and I think if we could get a little more efficiency out of some of these employees that we already have we would do well to insist upon it rather than to increase their number. I have not heard one suggestion made that there is need for an additional employee.

Oh, it is a small matter, $1,500 plus the bonus. It does not amount to very much. This has been pending since September 2, 1919, and the pressure is so great that it is strange that we have not terminated it heretofore. It may be that the lack of authorization for this special employee is what is the matter with the minority side of the House, and what has been the matter with them during all these months since September. But I submit that the time has come for us to indicate a little real economy, even though it involves a curtailment of our expenses for our own convenience and comfort here as Members of the House, and unless there is some urgent reason given why we should embark upon this policy in order to settle some disagreement upon the minority side and create an additional position I intend to vote against the resolution, and in doing so I do not believe that I can be considered as not appreciating the faithful service of the gentleman as doorkeeper in the Members' gallery in the Sixty-fourth Congress and prior to that. But there has not been a bit of evidence given to the House that I have heard—I have listened to the discussion—of any need for another special messenger to be employed at the request of the minority, particularly when you mention him by name, and even if there is, there has been no sufficient reason given why he should receive a larger salary than those who are carried on the roll under the same name, including some of the veterans of the Civil War who are getting only $1,180. I am opposed to the resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Who introduced this resolution? Was it the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

Mr. KITCHIN. Special messengers holding positions similar to this are not drawing $1,180, but $1,500, are they not?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UPSHAW. I want only two minutes.

Mr. IRELAND. I yield two minutes.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I think it has been a very beautiful indication to see the disposition of mind and heart, irrespective of party lines, to honor this noble old man who has walked into the hearts of all of us for many years. If the women of Washington could vote, they would all vote for Uncle Jimmie Clark. His heart is as golden as his hair is white. Let us honor him with this beautiful recognition. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, there is a feature of this matter which I think should challenge the attention of the House, and I think the time has come when the House should understand it. This thing of putting an employee permanently on the roll very often results in losing a very good employee, who ceases to be an employee of the House in the sense in which it should be understood and becomes a permanent attendant to the House, but independent of the House.

I have found, unfortunately, not personally but through a representative, that some of these people who are put on the roll permanently by law get an idea that they are permanent factors here, far surpassing the Members themselves. The other day a lady from my office went to one of these men and inquired for something that my office was entitled to, and was rather rudely told that there was not any there. On a further inquiry as to why there should not be something of that kind as the law provided for each Member of Congress she was told very impudently that there were too many Members of Congress around here now. That seemed to please the deputies under that employee and brought a loud laugh, and the lady was further insulted by a repetition of the remark. "There are too many Members of Congress around here now." Now, I begin to think that there are too many clerks around here now who have life jobs; that if the clerks of this House were amenable to appointment at each Congress, just like everybody else, some of them might have more manners and more sense and be more inclined to think they were servants of the House and not masters. This man to whom I refer is put on by law to stay as long as he lives, and he ought to be put off. I shall probably not seek to have it done, because he is like some of the rest, a poor old man dependent upon his job; but, gentlemen, we make a mistake when we put anybody on this roll for life. By doing that you lose a very good clerk, and he thinks he is running the House and ceases to be a servant of the House. We ought to conduct our business here according to law and treat all men alike. If this employee knows a lot of Congressmen who are superfluous, he should give us the benefit of his judgment and perhaps all can persuade our extra men to go home. If he can not, he should be given a chance to retire himself. He simply has a bad case of swelled head.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman mind stating to the House the name of that employee?

Mr. LITTLE. I had rather not. I do not care to seem to criticize a poor old man, but I think there ought to be a general rule adopted.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman ought to give the name of the man who insulted this lady in this way, and he ought to be removed from office.

Mr. LITTLE. Well, if the circumstances were different, I would see him about that myself.

Mr. UPSHAW. The gentleman makes the best kind of an argument why Mr. Clark should be put in this place.

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, Mr. Clark has always been a perfect gentleman.

Mr. UPSHAW. Absolutely so.

Mr. LITTLE. I am not arguing against Mr. Clark. He is one of the men that ought to be put on.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. IRELAND. In a few moments. Gentlemen of the House, I would like to go on record as strictly opposed to this sort of a resolution in principle, or anything approaching it, as I was opposed at heart to the one previously offered. There is no reason on earth why unusual courtesy to our wives or our visitors in the galleries should be such a rare thing that it must be rewarded. It should be the rule and not the exception, though, as the gentleman has said, it is most commendable. I am sure also that we will never get anywhere with such matters so long as almost every Member of the House has some special pet whose salary he wants raised, or for whom he wants a special position created. I have found out that the Committee on Accounts is the football for the House to kick all over the lot whenever it pleases, and for almost any purpose. But the circumstances of this particular case are peculiar. An agreement or purported agreement was said to exist between the leaders of the House, and there is a disagreement on the part of the leaders of the House and their 200 assistants on each side as to just what that agreement was; and I am very strongly determined to preserve the good faith of the situation and favor this resolution. Just so long as this House indulges in this practice of special resolutions, just so long we are going to have this continual wrangling every time one of them comes up. I am sure that if the beneficiary of this resolution knew of the commotion he was creating this morning he would, in his modest and humble nature, be very much embarrassed.

Resolutions have been offered, and are pending, by the Committee on Accounts for a survey of the employees of the House and an effort to catalogue them, to establish some system to better define their salaries and duties; but apparently the attitude of the House is decidedly against any systematic or business management of its own immediate affairs. As far as the question of economy is concerned, you could dissipate the entire contingent fund of the House and not save to your Government any appreciable fraction of what you might save by lopping off some single item in some appropriation bill.

The situation as it stands is anything but agreeable and is very regrettable, but the House is to blame for it. Just so long as we continue this practice we are going to have this same trouble that has risen here to-day.

I hope this resolution may pass and that we may be relieved from similar occurrences in the future, and that they will not come up again to the embarrassment of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Michigan to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois yields to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] to offer an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 1, line 2, after the word "serve," insert the words "during the Sixty-sixth Congress."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Line 3, page 1, after the word "of," strike out "$125 per month," and insert in lieu thereof "$1,180 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan) there were—ayes 53, noes 163.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 218, noes 25.

Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH HAGBERG.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

House resolution 277.

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Joseph Hagberg, brother of Julia Hagberg, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of her compensation as such employee, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the expenses of the funeral of said Julia Hagberg.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "equal to six months of her compensation as such employee, and an additional amount."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he considered that Joseph Hagberg was a dependent of Julia Hagberg.

Mr. IRELAND. Certainly not.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that there ought not to be such a resolution as this reported.

Mr. IRELAND. This resolution is exactly in line with the one previously voted on, save, as the gentleman from Oklahoma explained, it gives no additional compensation to the legal representative of the deceased, and only pays the funeral expenses up to an amount not exceeding $250. It is a case where we did not believe there were dependents.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this clerk was employed in my office. She came from Chicago in May last and she died in the month of August. Her surviving relatives are two brothers and a niece, all of them of the working class. I do not know whether she contributed anything in her lifetime to the support of any of them, but I do know that out of her little estate, amounting to a few hundred dollars, the funeral expense was a large item. Two hundred and fifty dollars here allowed will not exceed the additional expense of caring for and shipping her remains to her home.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

W. L. BRAGG.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

House resolution 442.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to W. L. Bragg, clerk to the late Hon. Walter A. Watson, a Representative in Congress from Virginia at the time of his death, December 24, 1919, the sum of $266.67, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IRELAND. I will.

Mr. BLACK. That illustrates the point that I wanted to emphasize a while ago, that this clerk was evidently on the roll at $3,000 a year, and receives $266.67, whereas a great many of the Members' clerks are on the rolls at $2,000, and in a similar case would receive $166.67.

Mr. IRELAND. This is the usual resolution to pay one month's salary to the clerk of a deceased Member.

Mr. BLACK. I simply wanted to emphasize the lack of uniformity in the pay of these clerks.

Mr. IRELAND. It is the fault of the House and not of the committee. We had no other way than to provide for one month's salary at the rate at which the clerk was on the roll.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address delivered before the Nebraska constitutional convention last Friday by my colleague [Mr. REAVIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address by his colleague [Mr. REAVIS] before the Nebraska constitutional convention. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. In relation to the subject matter under consideration by the constitutional convention, and incidentally the legislation now pending in Congress.

Mr. GARD. Yes; but upon what subject?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Particularly railroad legislation from a constitutional standpoint.

Mr. GARD. Does it incorporate the gentleman's report on war expenditures?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It does not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICKETTS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech made by my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON], of the fifth district of Ohio, at the Lincoln day banquet on February 12.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Agricultural appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Lincoln's anniversary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12467) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. HUSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate on the bill having been concluded, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT.

For pay of seven professors, $26,500.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that there is no law authorizing that appropriation, and I do so for the purpose of getting some information.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas state his point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing the appropriation, and I do so primarily for the purpose of securing the idea of the committee as to what they base it on.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman will find that there is abundant law for the payment of the salaries of the seven professors, and has been even as far back as the founding of the academy, and amplified by legislation from time to time.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; but as to the amount.

Mr. ANTHONY. The amount of the pay is based on supplementary legislation that specifies that the professors at the Military Academy shall have the pay and rank of a lieutenant colonel for less than 10 years' service and of a colonel for more than 10 years' service.

Mr. LITTLE. I hardly think that is the law that governs this.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. LITTLE. It may be that I am wrong, but I have been unable to find it. It was the law some years ago, but I find here in the act of August 29, 1916, that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ at the Naval Academy such number of professors and instructors, including one professor as librarian, as, in his opinion, may be necessary for the proper instruction of the midshipmen, and that the professors and instructors so employed shall receive such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy. That is the only authority I can find.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is now talking about the Naval Academy.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. This item refers to the Military Academy.

Mr. LITTLE. I understand; but where is a similar provision for the Army?

Mr. ANTHONY. Section 1336, as amended by section 4 of the act of June 23, 1879, provides that each of the professors at the Military Academy whose service as professor at the academy exceeds 10 years shall have the pay and allowances of a colonel, and all other professors shall have the pay and allowances of a lieutenant colonel, and that the instructors of ordnance, science of gunnery, and of practical engineering shall have the pay and allowances of a major.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman give me the date of that law?

Mr. ANTHONY. June 23, 1879.

Mr. LITTLE. There is a later law than that on the subject. Is that the law under which the gentleman bases this?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. LITTLE. As I said primarily, I do not do this for the purpose of obstructing the legislation, because I think those men ought to be paid, but I would like to know on what authority they pay them. I withdraw the point of order on this item, and I shall investigate it. Of course, I understand that when I withdraw the point of order I waive it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one commandant of cadets (colonel) in addition to his regular pay, $1,000.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this item for the pay of the commandant, and I would like to know on what authority it is based.

Mr. ANTHONY. The law authorizes the pay and rank of a lieutenant colonel at the academy for the officer in command of the cadet corps.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman please cite the law?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not an index of the laws of the United States. The corps of cadets has been almost doubled in number, until the commandant of the corps of cadets now commands 12 companies, the command of a colonel. Therefore, we are providing that he shall have the pay of a colonel instead of the pay of a lieutenant colonel. We are doing that because of the enlargement of the corps.

Mr. LITTLE. Where is the law that authorizes the committee to do that? It is in the books somewhere if there is such a law.

Mr. QUIN. I would say to the gentleman that that is a decrease of $100 over what it has been before.

Mr. LITTLE. That does not answer the point of order at all. Perhaps they did not have any authority to give him any money at all.

Mr. QUIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LITTLE. If there is such a law, just cite it to me.

Mr. ANTHONY. What does the gentleman want to know?

Mr. LITTLE. I want to know where any law exists that authorizes the committee to pay the commandant at the rate of the pay of a colonel, in addition to his regular pay, $1,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. I just told the gentleman that the law authorizes us to pay him the compensation of a lieutenant colonel, but we are changing that in this bill so as to give him the pay of a colonel because his command has been increased to the command of a colonel.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand, then, that the gentleman realizes that there is no authority of law for this, and that this is a change made here?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. LITTLE. Very well. I just wanted to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that gentlemen are doing this in violation of law, and that they are making law in this bill. Under the circumstances I do not insist on the point of order. But the War Department should ask and the Military Committee should propose laws to authorize the appropriations necessary. The military arm of this Government must learn to obey the law.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ascertain if it is the proposition of the Military Affairs Committee to give this colonel $1,000 additional, and if it is their expectation that he will get the thousand dollars additional after they pass this bill, and to give him another thousand dollars for which there is a bill pending.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that the officer who holds the present place of commandant at West Point has the rank of major in the Regular Establishment, and this thousand dollars makes up the difference between the pay of a major, which he has anyway, and the pay of a colonel, which he would have under this provision as commandant, during his service at West Point only.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why is it worth more to serve at West Point than it is to serve in Washington?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is considered a little more arduous and to be a more important position.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it is a very choice place; a very easy place. Do I understand that the man who actually discharges that duty is a major?

Mr. ANTHONY. He is a major in the Regular Establishment.

Mr. STEVENSON. And he is to have the pay of a major plus $1,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; he is to have the temporary rank of a colonel while in command of the corps at West Point and also the pay of a colonel, and the difference between his pay as major and the pay of a colonel is $1,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then he gets the pay of a colonel now, which, along with his commutation of quarters, heat, and light, makes him get about $6,127; is that right?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is not. He would have to be of the longest length of service to get such pay as that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ANTHONY. If he is furnished quarters by the Government, he would get no commutation at all, and he is furnished quarters.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then, instead of commutation of quarters, he gets $3,500 and $290 heat, and you propose to add $1,000 to that?

Mr. ANTHONY. He is provided with heat by the Government at West Point.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then he is not out anything for quarters or heat or light, but he is paid at least $4,000; that is the base pay——

Mr. ANTHONY. Of a colonel.

Mr. STEVENSON. Of a colonel, and then you give him another $1,000 and that is $5,000——

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the gentleman is in error. The officer in question is a major in the Regular Establishment. He would draw $3,000 a year as major, and while he is on duty at West Point in the grade of colonel we provide that he shall have $1,000 a year more, making up the difference in the pay.

Mr. BEE. That is giving him a colonel's pay?

Mr. STEVENSON. Under a proposed bill, which is on the calendar for action, he will have another $1,000 added if we pass that bill increasing the salary. Is not that true? Are you going to give that salary increase and then increase his salary as colonel or major?

Mr. ANTHONY. I suppose this officer would get any proportionate increase Congress would make, but I do not know what Congress is going to do.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a bill pending recommending a 20 per cent increase.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the event it passed, then he would get 20 per cent increase in the grade of major.

Mr. QUIN. If the gentleman will yield, the reason this man is in the position of colonel is because of the increased corps at West Point. He is a commander not of a battalion, as formerly, but of an increased corps, making it necessary for him to have the title of colonel. That is the reason this is done, and this is not an additional salary at all——

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. QUIN. I will.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand this man now on duty at West Point is a major, drawing a major's pay, and he is serving as colonel?

Mr. QUIN. That is the idea.

Mr. BEE. This simply adds $1,000 to his major's pay which he otherwise would not get?

Mr. QUIN. Certainly; he would be deprived of the $1,000.

Mr. BEE. He would be doing a colonel's work as commander of the entire Corps of Cadets on a major's pay?

Mr. QUIN. That is the idea.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman this item has been carried in every appropriation bill for the Military Academy for years; that is, there has been an increased allowance made between the pay the man actually has in the Army and that of the temporary rank which he holds at West Point. This has been carried every year. The commandant up there has a great many duties to perform that an ordinary colonel does not and he has a great many expenses to incur which other colonels do not. This item is an actual decrease made in the appropriation of last year.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to get at how sincere this spasm of economy is which has denied a hearing before this House of the disabled emergency officers who have come back from France and are languishing around in the hospitals all over the country and who are getting allowances when discharged of about $75 a month. I want to know how this spasm of economy is going to be applied to the balance of the Army when these officers are being discriminated against in the way they are and not being allowed anything like the compensation that the officers of the Regular Army who are disabled are allowed. I have had a bill pending before the Committee on Military Affairs for two months, and now they are like Pontius Pilate. When he did not want to do anything, he raised the question of jurisdiction and sent the prisoner to Herod, in this case the steering committee, and because of the great cry for economy at this time I can not get any action anywhere for about 3,000 officers of the emergency Army who have been disqualified for any service at all, and I wanted to see if this economy was going to be applied all down the line.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment now, because I have the information which I desired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that his bill, to which he referred, had been referred to the steering committee. The gentleman is in error. The steering committee has no jurisdiction over bills before the committees of the Congress. The steering committee has not considered that bill in any way. The bill was referred, I think, erroneously to the Committee on Military Affairs. My understanding is that there is still some question between the members of the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce relative to jurisdiction over the measure. My personal opinion is that it belongs properly to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I am sure that just as soon as the question of jurisdiction shall be settled that the matter will be taken up for consideration by the committee to which it is finally referred. But I want to say to my friend who introduced that bill, without definitely expressing an opinion as to what should be done with it, that the proposal it involves is no such simple matter as he seems to imagine. I think if he will go back into the RECORDS of the Congress following the Civil War he will find just such legislation as that was proposed relative to volunteer officers of the Civil War, and that legislation is still before the Congress unacted upon. In other words, the Congress of the United States refused to retire the volunteer officers of the Civil War, and the Congress refused to do it because of facts like this: Two men from a community in an emergency join the Army to serve their country. Through good fortune, one becomes an officer and the other remains a private. They both serve well. They are both wounded. Their disability is equal. I think there is a good deal of question whether there is any change of sentiment in America now from the sentiment so often expressed in the past in regard to such a case. The men having volunteered to serve their country, or having been called to serve their country in an emergency, not being men of the Regular Establishment, shall the one who wore the shoulder straps receive compensation four or five times as great as that of his brother and his friend who served in the ranks?

I express no final, conclusive, or definite opinion on the subject. But I want to suggest to my friend that it is a matter with regard to which there is something to be said on both sides. I am inclined to think we are not giving sufficient compensation to the men who bore the brunt of the battle and were incapacitated, but I am strongly inclined to think that the compensation should be the same to every man who went into the National Army, without regard to what his rank happened to be.

It will, of course, be claimed that the officers of the National Army should be placed on an equality with the officers of the Regular Establishment as regards retirement or retirement pay. We can only do that by giving that status to all officers whether incapacitated or not. If we do that, we emphasize rather than reduce the inequality among the men of the National Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I do not take the floor, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a defense of the Committee on Military Affairs, but I do deny that that committee is trying to "pass the buck" to some other committee on the matter of taking care of the wounded and diseased soldiers of our Army. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] well knows that when we entered the war the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was given jurisdiction of the compensation to be paid to soldiers, and, as a matter of fact, the Committee on Military Affairs has no jurisdiction over a man when he is once discharged from the Army. That committee has jurisdiction of soldiers and officers. But if we are permitted under the rules of the House to take jurisdiction of the matter of giving greater care to the unfortunate of our Army, we would gladly accept the responsibility.

But I want to say to the members of this committee that the gentleman from South Carolina in his first bill provided that all the disabled officers of the Great War should be given a retired status the same as if they had been officers in the Regular Army. That is a proposition that is not sound in principle, and I doubt very much whether that bill will ever be enacted into a law any more than the bill which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] spoke of, and that has been pending before Congress almost since the close of the Civil War, providing for putting the officers of the Union Armies upon the retired list and giving them the same pay as men who are commissioned in the Regular Army.

When our friend found that that would not work he introduced another bill, and that bill has in it, in my judgment, the germs of injustice and inequality, for it provides that these officers, while they shall not be placed upon the retired list, shall receive the pay of a retired officer in the Regular Establishment of the same grade. That means that the man who was fortunate enough, through friends or through pull, to get a commission as a colonel would get as retired pay the compensation of a retired colonel, while the man who lived next door to him and served as a captain in the Army and suffered the same character of disability would get the pay and allowances of captain. To me that would be an injustice between the officers.

All this talk about the fact that an officer holding a commission of a higher grade entitles him to greater compensation for wounds received in battle does not appeal to me. There should be no distinction between the officers and the privates when it comes to paying them for loss sustained in the defense of this great Government of ours. And the private soldier who lost a limb in the Argonne Forest is entitled, in my judgment, to as much compensation as the officer who ordered him to go over the top for like disability. And when that legislation comes up in this House, and I hope it will come up soon, to give these unfortunate citizens of ours who were our soldiers greater consideration than they are given at present, I trust they shall be treated all alike as citizens who have received the same character of injury in the defense of our country, and that the bill introduced by the gentleman from South Carolina will be laid upon the table, and a bill representing justice and equity to all these men shall be enacted into law by this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am delighted at least to have some information. The gentleman from Wyoming said that the steering committee had nothing to do with the bill to which I referred. The clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs informed me two weeks ago that the question of whether that committee should consider it or whether it should be referred to some other committee had been submitted to the steering committee, and up to this good morning he was unable to inform me whether they had ever gotten a decision, but informed me—at least he sent me word—that they had gotten no decision from the steering committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. My personal opinion was asked in regard to the matter some time ago, and I immediately said that in my opinion the bill belonged with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I so stated to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There is no question about it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not know that the gentleman was the steering committee. Having received the information that the steering committee had done nothing, I took it that they had eliminated him. However that may be, the gentleman says he wants a proper bill brought up and discussed; that everybody must be put on an equality. Let us see for a minute. The man in the Regular Army who is a private and the man who was in the emergency Army as a private and a drafted man, get exactly the same compensation to-day. There is no discrimination. But the officer in the Regular Army, a first lieutenant, if you will, who lost his arm, and a first lieutenant who has served in the emergency force and lost an arm, are not put on the same basis. He gets about $30 a month. The first lieutenant in the Regular Army, who has gotten a knee hurt, for instance, in the same regiment, is retired at $157 a month. Now, you talk about injustice. My proposition is to put the officers who suffered disability in the Army all on the same footing in so far as compensation is concerned, and if that is injustice I will meet the gentlemen wherever they want to make it an issue.

How many would it amount to? The gentleman says there has been a bill here to retire the officers of the Civil War. Yes; to retire all the officers, not the wounded and disabled, but to retire them all. That has always been the proposition. The proposition that I make is to compensate those only who are disabled. How many of them are disabled? Thirty-one hundred altogether of officers were disabled, according to the report made the other day, and a certain per cent of them, probably 1,000 of them, were Regular Army officers, leaving about 2,100 of them to be provided for. And yet you say to a young man like this one poor boy we have back here, "Your injuries, because you were only in the emergency Army, do not entitle you to but a third of what your companion, who happened to be a professional officer, is entitled to for a much less injury."

Now, is there justice in that? I say there is not, and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] knows there there is not, and he knows that his position is fallacious absolutely.

There is another reason why it is improper to make that arrangement, and that is this: Most of the Army were drafted men. The volunteers who were in the private ranks went into the Regular Army and the drafted men went into the emergency Army. The officers were older men, who largely volunteered and won their commissions, have greater responsibilities and greater incumbrances, and they are not in the same class as those who were called, because when the executive boards who drafted the men called the men before them the man who had dependents was excused, and therefore the men who went into the ranks as privates in the emergency Army were not men who have dependents, like most of the officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, of course this is all out of order. The gentleman discussed the matter for five minutes, and I made a five-minute statement. He has replied in five minutes. It seems to me that is about all that the gentleman should ask out of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. I just wish to complete my statement. I have taken less than 60 minutes in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming object?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not. Let the gentleman conclude his statement.

Mr. STEVENSON. Do not, then.

Mr. MONDELL. But I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman, if there is any further discussion outside of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the drafted man, if he was brought before the exemption officers and showed that he had a dependent, was excused. The officers who went to the training camps went there voluntarily, and most of them had dependents, and most of them had large responsibilities, and therefore they are not in the same class.

Now, I just want to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE] to the fact that they are right now proposing to increase by 20 per cent the pay of the officers of the Regular Army. They are here every day working for an increase in the pay of the officers of the Regular Army, and they have got a schedule here that will run a captain up to something like $3,683 a year. Now, does he think it fair that a captain who lost his right arm, who had his power to make a living destroyed, who goes back and finds his business gone and himself incapable of reestablishing it, should be set down to $1,200 a year while these captains of the Regular Army are going to be increased?

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I will say to my friend that I do not think that would be just, but I think it would be unjust to send that captain home with the pay that he has got, and send a private home, suffering from the same affliction, and give him only one-fourth of what you give the captain.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is an impossibility to give him one-fourth. If the man is a private in the ranks and is totally disabled and has dependents he would get $100 a month. If a first lieutenant is totally disabled and gets the pay of a retired lieutenant in the Regular Army he will get $157 a month until you increase it, as you propose to do, and then he would get $180 per month. You are setting an example of injustice which this country is rendering to about 2,500 men who led their men in the front ranks in France and went down before the enemy's guns and suffered irremediable injury by saying that they are not entitled to the compensation of the rank at which Regular Army officers are retired, and it is a matter that will not be sanctioned by a just populace. You also say that it is unjust to give an emergency officer who is disabled more than an emergency private. You give the Regular Army officer who is disabled the same increase over the private of the Regular Army, which you criticize in my bill as to emergency officers and men. How can you justify one and condemn the other?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of three battalion commanders (majors) in addition to pay as captains, $1,800.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this paragraph. There is no authority of law for making this appropriation. I make the point of order that there is no authority of law for keeping battalion commanders there at all.

Mr. MORIN. The law provides for the salaries of officers detailed and on duty at West Point. Their salary is fixed. This salary is fixed at the pay of captain. The salary there is authorized under the same law as was quoted by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], which gives the officers detailed at West Point the pay specified and increased rank. He is now a captain, and he is authorized to be paid as of the rank of major.

Mr. LITTLE. What is the authority for the battalion commanders?

Mr. MORIN. The corps of cadets is organized there as a battalion.

Mr. LITTLE. How many cadets are there at West Point now?

Mr. MORIN. After the last examination, when about 100 were found deficient, there were 660 cadets.

Mr. LITTLE. That would not make a battalion, let alone three battalions.

Mr. MORIN. Three classes graduated last year, which materially reduced the number of cadets at the academy. In June we expect to enter about 500 cadets, to bring the Corps of Cadets up to about 1,200.

Mr. LITTLE. That would be all the law provides. That would be a battalion. The law is found in Eleventh Statutes, page 333. I have it in my hand. The commandant of cadets is a man whose salary we raised by $1,000. It is provided in the law that he shall have immediate command of the battalion of cadets and shall be instructor in the tactics of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. In violation of the law we have raised his salary $1,000. I think that would be all right if he is worth anything. There is only one battalion at West Point that I ever heard of. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] says they are going to fill it until they have a battalion. I find here that the commandant of cadets shall have immediate command of "the battalion of cadets."

I do not know any reason why there should be three officers there commanding each a battalion. The work of a battalion commander in time of peace is practically perfunctory. In time of war he is a very active man, but the headquarters work is practically all done by the colonel's office and the colonel's adjutant. The captain's office does the company paper work, the colonel's office does the regimental work, and the battalion commander is not of very much utility except in time of battle, when he is a very useful man if he is any account at all. I do not know of any reason why there should be three battalion commanders there. If the gentleman is going to say that 1,200 men will make a regiment, and that we hope to have 1,200 there, and if they are going to divide it in the old fashion into three battalions of 400 each—and I suppose that is what he is going to say—where is there any authority of law for three battalion commanders? It is just as I have read it to you, and says that "the battalion" shall be commanded by the commandant of cadets. There is no law for three battalion commanders.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course, the gentleman from Kansas has in mind the tactical organization of a field regiment, which does not apply exactly at West Point; but we will have something over 1,200 cadets there, which will constitute a regiment, making it necessary to have a colonel in command; and if you have a colonel in command and it is a regimental organization, you will have your battalion commanders.

Now, while I am on my feet I want to say that the gentleman from Kansas will probably make the same criticism of a number of the following paragraphs, where it appears that the officer gets an increase of pay. Now, that is either founded in law or regulation—I am not prepared to say which, because we did not look the matter up, not thinking the question would be raised; but it has been the practice for a number of years that when an officer is detailed to West Point he is given the pay of the next grade above the one in which he is commissioned, and that goes all the way down the line from the commandant to the second lieutenants.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand the gentleman from Kansas to take the position that there is no necessity for a battalion commander in time of peace, but that there is a necessity for a battalion commander in time of war? I clearly understood the gentleman to make that statement.

Mr. LITTLE. I did not say that. I said he did not have much to do in time of peace; that his duties were somewhat perfunctory. He is very useful in time of war.

Mr. BEE. That may be very true in time of peace, but how can you train men for war except by training them in time of peace?

Mr. LITTLE. This thing of taking men out and drilling them is a very small part of the making of an army, and after it is once done there is not much more of it to do. The colonel's office and the captain's office have a considerable amount of paper work to do, but the paper work of the regiment is done in those two places.

Mr. BEE. It is done by the sergeant major.

Mr. LITTLE. The adjutant does it, and the sergeant major helps.

Mr. BEE. The sergeant major does it.

Mr. LITTLE. The battalion commander has a sergeant major, too, and those people do not have much to do.

I do not know why 1,200 men at West Point should have three majors commanding battalions, but that is not the point. I am making the point of order that even if there ought to be that many, there is no law for it. The gentleman says it has been the custom at military headquarters, every time a man goes to West Point, to raise his salary. That is what I am challenging, principally. Where is the law for it? Who is running this Government, anyway—the Congress of the United States or the War Department?

Mr. BEE. Does the gentleman challenge it on the ground that it is not necessary?

Mr. LITTLE. On the ground that there is no law for it. I have made the point of order that there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. BEE. The gentleman is not challenging it because the duties of a commandant at West Point, in the instruction of those young men in the art of war, are not more important than the usual duties of an Army officer?

Mr. LITTLE. No. In addition to making the point of order, I say that the duties of a major in command of a battalion at West Point do not amount to anything. They do not need him there at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman with his military experience does not conclude that all that these battalion commanders at West Point do is to take charge of their respective battalions when they are on parade, does he?

Mr. LITTLE. What else do they do?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There are various functions which they perform.

Mr. LITTLE. It is easy to say so. You mean "functions" they attend, perhaps.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is why I am trying to state it.

Mr. LITTLE. Go on; say something harder, then.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They serve as tactical officers, as instructors, and perform multifarious duties under the direction of the commandant. They do not simply wait around for the evening parade in order to take command of a battalion.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not see any evidence here that a battalion commander is an instructor, and I do not see anything relating to it except this clause which says that the commandant of the cadets shall have immediate command of the battalion of cadets. That tells who is to have command of them, and it is not one of these fellows. It says he shall be instructor in the tactics of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. If they want either of these fellows, why do not they make a law and bring it in here and ask Congress to decide it. Who is making these laws anyway, the Congress or some department?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I state to the gentleman——

Mr. LITTLE. In just a minute. We are told that they have been advancing these salaries every time a man is sent down there. I suppose they would be better off if they went outside of the Army and got trained teachers to instruct these boys anyway. But a man gets a little stand in and a little pull, and then he is sent to West Point to teach, and the minute he gets there he gets his pay raised. I do not know whether he is competent or not. Sometimes he is and sometimes he is not. I want to say that I do not believe the teachers of mathematics are any good, because their pupils are failing all the time, and every time a teacher has pupils who are failing all the time he is not a capable teacher, and he ought to be fired. If he can not teach he ought to give way to somebody who can. Anybody can teach the smart boys. It is the dumb boys and the average boys that they are employed to teach. The others do not need any teaching.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the gentleman's reference to the foundation law, which has reference to the corps as a battalion, it ought to be taken into consideration that subsequent laws have increased the corps beyond the size of a battalion.

Mr. LITTLE. Where is the subsequent law?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Subsequent laws providing for the number of cadets.

Mr. LITTLE. I have all the laws here.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has the codification of the law.

Mr. LITTLE. This is a Federal Code up to 1919.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There have been different acts by which we have increased the number of cadets that can be appointed to West Point, and they have enlarged and increased the body of cadets beyond the size of a battalion.

Mr. LITTLE. Acts during the last Congress? Everything back of the last Congress is in this little book. It is true that the laws of the United States are so scattered and so roughly and crudely drawn that it is mighty hard for anybody to tell what they are. I am trying to find out about this.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is not the blessed day coming when the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, of which the gentleman from Kansas is chairman, is going to report the necessary measure for the codification of those laws? Because we of the House turn to the gentleman from Kansas in reference to matters relating to the revision of the laws as a Mohammedan turns toward Mecca.

Mr. LITTLE. I thank the gentleman. I hope so, and if the gentleman will stay with me and insist on it, we will find out where the law is authorizing this. If we find any, the committee will know where that is. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing three battalion commanders, and no law authorizing the raising of the salary $600 each.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I have no knowledge on the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order against the language, in line 23, page 2, that it is not in order under subdivision 2 of Rule XXI on the ground that there is no law to authorize the appointment of three battalion commanders.

Mr. LITTLE. And the further point of order that there is no law that authorizes the raising of the salaries, even though there was a law authorizing the appointment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has been unable to discover any statute law authorizing the appointment of three battalion commanders.

Mr. LITTLE. I have no objection to reserving the point of order and allow them to investigate further.

The CHAIRMAN. The matter has been debated some time, and it might as well be disposed of now.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the Chair allow me to make this suggestion. I have not the text of the latest codification of the military laws and so I am unable to cite the chapter and verse. But it is a fact that with very little ground law to start with the institution at West Point has been maintained by authority given in the law to the War Department to make regulations, not only for the organization of the academy, but for the board of instructors and the military unit itself. The statute, according to my recollection and understanding, has never been laid down as to what shall and shall not be the character of the military organization. So this does not violate existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If it creates a new law it violates the rule.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not if it authorizes the same things to be done by regulation.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is it not true that the law with reference to West Point is very brief?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Absolutely.

Mr. BEE. And everything that has grown up at the institution from the day of its foundation has grown up by regulation under the War Department and not by statute law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is exactly what I intended to state.

Mr. BEE. There is nothing now in the existing law that would prohibit the appointment of three officers as commanders of battalions, and therefore it would not be subject to a point of order because it is not a question of foundation law but merely a question of carrying out existing regulations.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. So much so that there is little foundation law about West Point. It is true to this extent that the institution itself was originally founded as an engineer school, but years ago it ceased to function exclusively as an engineer school and the curriculum and policy since have been changed, not always specifically by statute, but under the blanket authority to the War Department to keep the institution up to date.

Mr. BEE. May I make the further suggestion that if the law creating the Military Academy simply provides that Congress shall establish an academy, describing its character, for education of young men as soldiers, would it be necessary to prescribe for every separate head or branch of this institution any more than it would in the establishment of the University of Texas, for instance, created by law and a constitution, be necessary to specify every branch and class that should go into that university—the law, medicine, engineering, mechanical, electrical, and how many professors it should be, and what the instructors should be paid?

If so, the books would be so large that none who runs may read; but the organic law having established the academy, Congress having authorized the War Department to carry it on, why is it not within the power of the Committee on Military Affairs to report a bill that provides for the battalion commanders and for pay of instructors of artillery and such other provisions without having them written into organic law?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I think we have found a section of law which covers the paragraph which the gentleman from Kansas makes the point of order against. I refer the Chair to section 1331 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that the supervision and charge of the academy shall be in the War Department, under such officer or officers as the Secretary of War may assign to duty. He has assigned three battalion commanders, and the committee is appropriating for them in accordance with this authorization. I think the contention of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] about the broad powers of the War Department is very well taken.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, that is not the law. That was the law when the Revised Statutes were passed 41 years ago. The law now is that the United States Military Academy at West Point, in the State of New York, shall be constituted as follows: "There shall be one superintendent, one commandant," and so on down, and it states specifically just what there shall be. When that is done, that disposes of the other contention. There is a law that the Secretary of the Navy shall appoint a lot of professors and instructors, but there is no such law for the department of the Army, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] stated a few moments ago. Congress has specifically said what they shall have there. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] suggests that we can not go into minute details. We can go as far as we wish and as far as Congress deems best.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] contend that section 1331 of the Revised Statutes has been repealed?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If it has been repealed, will he cite the Chair to the statute which repeals it?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; I have it in my hand. There was a provision 41 years ago that the Secretary should go ahead and run the academy. Since then Congress has passed a different law, and Congress has specifically stated how the academy shall be run. That repeals the other law. The probability is that this act contains somewhere a direct repeal; but if not, it would be an implied repeal.

In the Twenty-ninth Statutes, page 8, it is provided that the United States Military Academy at West Point, in the State of New York, shall be constituted "as follows," and then it goes on to specify that there shall be one superintendent, one commandant of cadets, one senior instructor, and so forth, and so on down, winding up with the master of the sword and the teacher of music. In addition to that there is provision for professors and for an instructor of English history, and so on. The law provides for 10 assistant instructors. The bill here provides for 12. I am unable to find any authority for that, but I did not make the point of order. I selected this because it is of no material value anyway. Here are three fellows who do not do anything anyway, and I think the law should be strictly followed. These cadet companies are run by cadet captains as in all military schools. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] says that if we never said anything about it, just told them to go ahead, they could, but it is the duty of Congress to go somewhat into detail, and Congress has done that. That is the way State universities are conducted.

Mr. BEE. Oh, I never said anything of the kind, I will say to my learned friend. He so construes what I said.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In very recent years the number of cadets at West Point Academy has been very materially increased. I do not know whether the increase has been twofold or threefold. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Kansas that there is a law fixing the number of instructors so that there can be no more instructors appropriated for now, with this large increase of cadets, than could have been appropriated for before the increase was made?

Mr. LITTLE. How late was this increase?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has been within the last few years. Until only a few years ago each Member of Congress named one cadet, each Senator named a few, and the President named a few, and there were a few named, perhaps, by the Secretary of War. I do not remember now whether a Member of Congress named two or three.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We could have two in the institution at the same time. They went in at the rate of two years apart, so that every second year we had an appointment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There has been a very material increase in the number, has there not?

Mr. ANTHONY. It has been doubled.

Mr. LITTLE. In effect that is my contention.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That there can be no increase without previous legislation by Congress?

Mr. LITTLE. In effect that is it. I have allowed several items to go by.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But somebody else might not allow them to go by hereafter. I wanted to get at the gentleman's contention.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in respect to the suggestion that there ought to be an increase in the teaching force at West Point by reason of the increased number of cadets at that institution, I wish to say that the suggestion presents a question of policy and not one of authority, or power. The statute cited by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] very clearly establishes the personnel of the official body at West Point so far as it is authorized by express law.

The Chair asked whether the statute cited by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] had been repealed, or not. Apparently there has been no repeal of this statute in express terms. But it is not necessary to effect a repeal, for a subsequent statute to state in terms that all antecedent statutes are repealed. If there is an inevitable conflict beween the subsequent statute, and the antecedent statute, so that they can not stand together, then there is a repeal by implication, just as absolute, as if the antecedent statute had been specifically repealed. The statute cited by the gentleman from Kansas, and the older statute on which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] relies, can not stand together. The subsequent statute specifically fixes the personnel and that personnel can not be enlarged by the antecedent statute. The two statutes being in necessary conflict, the later expression of legislative intent must prevail.

In other words the subsequent statute must of necessity operate a repeal by implication of the antecedent act.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the Chair to this question. I am not well versed on parliamentary law and do not claim to be, but here is a statute which authorizes military instruction at West Point. The statute authorizes a number of cadets to be appointed to that school. How can they receive military instruction if they are not organized into military units and if they are organized into military units necessary for instruction, how can they be so organized if they can not have the officers?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But they must be organized according to law.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, here is an academy with 1,300 cadets. It is necessary to organize them into companies, into battalions, and into a regiment in order that they may receive the military instruction which that academy is established to give. How can they be if they are not authorized to have the proper officers for their military instruction? The implication of law carries all incidental authority which is necessary to effectuate the purposes of the statute. It would be idle to provide for military instruction by statute and then to hold the necessary appropriation for instruction not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] makes the point of order against the paragraph, beginning with line 23, on page 2, that the paragraph is not in order under subdivision 2, Rule XXI, on the ground that there is no authority of law for this item. It is not for the Chair to pass upon the desirability of this provision of the bill, or necessarily upon its effect upon the conduct of the Military Academy. If there are defects in the law, the Committee on Military Affairs may remove those defects by appropriate legislation, but in an appropriation bill you must show some authority. That is the clear intendment of the rule. It is not necessarily specific authority, it may be general, but it must be one or the other. Now, the committee refers to a statute general in form enacted many years ago which places the supervision and charge of the academy in the War Department under such officers as the Secretary of War may assign to that duty, but there is a subsequent statute which has been referred to which specifically sets forth the personnel at the academy, the number of officers, professors, etc., and the Chair has been unable to find and the committee has not referred the Chair to any statute which authorizes the appointment of three battalion commanders at the Academy. The Chair is therefore constrained to rule that there is no existing law authorizing this appropriation, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of 16 instructors of Cavalry, Artillery (Field and Coast), and Infantry tactics (captains), in addition to pay as first and second lieutenants, $6,400.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no authority for these 16 instructors of Cavalry, Artillery, and so forth, with increased pay.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. The point of order is that there is no authority of law for the increased pay of these men and that there is no authority of law for 16 instructors. Some time ago I said there was only authority of law for 10 of these assistant professors that I could find. I would like to hear from the committee on this; there may be authority of law, but I have not found it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course the gentleman from Kansas understands these men who are detailed down there are regular men in the Regular Establishment. It is immaterial so far as this Government is concerned whether they are at West Point or at Kalamazoo. The only difference is that if they are used as instructors they get the pay of the next higher grade and you save——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentlemen raise their voices? The Chair can not hear.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman says that it does not make any difference as to their detail as to pay, but they are getting much nicer jobs at West Point than anywhere else. Why raise their salaries?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I desire to ask the gentleman whether he makes the point of order on the additional pay or to including instructors at all?

Mr. LITTLE. Both of them. Where is the authority for the 16 instructors? I am aware that they are entitled to some, but I have not been able to find any authority for 16.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Upon what ground does the gentleman base his contention that the point of order lies because we have exceeded a certain number? If so, what is the number we have exceeded?

Mr. LITTLE. I do not remember at the moment how many; the gentleman can find out for himself. I make the point of order on the whole thing. It may be there is authority for this, but it occurred to me that the last time I looked over it I did not find it. I may add, Mr. Chairman, I found this War Department has just gone on—go as they please anyway—and I think the law now should begin to be enforced. We have a Board of Ordnance and Fortification up here that they have had ever since 1888 without any authorization of law and for which we have appropriated thousands and thousands of dollars every year. I think the military government ought to be subordinate to the civil, and I think that the servants of the Congress of the United States should follow its laws.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I may be permitted to suggest, the Military Academy bill ever since I have been in Congress has never been questioned in this respect because it was understood it was a living and growing institution and that from time to time its technical organization or academic organization changed with the character of the times and their demands.

Under the blanket powers of the War Department to regulate the institution in its details it has seemed to the Congress to be wise not to question every time whether there was specific statute authorizing the thing that is asked to be appropriated for——

Mr. LITTLE. That is what I am objecting to. I think the Military Affairs Committee ought to question it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But I am talking about the policy on the floor of this House that ever since I can remember, beginning with the Sixty-second Congress, nobody has raised this question, inasmuch as the Committee on Military Affairs has never brought out a recommendation for an appropriation exceeding what was apparently on the face of it a reasonable number of people to conduct properly the functions of that growing institution, and the increased numbers from year to year were equitable.

But within the time of the last Congress itself this institution has been more than doubled in the number of its cadets, and it follows as a logical sequence they will have to stand some increase in the number of instructors.

Mr. LITTLE. Why do you not bring in a law before Congress?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If this can be passed as it is there will be no necessity for bringing in a law.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, in order to save time and help along, and, God knows, these boys need instruction, I am going to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seven privates, first class, at $33 each per month, and 21 privates, second class, at $30 each per month, $10,332.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, first I will make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. I make the point of order against the paragraph beginning at line 13 and ending at line 15, on page 4, on the ground that same is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DOWELL. As to this provision, I am unable to know how under the general provisions of the law the private soldier has any part in the instruction at West Point. I maintain that under the general provisions the private soldier is not provided for in the law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman will find, if the Chair will permit me, that these private soldiers are a part of the Army detachment that has been, in some form of organization or another, on duty at the United States Military Academy for a long time. There is an enormous amount of Army property, such as ordnance stores, and ordnance itself, cannon, rifles, and also horses and stables, and all sorts of things.

Mr. DOWELL. If that be true, Mr. Chairman, then they should be provided for under the general military bill and not under this bill. I concede that the private soldier is provided for in the Regular Military Establishment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will further permit, it has been the practice for I do not know how long to keep the pay roll of the United States Military Academy, so far as these permanent details are concerned, upon a separate basis from that of the Regular Establishment. West Point has a different accounting.

Mr. DOWELL. It is clearer that it does not come within this bill. This is an appropriation for the Military Academy and not for the Military Establishment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is for the soldier who is on duty at the academy.

Mr. DOWELL. But he is only on duty by virtue of an assignment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is true of all of them.

Mr. DOWELL. He may be assigned to any place. That is true. The private soldier is assigned to any point that his superior officer desires to assign him.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. May I suggest to the gentleman what may clear up his mind, if I am able to do so, that the regular army appropriation bill does not carry the money for the people who are on duty at West Point, and so they are carried in this.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the point I want to make. The private soldier at West Point should be provided for in the regular military bill. I find in this bill there is provision for nearly 1,000 private soldiers at West Point and there is also provision for two or three hundred noncommissioned officers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman understand that this is a part of the band?

Mr. DOWELL. There are a few in the band.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I mean in this item.

Mr. DOWELL. In this item it is provided for 50 enlisted men.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The item as read?

Mr. DOWELL. I do not understand that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is the way the bill reads.

Mr. DOWELL. The bill does not indicate that they are a part of the band.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill does indicate it. Here is the situation. It says "For pay of field musicians: 1 sergeant, $672; 2 corporals, at $36 each per month, $864;" and a certain number of privates. They all come within the definition of field musicians. Now, the other privates come later in the bill under the heading "For pay of service detachment." Then there is a provision for a lot of other privates. These privates that are mentioned are part of the band. Now, what the necessity is I do not undertake to say.

Mr. DOWELL. I find just above, if the gentleman will permit, there are 15 enlisted musicians and then 20 enlisted musicians and then 15 more enlisted musicians for the band. Then I find in the section that I have just read 7 private soldiers and 21 private soldiers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. These are field musicians, separate, possibly, from the band. They may be buglers; I do not know.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know what they are.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are not the ordinary private soldiers.

Mr. DOWELL. So far as this bill is concerned, they are private soldiers.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested these are members of the band. I notice in the band, according to the last law I can find, there are only to be 50 enlisted men, and before you get to this place it shows there are 50 enlisted men. In line 3 there are 15, and in line 5 there are 15 more, and in line 7 there are 20. The law I have in my hand says the band shall consist of one teacher, an enlisted man, and a sergeant, and of the enlisted musicians in the band, 15 shall receive $51 a month, and 15 shall receive $44 a month, and the remaining 20 shall get so much. That only allows, so far as I have gotten, 50 of them. I do not find anything about buglers.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. BAER. What are these bands for? Are they for the dances and balls they give over there?

Mr. LITTLE. They ought to turn them out when the congressional committee comes up, I should say.

Mr. BAER. Well, they do not. I think the gentleman from Iowa has got into the right place with his point of order.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I may suggest, the reason why these appropriations are carried in this bill is that the general annual appropriation bill for the Army does not carry them, except for the officers themselves. I should have said that when I spoke of this same thing before.

Mr. DOWELL. This also applies to the noncommissioned officers who are scattered throughout this bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No. The pay roll is charged off against the academy as if it were by itself, on a separate foundation. The officers are detailed to it, and a large part of the enlisted strength at the academy is there on a permanent job as if at a permanent military post.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that these are musicians in this first paragraph, in line 10?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is field musicians. That is part of the tactical organization, and not part of the band.

Mr. LITTLE. The law I refer to provides for only 22 privates for that. There may be 28 according to this bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There may be a discrepancy as to the number. There may be somebody extra who plays the cymbals. They may be smuggled into the band in some way, but we did not think it was big enough to pay any attention to it.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman may think it does not amount to much when he puts an army at West Point having no apparent purpose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the use of the word "apparent" the gentleman from Iowa is in error. They have the care and custody of millions of dollars' worth of property, and their experience and aptitude as enlisted men are valuable. They serve as demonstrators and instructors to these cadets.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that the private soldier instructs the cadets?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He is a demonstrator and instructor. The apparatus which the young man at West Point is taught to oversee in action and to use himself is demonstrated and explained by the noncommissioned officers and by the enlisted men who are in charge of that property and who in that sense serve as instructors.

Mr. BAER. How many of these men are assigned to run the automobiles in which the officers ride around there?

Mr. DOWELL. Are these men used to march back and forth in front of the cadets to instruct them?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is not the sense in which I meant to describe their service as demonstrators and instructors.

Mr. McKENZIE. Some of these men take care of horses, and things like that.

Mr. DOWELL. There is provision in this bill for all the men necessary to take care of the horses and all the other work that is to be done. That is all included.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Some of the most competent instructors in equitation in the Army are old noncommissioned officers. They are frequently given charge of the classes themselves, the supervisors of those classes being only nominally invested with those duties in their capacity as commissioned officers. These old-time cavalrymen are often the actual instructors of the young men in horsemanship.

Mr. LITTLE. How about the fellows that draw the big salaries for doing that?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They do not draw the big salaries for that. They draw their salaries as commissioned officers. They have the general oversight of the instruction.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman will recognize that in this bill the committee has provided for all the instructors necessary in every branch. Ample provision has been made for every instructor in every branch. These private soldiers and these noncommissioned officers do not come within the long list of instructors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I shall not take up the full five minutes.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this point of order comes here as a surprise and is not particularly well fortified, at least by the practice of the House during a great many years, regardless of whether one may be able at this moment to cite the exact statutes to contradict it.

There has accumulated at the Military Academy at West Point in all these years a great amount of military supplies and stores and ordnance and equipment of all kinds used in the Army. The very purpose of their assembly there is in order that the young students or cadets at the academy may have an opportunity to see in operation the various things that they are subsequently to be called upon to use professionally, and upon their graduation to be held responsible for themselves. The very purpose of their assembly there is that the young men may not only use them but that they may acquire competency to operate them. That property includes an accumulation of all kinds of ordnance, animals, machinery, and transportation, and all that kind of thing, which the young officer upon his graduation has to take charge of for himself. All this property should not be permitted to lie at the post uncared for. It has to have the same scrupulous care by day and by night as it would when in use in the Army itself and as it would if it were cared for by the same men who now take care of it from West Point. The ordnance and machinery and equipment are being cared for and slushed and greased properly, and the young cadet, instead of doing that work himself at a particular time, has turned to another lesson in the book or to some other piece of apparatus that he is in charge of. The necessity for the care and custody of this property is no different from what it would be if it were in one of the line divisions in a camp or on the field or elsewhere.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]. Having heard the remarks of the gentlemen on the other side, it seems to me that these points of order are dilatory. There certainly can not be any foundation for a point of order which would have the effect of depriving us of instructors at the Military Academy, or points of order against the units organized there, or points of order against the necessary enlisted men who are there.

This institution has been founded upon special statutes. It has grown up step by step. The Army appropriation bill does not carry the enlisted men for the Military Academy, but for years and years this same policy has been pursued that is pursued in this bill, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE], coming up in a manner to cut down and cut the heart out of the West Point Military Academy, would have this United States without trained officers, would have the United States helpless, and would have the academy up there, with the cadets appointed by Congressmen and Senators and the President of the United States, deprived of instructors to teach them.

West Point is an Army post, and the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Kansas would have all the property there and the post there stripped of enlisted men. The enlisted men there serve the same purpose that they serve at any other Army post in the United States.

Do these men cost the American Government any more at West Point than they would serving at any other post in this country? The very purpose for which these men are put there is to protect the property and to be a part of the means of instructing these young cadets who will graduate from that institution and in after life be officers to command soldiers in special units. It is the law now and ought to continue to be the law, and these attacks by points of order should not be made nor should they be seriously considered. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to agree with my colleague from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] on this point of order. Beyond all question the Committee on Military Affairs has authority to report bills for carrying on the Military Academy. Beyond all question it has authority to report a bill carrying every item ordinarily connected with the proper conduct and maintenance of the Military Academy. Now, in order to carry on the Military Academy and properly understand the art of war, it is not only necessary to have all the inanimate paraphernalia connected with military operations, but also that the various ranks of men should be there who are used in the actual operations of war. I am not a military expert, but it is well known that field musicians are used in every army, and I venture to say that every military academy in the world of any standing has field musicians attached to it. In order for the young men to understand their business properly and know what to do with field musicians and how to manage and use them and what their duties are, it is necessary to have them at the academy. We all understand that the duties of field musicians extend very much beyond the playing of a musical instrument.

For these reasons it seems to me it is very clear that field musicians should be attached to a military academy, and the general authority for the carrying on of the Military Academy would seem to me sufficient to authorize this appropriation.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, a word on the point of order. This bill is not entirely consistent in its make-up. We have here a number of officers provided for, but their pay is not carried in this bill, except their extra pay. Their regular pay is provided for in the Army appropriation bill. There are a considerable number of enlisted men in the service detachment at West Point, and their pay is carried in this bill. This inconsistency has run on in this way for many years, but the worst that can be said of it is that it is not consistent. If a point of order is directed against the pay of the enlisted men being carried in this bill, perhaps it should be sustained as a matter of law and parliamentary procedure in this House, but it is only a matter of taking it out of this bill and putting it into the regular military appropriation bill, because, if not carried in this bill, the pay of these noncommssioned officers and enlisted men would have to be provided for in the Army appropriation bill. It would simply make this bill so much smaller and the Army bill so much larger. As a matter of convenience and in order to show what the expenditure has been at the Military Academy the pay of the enlisted men at the academy has been carried on this particular bill for years. It seems to me that as a matter of cost-account keeping the pay of the officers ought to be carried in this bill, too, but it is not a matter of vital importance.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BAER. I know the gentleman was a colonel in the Army. Now, when he was in the Army did he have privates as chauffeurs to run around with him? I think that ought to be cut out.

Mr. TILSON. Unfortunately I never obtained the exalted rank which at that time would have entitled me to an automobile. So I never had a chauffeur to run around with me.

Mr. BAER. They have quite an army of them, and we need them in other branches of the service instead of acting as chauffeurs.

Mr. TILSON. I doubt if the chauffeur privilege is abused at West Point at all. I believe that is one place where that privilege has not been seriously abused.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the specific statute. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] suggested that we ought to be allowed to appropriate whatever is necessary to run the academy. As the Chair said a few minutes ago, we might do that if there was a law for it, but we have made a law which provides for certain things and not for others.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] has made a point of order against lines 13, 14, and 15, which provide for 7 privates and 21 privates, making 28 in all. Now, I have in my hand the extract from the law of 1918, chapter 108, which states that there shall be 50 enlisted men in the band. Now, if you will look up above you will find, in lines 3 to 5, that there is a provision for 50 enlisted men in the band, which finishes that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not understand that a field musician is a member of the band.

Mr. LITTLE. All right. Now, in 1908 the act of May 28 provided, in addition to or a part of the band, for some field musicians. But another act was passed, which I just read, chapter 108, Fortieth Statutes. That provides for a band, but says nothing about the field musicians, and I am inclined to think that by implication the rest of this field-musician business was abolished and repealed, and ceased to be the law.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LITTLE. Wait a minute. But even if that is not so, then the law of 1908 obtains, and I turn to it and I find that there were then provided 22 privates, at $180. Now, there is a good deal of difference between 22 and 28 in law, and these people have just fudged over on us and added 6 men to whom they are not entitled. It is against the law and they are not entitled to them, and the point of order is well taken. There is no law authorizing 28.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman surely remembers, from his military service, that the field musicians are not a part of the band at all. They are a part of the regular military organization.

Mr. LITTLE. I have conceded that and still have disposed of your case.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. I renew the point of order. In deference to the wishes of the Chair I will not ask him to make a ruling; but while reserving this point of order, let me say again, gentlemen, that my primary purpose in doing this is to remind the Military Committee that for many years they have been violating the law with impunity, and following the orders of the War Department with impunity, and proceeding to make law to govern the Army of this country in appropriation bills.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. May I make to my very placid friend this suggestion——

Mr. LITTLE. You are quite right——

Mr. BEE. It occurs to me from the discussion I have heard that the Military Academy appropriations have been carried along for many years without special law to cover the matters which have been introduced.

Mr. LITTLE. Everybody obeys the law but the Army.

Mr. BEE. Not necessarily the Army.

Mr. LITTLE. The Foreign Affairs Committee was in the same shape, I discovered the other day, and I expect there are a lot more.

Mr. BEE. Let me make this suggestion: The gentleman is going to demoralize the institution at West Point by his points of order if sustained. Why does not the gentleman serve notice on the distinguished gentlemen of the Military Affairs Committee that next year, when he is here, as he will be——

Mr. LITTLE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BEE. If they have not brought in a law to cover it, he will object and raise the points of order.

Mr. LITTLE. The only way to do it is to insist on it now.

Mr. BEE. But the gentleman is destroying the institution now by his points of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield? Does not the gentleman from Texas think it would be a good idea to put the gentleman from Kansas on the Committee on Military Affairs to fill the vacancy?

Mr. BEE. I would amend that motion by making the gentleman from Kansas the whole committee.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Texas, if I may make the suggestion—a suggestion which may enable us to get through more rapidly—and that is I suggest unofficially and not by direction of the committee that there is already manifest in the Committee on Military Affairs a growing disposition to take up the matter of the reorganization of the Military Academy at West Point, after we have got through with the pressing business of this session, which now lies principally in a bill for the reorganization of the Army generally. We hope that perhaps next winter we can take up the matter in its entirety, look it over very carefully and prudently, and bring to the House some well-considered recommendation for a change which may be embodied in the general law. If, as we hope, a consummation of our expectations can be reached and we can in the meanwhile be indulged by carrying the institution along as the House has carried it for many years, it might expedite the business for the afternoon.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. That is exactly what I had in mind in appealing to my friend from Kansas in reference to not making the points of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, after the encouraging statement of the gentleman from Vermont, a member of the Military Affairs Committee, I think I can say that I have achieved the result that I had in mind, and which I started out to obtain; and "Now, Lord, let Thy servant depart in peace," and you gentlemen go on with your bill. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing not drawn due enlisted men on discharge, $5,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if this is a new detachment of the Signal Corps?

Mr. MORIN. Yes; this is a new detachment placed there on account of the development of the Signal Corps that has come about by reason of the war.

Mr. TILSON. Has there been any detachment in aviation at West Point?

Mr. MORIN. No.

Mr. TILSON. I suppose there would be some difficulty in finding a landing place at West Point?

Mr. MORIN. I doubt if there ever will be on that account.

The Clerk read as follows:

One chief clerk, $1,800.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inquiring why they need so many new additional clerks over the number that they already have.

Mr. MORIN. The reason given is the great increase in the corps of cadets.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How many more will they have next year than they have now?

Mr. MORIN. They expect to have about 1,200 altogether.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Have they not 1,200 now?

Mr. MORIN. No; 760. There is a class out; they graduated three classes last year. It is not filled up to the capacity of the academy.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of two expert assistant civilian instructors in military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming, $4,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. These last two expert civilian instructors, who seem to have demonstrated that muscle is worth as much or more than brain by getting as large a salary as the other instructors, do they also get quarters?

Mr. MORIN. Yes; they get quarters.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What do these instructors do—anything else besides give instruction in fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming, and act as coaches for football?

Mr. MORIN. They have regular classes every day, and, in addition to the regular hours specified in which they have classes, at certain hours of the day they give individual instruction to the cadets. They are kept pretty busy all the time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of two oilers for power plant (increase of $720 submitted), $1,440.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in lines 11 and 12, the words in parentheses, "increase of $720 submitted."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 13, lines 11 and 12, after the word "plant," strike out the words in parentheses, "increase of $750 submitted."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of chapel organist and choirmaster, $1,500.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 14, line 3, by striking out the figures "$1,500" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 3, after the word "choirmaster," strike out the figures "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$2,000."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, if there is one person more than another who by his work has established himself firmly in the hearts of the young men at West Point and those who go there as visitors, I think it is the present organist at the Military Academy. The man who is there now has been there for some years. He occupies the dual position of organist and choirmaster. I speak of him because of my intimate personal knowledge of him and the fact that I have known him since his early boyhood. I know that his work as organist and choirmaster at West Point is of such pronounced excellence that he should be paid a reasonable and fair compensation. On page 12 of the bill there is provision made for pay of two civilian instructors in military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming at $4,000, which would be $2,000 each.

Certainly the man who is acting organist and choirmaster at the Military Academy and who receives but $1,500, should be put upon a parity at least with those who contribute to the physical well-being of the boys there, for this man contributes not alone to their physical but their mental, moral, and spiritual well-being. It is a well-recognized fact that the music in the chapel under the direction of Mr. Mayer, the man of whom I speak, is not excelled at similar institutions in this or any other country. It is something that is not as spectacular, I agree, as those who may serve upon the parade ground, but it is a matter which sinks deeply into the minds and hearts of the young men who are of the corps of cadets at West Point. There is not one there who does not respect, who does not love, this man, and the great desire of everyone there, I know, is to see him retained. He is staying there at a very considerable financial sacrifice. I do not speak of that, however, because that is a matter personal to himself. I offer the amendment which I have offered, to which the gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order, because I think the most excellent service of the man, which has been recognized by those in command at the post and I think by members of the Military Affairs Committee, should be recognized by the Congress also, and that he may have this slight addition to his salary, so that his compensation will be at least measurably commensurate with the services rendered.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The statute provides for the office of choirmaster, but does not fix the salary. Therefore, under the precedents of the House, the salary is fixed by the amount carried in the previous appropriation bill. As this amendment seeks to increase that amount, it is new legislation and out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Turning to page 12 we find a provision for one professional civilian instructor in military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming, whose pay is $1,500. Then immediately following that there is an item for pay of two expert assistant civilian instructors in military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming, $4,000, which is $2,000 each. Why are the assistants worth more than the principal?

Mr. MORIN. One of those assistants is instructor in wrestling.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. The same duty seems to be assigned in the case of each. That seems to be military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming. The principal is paid $1,500 and each of the assistants is paid $2,000.

Mr. MORIN. The assistants are experts, and have been there for a long time. The boxing instructor is Tom Jenkins, who has been there for 16 years. He was at one time the champion wrestler of this country. His salary has been increased from time to time.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania. The assistants are worth more than the principal?

Mr. MORIN. They are both experts, and they are worth more.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of one automobile, $300.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question. Is it possible that there is only one automobile out there?

Mr. MORIN. No; there are more than one.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This item is for maintenance of one automobile. Is the maintenance of the others carried somewhere else?

Mr. MORIN. No; that is an automobile assigned to some particular officer. They have provided him with an automobile, and this is for the maintenance of it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not object to the amount at all, because I think it is proper, but I was wondering if the gentleman's committee has succeeded in cutting them down to one automobile.

Mr. MORIN. No; we are adding one.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. How many have they there?

Mr. MORIN. I could not answer that. That particular automobile is in the department of practical engineering. These automobiles are assigned to the different departments.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the gentleman is unable to advise me how many automobiles are there?

Mr. MORIN. I do not know the number.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Can the gentleman tell me whether the people provided for here have in addition to the pay the bonus of $240?

Mr. MORIN. The gentleman refers to the employees of the Military Academy?

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Yes; those who have been enumerated on the previous pages.

Mr. MORIN. I do not so understand.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. The gentleman is not certain?

Mr. MORIN. I do not think so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase of machines, tools, etc., for practical instruction of cadets in wood and metal working, $500.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the reason for certain changes in the bill. Many words are left out of what has heretofore been carried in the bill and the words "and so forth" inserted. Is not the gentleman afraid that language may be misunderstood?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where is it?

Mr. TILSON. Bottom of page 19. The words "and so forth" are added. The language included heretofore "lanterns," "matches," and a number of other articles, which are stricken out, and the words "and so forth" carried. This instance is in line 13, page 19.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Take, for instance, page 19, line 7, "Department of law, books, stationery, and so forth, $850." The gentleman from Connecticut is well aware that every once in a while every one of these departments run into a construction of the statute by the Auditor or Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. TILSON. I am aware of that fact, and was just wondering in reference to the construction of this language. The reason why I am inquiring is the fear that we might run into the same thing by the use of the words "and so forth."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; that has been the language used in various appropriation statutes for years, and authorizes the use of money for similar things which might be considered to be about the same character; whereas without some such language the comptroller was frequently compelled to hold that you can not use money for one purpose for which Congress evidently may have designed it but did not say so.

Mr. TILSON. How much leeway will this give the officer in charge of the expenditure?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should say, where we provide for the purchase of books, stationery, and so forth, that would permit the purchase of ink and possibly pens.

Mr. TILSON. Would not these articles come under stationery?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; they would not—not strictly speaking. I do not think they would under the ruling of the auditor or the comptroller.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is the gentleman trying to get the words "and so forth" taken out?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; I think they ought to remain in. I know that Congress at one time, or several times, took out the words "and so forth" without knowing much about it, and as a result of it they have been at times prohibited from purchasing these ordinarily necessary articles which could have been purchased under the language "and so forth." It is impossible in many cases to describe all the items which may be necessary to be purchased—little things, office supplies, and things of that sort. Take, for instance, nibs which you use to fasten papers together, if that be the term—I do not know whether that is correct or not—but paper fasteners; they would not be covered by the term "stationery," and yet, in fact, they are the same character of stuff, for wherever people use stationery they use those fasteners.

Mr. TILSON. My inquiry was prompted by the fact that in a considerable number of cases in this bill a number of articles in detail have been left out and the language of the bill thereby much reduced by the use of the words "and so forth."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In these items there has been nothing left out.

Mr. TILSON. No; but in some other items of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That may be.

Mr. TILSON. A number of other items.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This saves the enumeration at the risk of not correctly enumerating and enlarging the scope of the appropriation.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman from Connecticut will bear out the suggestion the words "and so forth," followed down in connection with the words in the paragraph, will themselves have a restrictive meaning, and as not by any means being general terms, the words "and so forth" meaning a continuation of the same kind of articles as already specified.

Mr. TILSON. I have no objection if it will serve the purpose. In fact, I favor a liberal interpretation of statutes for disbursing officers, giving them a wide range of discretion. I was wondering if the words "and so forth" would do it and whether they would pass the auditor and comptroller.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think they will.

The Clerk read as follows:

For water pipe, plumbing, and repairs, $8,000.

Provided, That $1,000 of this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and since as a member of the committee I have had no time to speak on this bill I ask unanimous consent that I may speak for 12 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to speak for 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, also with the indulgence of the Chair that I may speak a little out of order in an attempt to controvert the statistics given by the leader of the majority on universal military training. It is a little out of order but I am going to ask the indulgence of the committee if it will allow me to speak out of order for that length of time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds I desire to reserve a point of order on the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves a point of order on the proviso.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the benefit of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that I told him an hour or so ago that I was to address the committee in an attempt to correct his figures which he made last week in the case of universal military training throughout the country, so it is a fair field and I would not want to take any undue advantage of the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, the leader of the majority has made such gross misstatements with regard to the cost of universal training to the Government that as a strong advocate of such legislation I am constrained to challenge and correct his figures. In preliminary remarks before the House he stated that universal military training would cost the United States $1,000,000,000 a year, and I quote his speech from the RECORD of Tuesday, January 27, page 2119:

> The fact is that a system of universal compulsory military training could not be inaugurated in America and operated for the first year for less than $1,000,000,000, and could not be carried on thereafter for less than $1,000,000,000, and these figures are conservative and based upon facts so well known that the least informed citizen may readily grasp them.

Subsequently, a few days later, we should give him credit for revising his figures to $600,000,000. It was the same majority leader who a few weeks ago was reported in the press as opposing any increase at the present time in the salaries of officers of the Army and Navy, in spite of the glaring evidence that many of our most efficient officers are resigning daily on account of inability to make both ends meet and the morale and efficiency of the War and Navy Departments is rapidly breaking down, due to the small compensation of the officers. There is such a thing as false economy, and it is a very narrow and near-sighted policy, indeed, which would deny our splendid officers in the Army and Navy a reasonable promotion in salaries which have been stationary for a dozen years.

The least this Congress could do would be to favorably act on the Wadsworth-Crago bills, which substantially increase the pay of officers 31 per cent, although it would not meet with the increased cost of living since 1908, which has advanced approximately 100 per cent. I have tried to use the same consistency in consideration of the Military Academy bill, believing it to be poor economy to withhold appropriations recommended for West Point for the upkeep, development, and enlargement of the Military Academy due to the entrance and matriculation of a greater number of students than ever before.

The cost of the soldier to the United States in 1915, including all overhead charges, was about $1,000 a year, while to-day, as accurately as can be figured by the Finance Division of the War Department, the cost of a soldier per year is about $1,700, in spite of figures given in the House that the soldier cost the Government $2,000.

My maiden speech on military policies delivered in the House of Representatives nearly four years ago advocated universal military training and the continuation and propagation of summer military camps, "a la Plattsburg," and even those most prejudiced against the system of intensive training will acknowledge the splendid effectiveness of the summer military training camps which sent over to France 60,000 well-trained officers during the Great War.

I am to-day just as enthusiastic for the incorporation of universal training into military law as I was four years ago.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. I will if I can get an extension of time at the close of my speech. Although the memorable Democratic caucus a week ago went on record by a vote of 108 to 17 against such legislation, I do not propose to allow an obituary to be read over a body which is not yet dead and is far from being buried. It would seem not to be a breach of etiquette to disclose to the Members how our committee stands on universal military training, and according to careful poll there are 10 members for and 9 against, with 1 member doubtful. However, I would frankly state my opinion to you that besides an overwhelming sentiment on my side of the House against, there is doubtless a majority sentiment against universal training on the Republican side of the House. Therefore, while on the surface universal military training may be doomed in this session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, its friends, loyal and legion, must keep the subject alive, rekindling the camp fires, so that eventually we will incorporate into law a provision creating the citizen soldier. I predict that if universal military training is not incorporated into law during this session of Congress it will always be an animate body, a real, virile issue, and, while temporarily passive, will confront us as a live, burning issue until finally enacted into law. I believe in the provision for universal military training as outlined in the Wadsworth bill, and which I hope will be written into the Kahn bill, more as a civil asset than as a military necessity. The Great War taught us more than we perhaps can appreciate the value of medical attention and the intensive training to the American youth, improving to a remarkable degree his morale, mentality, and physical development. Along with universal military training the Government proposes to give courses in vocational training, to give instruction in English, reading, writing, and arithmetic to those who can not speak the English language and to those who have not had the advantages of elementary education. The purpose of the Government is to produce better, loyal Americans through universal military training, obedience to law, and respect for our institutions, and these good intentions are being provided just as much for the benefit of one as it is for all, for you and for me, who some day will send our children to serve in camp four months of intensive training between the ages of 18 and 21. The Ninetieth Division Association of the United States Army went on record unanimously several months ago indorsing the policy of universal military training, and it is composed of men from Texas and Oklahoma. There seems to be a strong sentiment individually among members of the American Legion favoring such a policy, and many of the American Legion posts collectively have gone on record unanimously indorsing the incorporation of universal military training into the Army reorganization bill.

I have figures prepared by Gen. Lord, head of the Finance Division of the War Department, which as accurately as possible disclose the annual cost of universal military training to the United States for a period of four years, and they are so widely at variance from Mr. MONDELL'S figures they are worthy of comparison. This table which I am about to read to the Members was computed several weeks ago, and it is only fair to state that since that time, or at least since the last statistics, subsistence of the soldier has increased from 53 to 58 cents per day. It should be taken into consideration that the War Department, irrespective of the program outlined for universal military training, has recommended the retention of certain camps and cantonments in the United States as a means of future preparedness, and said camps and cantonments can adequately train half a million men a year. Furthermore, the War Department at the present time has on hand an amount of material and equipment amply sufficient to provide for the training of its citizen soldiers. Instead of costing the United States $1,000,000,000 a year, the cost of training in the calendar year 1921, as required by section 51 of Senate bill 3688, would be a little less than $100,000,000; and, in order that the House may be accurately informed, I will ask your indulgence while I submit the following figures, which can not be refuted, since they come from the highest office of finance in the War Department.

Cost of training, as required by section 51 of S. 3688.

	Calendar year 1921, 350,000 men.	Calendar year 1922, 400,000 men.	Calendar year 1923, 450,000 men.	Calendar year 1924 and thereafter, 465,000 men.
(a) Cost of transportation to and from places of training, 572 miles, at 3½ cents per mile	$7,070,000	$8,008,000	$9,009,000	$9,309,300
(b) Per diem allowance of subsistence in going to and returning from place of training, 2 days, at $2.25 per day	1,575,000	1,800,000	2,025,000	2,092,500
(c) Cost of subsistence while undergoing training, at 53 cents per day per man	22,260,000	25,400,000	28,620,000	29,574,000
(d) Cost of clothing while undergoing training, at an annual cost of $85.66 per year per man	9,993,666	11,421,333	12,849,000	13,277,300
(e) Cost of laundry while undergoing training, at $1 per month per man	1,400,000	1,600,000	1,800,000	1,860,000
(f) Cost of medical attendance (including dental treatment), at a cost of $23 per year per man	2,683,333	3,066,666	3,450,000	3,565,000
(g) Cost of upkeep of quarters and for heat and light, at $30.40 per year per man	3,546,666	4,053,333	4,560,000	4,712,000
(h) Equipment, at an annual cost of $237.02 per man	27,652,333	31,602,666	35,553,000	36,738,100
(i) Pay, at the rate of $5 per month per man	7,000,000	8,000,000	9,000,000	9,300,000
(j) Increase in items (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), and (i), assuming that 15 days will be necessary for enrollment, mobilization, and demobilization and that 10 per cent of the men will continue to train for two months under section 51 of the bill (0.175 of total of these items)	13,043,800	14,900,200	16,770,600	17,329,620
(k) Local boards, 2,000 of not less than 3 members each to be paid not exceeding $4 per day for 15 days	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000	3,600,000
Total	99,824,798	113,452,198	127,236,600	131,357,820

In conclusion, I am in favor of a progressive decrease in the Regular Army, say, 5 per cent each year for a period of 10 years from the enlisted strength. Since the contemplated regular force of enlisted men is about 250,000, we would have under this plan a Regular Army of 150,000 10 years hence, large enough for all purposes in the Regular Establishment, with the National Guard and the citizen soldier as the second line of defense.

In another generation we will have built up a small but efficient Regular Army, and as an auxiliary defense we will have reorganized the National Guard and trained a citizen army, which should appeal to us all as the most economic and democratic system in the national defense. [Applause.]

Most of us realize that the Republic of Switzerland has had in vogue, and it has been on the statute books of that country for more than 40 years, a law for universal military training, and the real reason why the great German Imperial Government did not attack Switzerland was not on account of its natural barriers of defense——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman have five minutes.

Mr. OLNEY. I will ask for only three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection. In the schools of Washington, D. C., there are 21 cadet companies, filled by boys who have volunteered to enter that service, and it is a splendid training which they receive. What more does the gentleman want than the kind of military training that the boys can receive in cadet companies throughout our land?

Mr. OLNEY. It is only the same argument that was used when the conscription bill came before Congress. This is compulsory, and it is intended to benefit the youth of every State in the Union, and not have it voluntary.

Mr. Chairman, I was speaking of the Swiss system, and saying that the great German Imperial Government did not dare to attack that country, not on account of its natural barriers of defense, but because it had a well-trained army under universal military training of 250,000 men in active service and 250,000 in reserve.

Most of you know, perhaps, that Switzerland prior to 1914 captured 17 out of 18 international marksmanship trophies. Perhaps you are acquainted with the little story of when 30,000 of the Swiss guards that were under universal military training for a period of three or four months appeared in Germany before the former Emperor in review, and when the German Emperor said to the Swiss general, "What would happen to your little band of 30,000 Swiss guards if they are surrounded by 60,000 of my Prussian guards?" The Swiss general answered very quickly, "We would just have to shoot twice; that is all." [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I was interested in what the gentleman was saying about increasing the pay. That is one of the things that is disturbing everybody. If the high-cost level, which I think is abnormal, but which is likely to remain, is going to remain, and we increase the pay of the Army and the Navy and necessarily would have to increase the pay for all Government employees, what are we going to do in order to avoid losing our scientific men in the Government service who are going out of it now for better pay and going from the service generally? And if we attempt to lift the pay to this high-cost level, how much is it going to require?

Mr. OLNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that several members of our committee are in favor of the Wadsworth-Crago bill, which provides an increase of 10 per cent in base pay for officers in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, and an increase in subsistence which practically gives the officer an increase of 31 to 33 per cent. Under the bill which we have passed we have provided for an increase in base pay of only 20 per cent, which, to my mind, does not meet the situation.

Mr. FESS. That answers what we have done. What are we going to do——

Mr. OLNEY. Do you mean how are we going to provide the revenue?

Mr. FESS. What I am concerned about is, what is to be the additional charge upon the Treasury, and how are we going to get the money? If we increase the pay in the Army we will increase it in the Navy, and we ought to increase pay all along the line, and what is going to be the rule of the increase in all Government service?

Mr. OLNEY. If you are asking for figures, I can not say offhand what it would cost the Treasury Department to comply with the Wadsworth bill, but I would think it would be something like $20,000,000 to $25,000,000. But in speaking of increases, it seems to me that the Government is not increasing its Federal employees in the same ratio and proportion which private industry is increasing the pay of its employees to-day.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. OLNEY. And I think we ought to conform to that proposition in order to keep our faithful and efficient employees in the Government.

Mr. FESS. If we do not increase it, it appears that we are going to lose the best service. Now, how much must we increase it to avoid losing them? I think it is a practical problem that is quite distressing. What about the school-teachers, for example?

Mr. OLNEY. The school-teachers, too, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere ought to be raised in conformity with the high cost of living since 1908. And I may state to the gentleman the pay of the officers in the Army has remained stationary since 1908 while the cost has increased 100 per cent since that time.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. I do not want to appear impertinent, but I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes that this system he proposes will produce a finer soldier than Sergt. Yorke?

Mr. OLNEY. I think Sergt. Yorke probably had six months of intensive training before he acquired the efficiency he did acquire. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso in line 3. I would like to have the gentleman in charge of the bill explain the necessity for making this immediately available.

Mr. MORIN. I will say as to this item that some of the pipes have been frozen up during the winter, and we want to be able to make those repairs as soon as the weather permits. This money is necessary in order to do that. Otherwise we would have to wait until July.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the $1,000 apply to the $8,000 appropriation?

Mr. MORIN. It comes out of that.

Mr. DOWELL. It is part of the $8,000?

Mr. MORIN. Yes. Otherwise it could not apply until the 1st of July.

Mr. DOWELL. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs and improvements to the laundry machinery, etc., to be expended without advertising, and to be immediately available, $35,000.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves a point of order on the last paragraph, beginning on line 25, page 20.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill the necessity of making this $35,000 immediately available and also for the expenditure without advertising?

Mr. MORIN. That is really an addition to the laundry, and they want to be able to begin work on it as soon as the weather permits. The quartermaster at West Point takes charge of the work there himself. Under a special act he can authorize the completion of the building-extension program. When he asks for bids on these buildings and thinks the bids are too high he does the work himself, and in many instances he saves thousands of dollars to the Government. That is why he wants to be able to go on with this work. When he gets the estimates and thinks they are higher than the cost at which he could do the work himself he goes ahead and takes the men and does it himself.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, reading from the hearings on this paragraph, I find that the testimony shows that it is not imperative that this item be made immediately available, and it occurs to me that this money should be used in the ordinary way in which appropriations are made.

Mr. MORIN. It will delay the completion of the new laundry that was authorized in last year's appropriation bill. As I understand it, the laundry building that we appropriated for last year is nearly complete. Now they want machinery to equip it with, and if the language "to be immediately available" is not included here it will compel the academy authorities to wait until July 1 to equip the laundry, that is now ready to receive the machinery.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there any reason why it should be done without advertising and without receiving bids?

Mr. MORIN. Only the reason that they feel they can go into the open market to better advantage.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman read from the hearings where Gen. McArthur says it is not necessary to have this provision? That is not the exact language.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Has the gentleman ever been in New York in the month of July?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Ought they not to have a laundry there before that? The effect will be to deprive these boys of the laundry.

Mr. DOWELL. The hearings that I have read indicated that it was not necessary. Of course, that is a different proposition. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania just read the statement of Gen. MacArthur on this item?

Mr. MORIN. On what page?

Mr. DOWELL. At the top of page 81.

Mr. MORIN. I read:

Gen. MACARTHUR. I think that is perfectly correct, and if these are not special things we could advertise.

Mr. WISE. Unless there is some special reason why this should not go under that general rule.

Col. TIMBERLAKE. That is the way everything connected with the laundry and cadet mess for the last several years has been conducted, and if you will look you will find another article there connected with the cadet laundry. The next one, "Repairs and improvements to laundry machinery, and so forth, to be expended without advertising."

Gen. MACARTHUR. Of course, those are special things.

Mr. WISE. Do you want that immediately available now?

Col. TIMBERLAKE. No, sir.

I think he refers to the item of repairs and improvements to the laundry. The machinery, and so forth, is to be procured without advertising.

Mr. DOWELL. And it does not refer to this item?

Mr. MORIN. He says:

We do not want it especially struck out, but it could be struck out. That is identically the way it was last year.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman from Kansas has stated that the laundry is ready for the machinery, and that the machinery is ready to be put in. If that be true, I do not want to prevent the progress of this work, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and move to amend, page 21, line 1, by striking out the word "to" where it first occurs and inserting "which may."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 21, line 1, strike out the word "to," after the word "fourth," and insert in lieu thereof the words "which may."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is not to require them to spend the money without advertising, not to forbid them to advertise if they want to, but to permit them to purchase without advertising if they desire to. I do not think they should be forbidden to advertise if they can, by advertising, get the people to do the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Chairman. I want a record on it.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to quarters of steward of cadet mess, to be expended without advertising, $150.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "to" and insert the words "which may."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. Will the gentleman state the line?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. On the paragraph just read.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Line 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 22, line 12, strike out the word "to" the second time in the line and insert the words "which may."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs to cadet barracks, $15,000.

Provided, That this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the proviso in lines 19 and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that from the reading of it one would judge that it was a deficiency bill. I want to know the reason for this item in particular being necessary at the present time.

Mr. MORIN. Repairs to the cadet barracks are repairs to the old barracks. On or about the 12th of June, when the class is graduated, they move into camp. The cadets then leave the barracks and do not return until about the 1st of September. It requires all the time while they are away to repair the barracks. If we do not make this money immediately available they will have to wait until after the 1st of July before beginning repairs. This gives them about two weeks additional time in which to make the repairs.

Mr. TILSON. Would it not be well to begin some time or other to make the appropriation a little bit larger, so as to carry it over until June 30 of the next fiscal year, so that this proviso, which is always subject to a point of order and always likely to lead the committee into trouble, might be omitted?

Mr. DOWELL. That is what occurs to me, that this appropriation should be made for the fiscal year beginning July 1, and that instead of making numerous items immediately available some provision should be made for taking care of them in such way that they could be covered in the regular appropriation bill. Upon the statement of the gentleman I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa withdraws his point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to turn over to the United States Military Academy without expense all such surplus material as may be available and necessary for the construction of temporary buildings, also surplus tools and matériel for use in the instruction of cadets at the academy: Provided, That in the allotment of surplus tools and matériel by the War Department to the various governmental agencies provided by law preference shall be given to the needs of the academy: And provided further, That to cover the cost of labor in the construction of such temporary buildings there is hereby appropriated the sum of $10,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the first proviso, beginning in line 10.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, we concede that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then I move to amend, in line 13, by striking out the word "and" before the word "provided" and by striking out the word "further" after the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN of Illinois: Page 25, line 13, strike out the word "and" before the word "provided" and strike out the word "further" after the word "provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Superintendent of the Military Academy is hereby authorized to lease to any corporation, company, or individual land on the United States Military Academy reservation at West Point upon which to erect a hotel and necessary buildings in connection therewith, in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by him, and upon such terms, conditions, and reservations, and containing such covenants and conditions as may be agreed upon in such lease by said corporation, company, or individual, and the said Superintendent of the Military Academy and approved by the Secretary of War; said lease to be for a term of not exceeding 50 years and to provide for just compensation to the lessees for the construction of said hotel, appurtenances, and equipments to be paid to said lessees at the termination of said lease: Provided further, That the provisions of an act making appropriations for the expenses of the Military Academy for the fiscal year 1920, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1919, authorizing the Secretary of War to allow any corporation, company, or individual to erect on the United States Military Academy reservation at West Point, N. Y., a hotel in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy are hereby repealed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph in order to get some information. What is the necessity for repealing the legislation contained in the Military Academy appropriation act for the present fiscal year?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that under the former authorization the officers were unable to get anyone to erect a hotel in conformity therewith, so that the superintendent of the academy has recommended this new language, which is more liberal than the terms under which we sought to have the hotel erected last year. He has asked us to adopt it, in the hope that we can get a suitable hotel building erected on the ground.

Mr. WALSH. This provides for leasing for the term of 50 years. I assume that the plans and specifications will not be very different than those provided in the existing law.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; and they would have to be approved by the War Department. Under the amendment that we adopted last year, at the end of the lease term the property was to go to the United States Government. Under this new amendment, as the gentleman will see, we provide that the hotel building shall belong to the owners, or that they shall be recompensed by the United States Government for the value thereof.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that when we are going to give investors the right to erect a hotel there for a long term of years, during the term of that lease they will have taken in sufficient receipts to compensate them for all their expenditures, so that the property ought to go to the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is a question of considerable doubt. I will say that the question as to whether such a hotel would be commercially profitable when operated under such stringent regulations as the War Department would provide is a matter of grave doubt, and the officials thought we would have to make a much more liberal proposition than the one which we embodied in our amendment of last year, in order to get anyone to consider it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman may have stated what I want to know. Why did they not get the hotel built under the provisions of the current law?

Mr. ANTHONY. At the time the provision was inserted it was supposed that some admirers of Gen. Pershing were going to raise the money to construct a hotel and name it the Pershing Hotel in his honor. But for some reason that endeavor fell through. The gentleman from Illinois at my right says they would not permit a building to be built of that kind as a monument.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Was not the reason given when the bill was under consideration last year? The item has been under consideration in this bill for a number of years.

Mr. TILSON. The real reason why the hotel was not built was because of the restrictions put upon it in the previous act, one to the effect that at the end of 50 years the building should belong to the Government, and the other, which was perhaps the more deadly provision, that the superintendent of the academy or somebody else should have the right to fix the rates, which made it an impossible proposition for any hotel man to take up.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; but I have not the floor.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has it been stated how much the proposition for the proposed hotel was to amount to in dollars and cents?

Mr. MORIN. Between four and five hundred thousand dollars. That was the estimate three years ago; but probably it is much more than that now.

Mr. DONOVAN. I understand that that would revert to the Government at the end of 50 years.

Mr. MORIN. Under the last provision it would, but under this provision they may terminate the lease at any time that is agreeable to the Government and the lessee.

Mr. DONOVAN. With a compensation proportionately.

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORIN. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Does not the gentleman feel that this is rather loose language with reference to the compensation?

Mr. MORIN. No; that would be in accordance with an agreement with the War Department when they originally enter into the lease. At the end of 15 or 20 years the Government may want to take it back and ask the occupant to remove it, or they may enforce regulations under which the occupant might not want to operate the hotel and could not operate it profitably.

Mr. DONOVAN. If the gentleman will yield, the proposal is to give the Government the right of election, if it so decides, that it needs the ground and to award an equity to investors which will recompense them for the sum invested.

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What amount of rental is proposed?

Mr. MORIN. We do not propose any amount of rental. The Government really ought to build the hotel, although we have been unable to get an appropriation for that purpose. We may be able to get some one to build a hotel and under these conditions. My judgment is that the Government ought to build the hotel itself.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts still reserving the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I am.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would like to suggest something that goes to the merits of the question and not strictly to the point of order. It is perfectly well understood by everybody at West Point for a number of years that there is no money to be made out of any hotel venture in that locality. The original installation of a hotel was based on the fact that the reservation is visited only by families of cadets and various public officials of governments that come to inspect our system of Army education, and there was need of some means of housing people who were guests. For that reason the present hotel was put up years ago. It is disgraceful and worse than an old, abandoned sawmill, one might almost say. It has been the butt and jest and ridicule of thousands, and has exposed us to humiliation and shame for years. Everybody understands it. It is not a commercial venture that will attract anybody to invest capital, because there is no steady guaranteed return on the capital. It is only used periodically for the visits by families of cadets who come along in the spring, just about graduation or otherwise occasionally. There is no other means of housing people unless they go away down to New York City. So, as a matter of fact, the man who puts up such a building and runs it at a moderate rate, if he breaks even at the end of 50 years will do better than probably anybody has done yet.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If this hotel is not going to be run at a profit, how does the gentleman think somebody is going to put four or five hundred thousand dollars into a building with a provision in the law that at the end of the lease the Government can pay him for the building?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am frank to say that the very language we have written into this bill does not hold out to any business man any tempting inducement to invest his money, but we have been led to believe from time to time that certain men who were interested in West Point as a national institution will be glad to do something along this line. I recall some report about one man, or, rather, the family of one man, who had a son there as a cadet who died, and there was some idea on their part for a time of helping to erect this hotel as something in the line of a memorial to the son. While that seems to us as practical men, in the consideration of this bill, a good deal out of the way as a tangible resource for the Government to depend upon, still that is about the only kind of expectation on which we can base any hopes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think this language will simply result in putting up an expensive building there and be an invitation for the Government later on to come in and contribute to take care of a deficit in its running expenses?

Mr. ANTHONY. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman says no; but if this is not going to be a paying venture there will be a swarm of interested people down here saying, "Oh, you have permitted this beautiful structure to be built, and this man can not make it pay, and we ought to have quarters for Baron Ipecac or somebody else who is going to visit here, and we can not get anybody to run the place."

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, the gentleman means Baron Figtree.

Mr. DONOVAN. And probably the Countess Paregoric will be with him.

Mr. WALSH. And it would simply result in an appropriation being carried for that purpose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit the suggestion that we have undertaken to write into this language the same safeguards that we write into far more important undertakings involving the expenditure of money, that no building shall be put up there or contract made for it without the specific approval in detail of the Secretary of War?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, that is a proper limitation, surely. How many people can the present tavern up there accommodate?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know, but some one suggests less than a hundred. I know I have visited it several times and have always sworn each time that I would never go again.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps it might be a salutary influence to have such a structure as that up there as a public hotel.

Mr. MORIN. In order to accommodate a hundred guests they have to sleep five and six in a room on cots.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is apparent to anyone who has ever visited West Point that this would be entirely out of the reach of commercial possibilities as a hotel enterprise. West Point itself is situated in such a part of the country with relation to New York City or to the larger cities above that it is not a place where travelers would naturally stay overnight. It presents no commercial possibilities in that way. There is nothing at West Point except the Military Academy to attract anyone to go there, so that the result would be that the patronage at the hotel would be limited to people largely of direct family connection with the cadets, and they usually go there all about the same time, just about graduation time, or make an incidental visit throughout the year in case of the sickness of a cadet. There would be no certainty of a more or less fixed income on the part of the hotel man. There is nothing to tempt anybody to put any money in such a venture unless there be something like a liberal concession on the part of the Government that one can have a fair opportunity at least to get the money back when the 50 years have gone by.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How far is it in miles to a decent hotel?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, New York City is the only near-by place.

Mr. WALSH. How far is that in miles?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Somebody said 75 miles.

Mr. WALSH. That is a long, tedious journey; it would probably take about two hours to go to New York, and they would probably go to New York anyhow because——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Well, I hope to live to see the day when the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has several sons of his own at West Point and is visiting them there, and then I may stand somewhere on an observation point and observe him trying to enjoy the convenience of getting his meals "down town" in New York 75 miles away. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORIN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the quartermaster informed us that in conference with some hotel men in New York it was suggested that if the language was changed as it is in this bill that they might make a proposition to the War Department to build a hotel at West Point. Now, I want to cite one instance that I know about myself.

Mr. WALSH. From this indicated generosity, will not they know that if they run behind they will get the Committee on Military Affairs to come in here and recommend us to make up the deficit?

Mr. MORIN. I for one would recommend a Government hotel now.

Mr. WALSH. That is a different proposition.

Mr. MORIN. But I would like to state this for the information of the gentleman in reference to the necessity for the hotel there——

Mr. WALSH. I concede the necessity. The pathetic report of the gentleman from Vermont has convinced me of the necessity for a hotel there.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to state this instance which I personally witnessed: I was there one night about 10 o'clock in the office when a lady came in there from the State of Washington. She had a son at the academy who was seriously ill in the hospital. She had made the trip all the way there to see him. When she arrived at the desk she registered and asked the clerk to give her a room. He said, "The only thing I can give you is a cot in a room with six other persons." That lady had come all the way from the State of Washington to see her son, who was in a serious condition. We ought to have a hotel, and the Government ought to build it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not understand why that man is not reaping a large harvest. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. McKENZIE. We concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That section 1318, Revised Statutes, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "Appointees shall be admitted to the academy only between the ages of 17 and 22 years, except in the following case: That during the calendar years 1919 and 1920 any appointee who has served honorably and faithfully not less than one year in the armed forces of the United States or allied armies in the late war with Germany, and who possesses the other qualifications required by law, may be admitted between the ages of 17 and 24 years: Provided, That whenever any member of the graduating class shall fail to complete the course with his class by reason of sickness, or deficiency in his studies, or other cause, such failure shall not operate to delay the admission of his successor."

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 27, line 16, after the figures "1919" insert a comma, strike out the word "and," and after "1920" insert the word "and" and the figures "1921."

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. GARD. Why does the gentleman strike out the figures "1919"?

Mr. DOWELL. They should go out.
Mr. GARD. I can not see any reason why.
Mr. DOWELL. I am unable to understand how "1919" is material here because that has already passed. I submitted the name of an applicant who was a few months over 22, and he was rejected, though the examination takes place in March, 1920, so that I assume there can be no one appointed in 1919 coming within the provisions of this bill.
Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.
Mr. BEE. I understand that there are about 10 or 12 young men who will be affected by this matter if you strike out the figures "1919."
Mr. DOWELL. If that is true, I have been treated unfairly, because I submitted the name where the applicant was a few months over 22 and he was rejected by the department, and I am unable to understand how anyone else could secure an appointment.
Mr. BEE. Was not that under existing regulations? If he was over 22, there was no relief?
Mr. DOWELL. That is true.
Mr. BEE. This would afford relief and let him get in?
Mr. DOWELL. It will not give relief, because the examination comes before this bill will pass. He can not avail himself of the 1920 examination that takes place here the 1st of March.
Mr. MORIN. Was he a soldier?
Mr. DOWELL. He was.
Mr. MORIN. And he would come under the provisions of this?
Mr. DOWELL. He would come under it if it had been enacted in time.
Mr. MORIN. We could not enact it until the bill came into the House.
Mr. DOWELL. That can not apply until 1920, and if we are to increase the age to 24, he can be appointed in 1921 and still get in the age limit.
Mr. MORIN. Has the gentleman made an appointment in the place of this one?
Mr. DOWELL. I have. He having been rejected, I appointed another.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].
The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.
Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.
The committee divided.
Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Did the amendment offered by the gentleman strike out the figures "1919"?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it did not.
Mr. DOWELL. The amendment, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio, was not made. I was merely suggesting that it should come out.
Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman desire to make it?
Mr. DOWELL. If there is no objection, I do make it.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has the Committee on Military Affairs considered not to have any provision regarding the appointment of boys to West Point similar to what they have?
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend a moment so that the Chair can announce the result of the last vote? On that vote there were—ayes 46, noes 2.
So the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. MORIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.
The motion was agreed to.
Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12467, the Military Academy appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.
Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.
The previous question was ordered.
The SPEAKER. Is there a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.
The amendments were agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.
Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 5.
So the bill was passed.
On motion of Mr. MORIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. HICKS, for three days, on account of official business.
To Mr. VENABLE, for three days, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs in considering this bill, having in mind the policy of economy which this Congress is pursuing, reduced the amount asked for in the original estimates from $6,778,637.20 to $2,141,712.70, which is $131,219.20 below the amount appropriated last year, making a total reduction of $4,636,924.50. By so doing they have checked the building program now going on at the Military Academy, which makes provisions for the increased corps of cadets, and I fear this may hamper the administration of the academic and military instruction during the coming year. Be this as it may, if they can pinch through this year without serious injury to the academy, we can give them all the money necessary to complete the building program next year, and the injury will have been only temporary at the most.
There is a provision in this bill, which I sincerely hope will pass, fixing the period of instruction at the academy at the prewar course of four years. This I regard as more important than any other feature of the bill, as it preserves the aims and purpose of the institution.
The purpose which West Point was intended to serve and has well served in the past was to give the education and technical knowledge necessary to an accomplished Army officer, accompanied by severe mental and physical training and discipline, and to send them into the Army as a life profession, so that the country at all times might have available highly trained men acquainted with the theory of campaigns and of Army organization, strategy, minor tactics, logistics, and all the operations of war.
Any such result in developing men to the desired point in the directions stated can only be obtained by the long experience in service of educated men who make the Army a life profession; if the most that can be taught at the best military schools precedes the actual Army experience, the shorter that experience need be for the individual to reach the desired state of competency. That this class of men is invaluable to our country was abundantly shown in the Civil War, but it is not necessary to go beyond the present to prove their worth. The Regular Army officers have been the moving and inspiring spirits of all the military machinery created since America entered the World War. By competence and good sense these Regular Army men completely dominated our great national Army; with the exception of some good men from the old militia organizations who had given years to State service, these Regular officers, mainly West Point men, filled nearly all the higher posts.
The effort has been and still is to instill into our Army the discipline and the sense of duty which have come to be known as the West Point spirit. This is what Gen. Pershing called for when he said: "Give them the West Point discipline"; "send men with the West Point spirit and discipline." These Regular Army men in the higher posts, through their West Point and subsequent training, had all the knowledge necessary to their positions and lacked only the actual practice of handling large masses in battle. Their fuller knowledge, largely acquired by training at West Point, had been the equivalent of practice even in directing large numbers on the field of battle.
The object of West Point has been to prepare and have these men on hand—to have men ready and competent to lead; its work has been for the future and not for the immediate present. The change now ordered in the course of instruction by the War Department completely reverses the former purpose of the academy, and instead will turn out uneducated soldiers for squad leaders and platoon commanders who will have had only a fraction of the education for which the academy is provided. Neither can the spirit of West Point nor the high sense of duty which has become the hall mark of West Point be acquired.

The young men who are to be graduated from West Point after but two years' stay there entered the academy to receive an education, with the view of making the Army a profession, of entering the Regular Army as educated officers, with the greater prospect of future promotion which a West Point education and training would give. This change at West Point, therefore, inflicts a grievous wrong upon the 272 young men whom it is proposed to graduate next June and who are to be deprived of the opportunities that they were promised, invited, and encouraged to accept, and at the same time deprives the future service of properly trained officers. Besides perverting the aims of the academy and wronging the young men who entered the academy with those aims in view, this action completely breaks and destroys the high and noble traditions of the institution—traditions the like of which, in many respects, no other institution has developed; for without the time element of the education the acquisition of this spirit is forfeited. The honored "esprit" of over a hundred years' growth is completely shattered without, so far as I can learn, consultation with any of the many able graduates whose opinions were readily available. I do not believe that the interests of the Government are served by the change or that there is the least demand for it by the country. It seems to have been the decision of one or two men, who may or may not be infallible. So far as I can learn, the desire of the department in graduating the present first class with but two years' instruction, and thus changing the fundamental methods and purpose of the academy, is to turn out a class each year. This I do not believe is the desire of Congress nor the desire of the country. The turning out of a few hundred additional uneducated second lieutenants, 19 and 20 years in age, is not turning out graduates of West Point; it is not serving the best interests of the Government, and I sincerely hope that Congress will express itself on this question, assume the responsibility which is ours, and put the academy back on the prewar course of four years, and by so doing preserve the most fundamental and valuable features of West Point training, that of subjecting all to precisely the same course of instruction and development, and thereby bring about the military efficiency which has so long characterized the West Point graduate.

Educated Army officers with trained and disciplined minds are an asset to any nation; a first and most invaluable factor in securing such officers is a good military school.

The Military Academy at West Point has existed, grown, and continually developed for over 100 years, and for the past 50 years, at least, has been universally recognized as without a superior, and with but one or possibly two equals in the whole world.

The traditions of the academy and the glorious records of its graduates have produced an "esprit de corps" of inestimable value in creating and developing the fundamental elements of manhood which have come to be recognized as the hall-marks of West Point.

Is this unsurpassed institution, with its glorious records and its ennobling traditions, to be changed by the swipe of the pen from one of the foremost military schools of the world in permanent educational worth to a temporary military supply station for hastily equipped and poorly educated junior officers 19 and 20 years of age?

I do not believe that the change is for the best interests of the service or that there is the slightest desire in the country to see this famous institution degraded. The change is a step toward defeating "preparedness" for the future by stopping the supply of properly educated officers. As a matter of material economy, it is a loss to the Government to convert a plant established for a higher order of work to a lower order. Those things which have been laboriously built up at West Point during 100 years of able administration will be sacrificed and the best interests of the Government not served if we permit the elimination of an institution which years of effort alone can reestablish.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to read and insert as part of my remarks the following telegram, which I received from Gen. John J. Pershing, recommending the return to the four-year course:

HOUSTON, TEX., February 5, 1920.

Hon. JOHN M. MORIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Reference your telegram, I favor four-year course at Military Academy; reasons, in brief, follow: The courses covered and standard required on graduation can not be lowered without grave injury to the service. Result of shortening course would inevitably be the gradual raising of entrance requirements until only boys having had one year of college could enter. This would tend to limit cadets to those financially able to attend college. This, in turn, would adversely affect democratic character of Corps of Cadets, which has always been one of its greatest assets. Examination of records shows that heretofore cadets have come from all walks of life, and I believe that it is essential that this be continued. My third reason for favoring the four-year course is that it is my belief that four years is none too great a time for the character forming, which has always been the greatest advantage of West Point.

PERSHING.

It is my desire to call the attention of the Members of Congress to a letter received from the commandant of the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ontario, advising the Committee on Military Affairs that the Royal Military College was returning to the former course of four years. This academy is considered by the most prominent English military authorities as the best institution of its kind under the British Government, and its high standard has been attained after the adoption of the West Point system. The letter referred to follows:

THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE OF CANADA,
KINGSTON, ONTARIO.

As requested by you, I forward herewith copy of the Royal Military College regulations, together with a copy of the report on the examination for admission held last June.

I also forward a copy of the amended syllabus of work to be covered at the entrance examination to be held in June next. This is necessary, as commencing with the next college session, next September, the course at this college is to be a four-year one instead of the three-year one now in force.

This change will have the dual effect of modifying the syllabus for the entrance examination, 1920, shown in the accompanying report, and of lessening the age limit. Paragraph 8 of the inclosed regulations is, therefore, amended to read as follows:

"To be eligible, candidates must not be less 'than 16 or over 19 years of age on the date of' entering the college."

Yours, very truly,

EDEL GREENWOOD,
Major, Staff Adjutant, Royal Military College.

For further information permit me to insert a carefully prepared report by the academic board, discussing the relative advantages and disadvantages of three and four year courses which was submitted to the War Department on December 13, 1918:

From: The General Committee.
To: The Superintendent United States Military Academy.
Subject: Course of study at the United States Military Academy.

1. In compliance with the third and fourth paragraphs, War Department letter of November 16, 1918 (file No. 351.1, West Point), the general committee submits the following report covering the suggestions therein relative to a revision of the course of study at the Military Academy.

2. In its deliberations upon the proposed revision of the curriculum the general committee has been guided by its conception of the functions of the Military Academy. The functions are to graduate young men capable of at once performing the duties of junior officers and with the fundamental moral and mental training which will insure them the ability to use their rational faculties to the fullest advantage under the varied conditions of the service, such ability being the most useful result of education, and which with after years of development will enable them competently to fill positions of leadership and high responsibility. In the military profession the graduates of the Military Academy should set the standard of the Army. Upon the standard depends the ability of the country to organize and employ without undue wastage its military resources.

3. With these functions of the Military Academy constantly in mind, the general committee is unanimous in the opinion that the quality of the graduates is of far greater importance than the number. Even should Congress in its reorganization of the Army largely increase the peace establishment, the committee believes that it would be a mistake to allow the need for a large number of junior officers to force a general lowering of the Military Academy standards.

It has never been the policy of the Government to draw its officers exclusively from the Military Academy. Indeed, it is doubtful whether such a policy would be desirable. The opportunity offered to enlisted men and to graduates of other institutions to gain commissions has been an inspiration to many and has resulted in the addition of a large number of efficient officers to the Army. By the existing policy, however, in which the Military Academy graduates form only a part of the officers, the necessity for the high quality of its graduates is accentuated, as it should be their province to set the standards of professional training and character for the whole Army. Any plan, then, which would result in lowering the standards of the Military Academy graduates would react injuriously on the Army as a whole.

4. The importance of this emphasis upon quality is revealed by the experience of the war which has just ceased: The enormous expansion of the Army, involving complicated duties of organized equipment, transportation, supply, training, and leadership, required a large number of general officers of ability. For the supply of such officers the Government naturally and rightly looked first to the graduates of the Military Academy. From such graduates of 30 or more years of service the Government selected most of its general officers.

5. In support of the statement just made, the following statistics are given from the best information available:

Class.	Number in active service.	General officers.	Percentage.
1881	19	13	68.4
1882	11	10	90.9
1883	22	16	72.7
1884	20	15	75.0
1885	13	11	84.6
1886	36	25	69.4
1887	36	26	72.2
1888	26	23	88.5
1889	28	14	50.0
1890	35	22	62.9
1891	40	17	42.5

The average percentage appointed general officers from the classes of 1880 to 1888, inclusive, is 76.8.

6. From the facts cited in paragraphs 4 and 5, it is evident that in attempting to fulfill its immediate functions the Military Academy is also training the material for future general officers in times of crisis and capable in the meanwhile of maintaining a high standard of professional efficiency in the Regular Army. If the graduation requirements are lowered to a point where the fundamental education and training are an insufficient foundation upon which to build, then the graduates of the Military Academy will no longer be able to qualify themselves for the positions they must fill in peace and war. The emphasis in the past upon quality rather than quantity and the present urgent recommendation of the committee that this emphasis be maintained in the future are thus justified.

7. The course of study at the Military Academy has been mathematical and scientific, and it should continue so. The military profession is scientific and technical in character, far more so than formerly and certainly to become increasingly so in the future. The committee thinks that the profession of an officer in our Army is more likely to demand men of character and logical power than simply men of information and knowledge; the committee is convinced that the power and habit of clear, exact, and logical thought engendered by the proper study of mathematics and in the application of mathematical principles and processes to mechanics, engineering, electricity, ordnance, and other practical sciences are the assets that can be provided our graduates, and the academy should supply them. The work of the graduates in this war, as in our past wars, has proved that the character of the course of study is essentially sound. The system has been adequately tested, and it has stood the tests. Graduates from all parts of the classes have shown their ability to develop the professional knowledge required, even though such development after graduation from the academy has been allowed to be largely individual and voluntary. No radical change in the system of the Military Academy should be made. Preserving the present character, the course should be developed and improved in every way possible. Such development and improvement the various heads of the departments are continually striving to introduce.

8. The criticism that a course of mathematical and scientific character contains subject matter not apparently of direct application in this or that branch of the service is answered by the fact that the Military Academy is not training or educating officers for only a particular branch of the service, nor does it claim to prepare a finished product in any branch of the service. It is giving a sound basis of education, which by proper effort upon the part of a young officer can be readily expanded to meet any other minor scientific activities of the service; of such activities there always have been and must continue to be a large number in the hands of line officers. This basic education is also the foundation upon which any officer may safely build in preparing himself for the duties and responsibilities of higher command. The value of the Military Academy to the country is being judged to-day in large part by the work of its graduates of 30 or more years ago; not upon what was actually taught them as cadets, but upon the adequacy of their mental training and character, as a foundation for their later development.

9. If the character of the course of study is to remain essentially mathematical, and the course itself is to remain essentially scientific and technical, as the committee believes they should, then no material change should be made in the relative times devoted to the scientific and to cultural subjects. The course is now all that the average cadet can carry, and any increase in one subject can only be accomplished by a corresponding decrease in some other. The mathematical and scientific subjects constitute a logical and continuous development, of which no step can be omitted. Any increase of the cultural subjects would necessitate the omission of some of the scientific subjects, a change which, in the opinion of the committee, would do a great deal more harm than good.

10. If the course of study at the Military Academy is to be shortened to three years, it can be done in one of three ways:

(a) By a complete change in the whole character of the course.

(b) By cutting off a year at the end of the present course.

(c) By cutting off a year at the beginning of the present course.

11. If plan (a) is advocated, it must be with a view to the substitution, in a shortened course, of some cultural subjects for the mathematical and scientific subjects. In considering this plan it should be remembered that the military profession is more closely akin to the various branches of the engineering profession than to any other. For many years the Military Academy was the leading technological and scientific school of the country, graduating men who led in all the engineering activities of our country at the same time that it was sending forth such soldiers as Grant and Lee, Sherman and Joseph E. Johnston, George H. Thomas and Stonewall Jackson, and others. The importance and technical nature of the duties of our Engineer officers is well known, but the great variety of minor engineering activities that are often required of line officers is not generally known.

The duties of line officers in our Army are more varied and more comprehensive than in any other military service in the world; these are constantly detailed to duties requiring technical knowledge. The quartermasters of our service are, very many of them, line officers detailed to that duty; they build posts, quarters, and all the various utilities which pertain to posts, with all their mechanical accessories, and keep the same in constant repair. Then, too, owing to the smallness of our Engineer Corps and the fact of the great amount of civil work imposed upon it, line officers frequently have to perform the duties of engineers.

In field operations in time of war with our small Engineer Corps it is increasingly essential that many line officers should be capable of performing the duties of field engineers and be able to construct various forms of emergency bridges, field work, build roads, repair railways and telegraphs, erect temporary structures—in short, to meet the requirements of temporary exigency. In addition to this it is of the first importance that line officers should be able to conduct military topographical surveys and reconnoissances and prepare field maps. It is a matter of record that our line officers in recent years, as well as formerly, have performed every variety of scientific duty above enumerated and others not mentioned.

In this connection it is deemed hardly necessary to mention, but it should not be forgotten, that the technical nature of all the material appliances of war is far greater than ever before, and this applies to means of transport as well as to all weapons of combat, on land and in the air; if our officers are to be more than skilled craftsmen in the technical duties of the service, their mathematical and scientific attainments can not possibly be diminished.

The committee is convinced that for the purely practical purpose of being able to perform intelligently the duties likely to devolve upon graduates, as well as for the reasons given in paragraph 7, the course at the academy must be scientific rather than cultural. No engineering school would think of substituting cultural for necessary scientific studies.

Were this school being inaugurated for the first time, some of the issues here presented would lack the test of experience; but West Point has been tested by the varied exigencies of a century of national growth. From the beginning of the last century to the close of the present war in every important activity of the Nation's life the influence of its graduates has been felt and universally recognized, at critical times often directing and exerting a decisive influence. A full discussion of this subject can not be here undertaken, but the overwhelming evidence as to the efficiency of the academy's work shows that it is not the result of accident or chance; the worth of its individuality has been proven beyond a doubt. That committee is convinced that any experiment would be unwise which would disintegrate or materially modify the influences which result from the character and scope of its curriculum, its discipline, its traditions, and its admirable system of instruction, upon all of which depend the results of the academy's work.

12. If plan (b) is to be followed, the subjects covered during the last year of the present four-year course, including law, Spanish, ordnance and gunnery, and civil and military engineering (covering fortifications, army organization, and military history) will have to be omitted. These subjects can not be added to those taught in the earlier years of the course, for the work of those years is already as heavy as the average cadet can bear. Certain of these subjects, too, as ordnance and gunnery and civil engineering, rest upon the previous courses of study and can not be properly taught until the completion of those courses. All of these subjects except Spanish are essentially military, and their entire omission in the education of an officer would be inconceivable.

13. It may be suggested by some that these subjects of the last year of the Military Academy course can be taught in the service schools. The committee fails to see any advantage in such a system. The necessary plant is already available at the Military Academy; the students are under full control; their pay is that of cadets; the training and teaching staffs are already organized and efficient. The change of system would require the organization of new departments in the service schools, entailing a waste of effort by duplication, the supply of considerable equipment at large expense, and the payment of the students on the status of officers instead of that of cadets.

14. Under plan (c) the Military Academy course would be shortened to three years by increasing the entrance requirements to cover one year's work. The entrance requirements would then include algebra (complete), plane and solid geometry, plane trigonometry, English grammar, English composition and literature, history, geography, and beginners' French. Inasmuch as successful mastery of the advanced courses in the academy depends upon the thoroughness of instruction in the fundamental branches, the only proper test for entrance to such three-year course would be by examination. The only way by which qualified candidates can be secured in the various sections of the country for such a course is by State-wide competitive examinations.

Under the conditions thus set forth, namely, admission by State-wide competitive examinations covering algebra (complete), plane and solid geometry, plane trigonometry, English grammar, English composition and literature, history, geography, and beginners' French, the general committee could and would approve a three-year course, and believes that the academy could continue to graduate men well qualified for later development. These conditions are the only conditions upon which the general committee believes that it would be justified in recommending that a three-year course be established.

15. If the three-year course under the conditions indicated in paragraph 14 be considered desirable, certain practical difficulties must be faced and solved before attempting to put it into effect. If these difficulties do not permit of solution, the committee believes that the attempt to introduce a three-year course should be abandoned. These difficulties are as follows:

(a) Enlisted men would be no longer able to qualify. Even with the present requirements, very few enlisted men qualify; with increased requirements probably none could do so without extensive furloughs for special preparation.

(b) The entrance requirements would lose touch with the public free-school system, for few public schools cover thoroughly all the subjects in the proposed entrance requirements.

(c) Few of the most desirable class of young men would present themselves for examination. The class of young men who by their college work would be considered most desirable would normally have progressed so far toward completing their education for business or profession that they would not care to exchange their college for the Military Academy. Experience has shown that under peace conditions few young men leave college to enter the Military Academy; in the absence of compulsory military service no greater number is to be expected as a result of increased entrance requirements.

16. The question of the length of the course of study is thus seen to be dependent upon the question of whether there is any widespread desire on the part of young men of good scholastic ability to come to the Military Academy. The evidence presented by the many failures on the present entrance examinations and by the general character of the certificate now submitted for admission indicates that there is not. It seems probable that a substantial increase in the entrance requirements would bar much of the material now seeking admission, and the committee sees no reason to believe that any higher class of material would present itself if the requirements were raised.

The general committee believes that the difficulties mentioned in paragraph 15 are insurmountable.

17. If the War Department agrees with the committee in believing the difficulties involved in increasing the entrance requirements to be insurmountable, the committee is thoroughly convinced that the existing four-year course of a scientific and technical character should be followed in its essentials in the future. This present system is very desirable. The full period of the collegiate education is covered here, so that thoroughness can be required at all stages. It places the cadet under full control before he has developed beyond the impressionable stage in the majority of cases, so that the military discipline, physical training, and moral influences of the academy have their maximum effect.

18. In determining the length of the course at the Military Academy little weight should be given to any arguments based upon the lengths of the courses at foreign military schools. Compulsory military service enables entrance standards to be set at discretion and the material to be chosen with care. The Military Academy must continue to offer a collegiate education and be satisfied with the character of material attracted.

19. The committee does not feel justified in submitting at this time any recommendation based upon the relation of the Military Academy to the post-graduate schools. All of these schools are now closed, so far as their regular work is concerned, and the committee assumes that modifications of the former courses will be desirable as a result of the experience in this war. The committee believes that there should be thorough coordination of the work of the post-graduate schools with that of the Military Academy and to that end recommends that, as soon as conditions clear up enough to give some definite idea of what the future is to be, a board be appointed, on which the Military Academy and all branches of the service shall be represented, to formulate a general plan for the educational system of the Army. The members of this board should be officers of rank and experience. The system of education, while taking care of the immediate needs of each branch of the service, should also provide for the broader development of officers with a view to their general usefulness in high command. The committee hopes that in the system adopted, which must primarily take into account the needs of the multitude of officers who are nongraduates, a way may be found to provide for the continuous development of the graduates of the Military Academy.

20. In conclusion the general committee desires to call attention to the fact that continual modifications in the curriculum are being made as the necessity of adjusting the course to changed conditions becomes evident. The committee has at no time regarded the course as fixed and rigid. As examples of such modifications in very recent years the following may be mentioned: (a) Establishment of the department of military hygiene; (b) formation of the department of English and history; (c) development of practical shopwork in ordnance and gunnery; (d) reorganization of the instruction in drawing and military sketching; (e) changes in the department of chemistry, involving the omission of mineralogy and geology, the expansion of the work in electricity, and the preparation of a course in the principles of internal-combustion engines; (f) changes in the department of philosophy, involving the curtailment of work in astronomy, the introduction of fundamental instruction in physics, and the further development of the course of mechanics, including the mechanics of flight; (g) the temporary omission of Spanish and substitution of a longer course in French to meet the war emergency; (h) introduction of a supplementary course in minor tactics. The general committee earnestly desires that it should be recognized that the departments at the Military Academy are endeavoring constantly to adapt their work to the best interests of the service and the country.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., December 13, 1918.

TO THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

1. This report is approved by the academic board and fully concurred in by the superintendent in reference to letter from The Adjutant General of the Army, November 16, 1918. (351.1.)

(Signed) S. E. TILLMAN,
Colonel, United States Army, Superintendent.

I also wish to include in my remarks an extract from the annual report of the Superintendent of the Military Academy for the year 1919:

EXTRACT FROM ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SUPERINTENDENT OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., June 12, 1919.

From: The Superintendent, United States Military Academy.
To: The Adjutant General of the Army.
Subject: Annual Report of the Superintendent, United States Military Academy.

1. The last annual report of the superintendent was dated November 15, 1918, and contained the more important and essential facts connected with the administration of the academy during the previous academic year and up to that date. As therein stated, efforts at that time were being made to fill existing vacancies in the corps of cadets to the full accommodating capacity of the institution. Owing to the early graduation of three classes in 1918, the last two (second and third) on November 1, there was left on November 2 only the fourth class, the class that entered in June of that year, containing 425 members. The total number of appointees after the early graduations of November 1 was 337. These appointees were admitted without the usual mental tests and with the expectation and promise that they would be graduated the following June after having taken a greatly modified course of instruction at the academy. Owing to the termination of hostilities on November 11, the third class, consisting of 280 members, which had gone out on November 1, was returned to the academy on December 1, to remain under instruction until June of this year; this class returned to the academy on December 1 as commissioned officers unassigned. Concomitantly with the return of the third class to the academy and with the decision made as to its final departure, it was directed by the War Department that the courses of study and the exercises, arranged with the view of graduating the class which entered in June, 1918, in June, 1920, and the class which entered in November, 1918, in June, 1921. In accordance with the above indicated instructions the class of student officers (academy third class) left the academy a second time on June 11, receiving modified diplomas testifying to their accomplishments at the academy. The other two classes which entered (one in June and the other in November, 1918) are being given greatly modified and abridged courses, with the view of graduating them in June, 1920 and 1921, respectively.

After the above stated decision was made in December last with regard to the dates of graduation of the two cadet classes then in the academy, and also because of the termination of hostilities, an unusual number of resignations were tendered by the members of these classes, 24 resigning from the class admitted in June and 85 from that entering after November 1. In the case of the cadets who were admitted after November 1 no examinations were held until the following March. Due to the fact that these appointees were suddenly selected, allowed practically no time for preparation of any sort, admitted without the usual mental tests, and then obliged to undertake at the same time rather intensive training in both academic studies and military exercises, many of them failed to meet the reasonable requirements set at this March examination. At this March examination 73 of this class failed to reach the required standard. Many of the resignations, too, tendered by this class were due to the conclusion of the men that they were not prepared to master the course. The other cadet class which had been admitted in June also labored under serious disadvantages owing to the excitement attending changes in dates successively fixed for their graduation and the necessary modifications of their work accompanying these changes. After the June examinations, and at the time of my relief as superintendent, there remained in the June class 288 cadets and in the November class 139 cadets.

From the foregoing statement of the academic situations between September 1, 1918, and June 12, 1919, it is evident that the instruction was carried on under most unfavorable conditions. These conditions involved not only the disruption of the courses of study, but included frequent reliefs in the personnel of instructors, as well as their transfer from one department to another, thus requiring of them work for which they had little time for advanced preparation. The heads of departments met these most unusual and unsatisfactory conditions with the most zealous and praiseworthy efforts, and both they and their instructors deserve the highest commendations for entirely unselfish though sometimes unsatisfactory labor in trying to accomplish the best results and the highest benefit for the classes.

As soon as the armistice indicated a termination of hostilities the academic board began the consideration of ways and means to return the academy to more normal and, if possible, more satisfactory conditions, due consideration being had for the lessons of the war. A fully considered and carefully prepared report by the academic board, discussing the relative advantages and disadvantages of three and four year courses, was submitted to the War Department on December 13, 1918, with recommendations thereon. The recommendations of the board were not adopted, and on May 12, 1919, an order was issued by the War Department prescribing "that the course of instruction at the Military Academy be fixed for three years," and the superintendent was directed to have the academic board submit as soon as possible a revised course of study to embrace three years. The program for the new course of three years had not been completed at the time of my relief, June 12.

In submitting this my final report as superintendent of the academy and probably taking my last official action with reference to the institution after being connected with it for more than one-third of its existence, and at the end of the most unusual and eventful year in its history, and at the beginning of a new academic policy, if not desirable, it is certainly permissible to include a brief reference to the purposes, methods, and accomplishments of the academy up to the present time; for it may be safely assumed that the characteristics which have carried an institution through an unbroken existence of 117 years are worthy of record and also of consideration in connection with any similar purposes that may be attempted elsewhere, such as determining the principles which insure the best results in education, general or special.

The claims upon which the academy's honor and distinction rest must of necessity be curtailed to the extreme limit in this report.

The purpose of the Military Academy, stated in the briefest possible terms, has been training and development rather than education alone, by acquisition of knowledge, however varied; training and development of the natural faculties to the fullest extent through concentration of effort and thoroughness in accomplishment, at the same time requiring and engendering obedience and subordination to proper authority, thus molding character through consistent, thorough discipline, both mental and physical; the end hoped for being men of character and power rather than merely men of knowledge and information, as desirable as these latter possessions are admitted to be.

Washington, in the last letter that he wrote, says that he "ever" considered the establishment of a military academy as of "primary importance to this country, and while I was in the chair of the Government I omitted no proper opportunity of recommending it," etc. Washington favored West Point as the most appropriate site for such an institution, and as early as 1780 and 1781 he was instrumental in having military instruction given at this place. The Military Academy became the successor of this beginning; it was instituted and has continued for the purpose of educating professional soldiers and it is accordingly fitting that brief reference be made first to its record in this respect. Whether the accomplishments of the Military Academy support and justify fully its limited purposes and methods might rest entirely upon the records and achievements of graduates in military activities alone, but to all who agree with those able men who shaped and continued the West Point policy, viz, that the main and superior object of all education is training, discipline, and development rather than the simple acquisition of knowledge, the success of the academy's graduates in other than military lines may be also appropriately included in viewing the academy's returns to the country and the success of its methods.

Although the academy was founded in 1802, it did not take final, definite form until 1817; until this latter date it was without consistent and well-defined courses of study and at the beginning of the War of 1812 only 65 of its graduates were in service. A number of these young men did excellent and invaluable work in the construction of defensive works at important seaports and won for themselves great distinction at the time. For such works, on the defenses of New York, West Point's very first graduate was voted "a benefactor of the city of New York" and his portrait placed in the city hall. This same first graduate performed many duties of great importance. Of another one of those early graduates Gen. Scott said: "That, in my opinion, and perhaps in that of all the Army, he combined more genius and military science with high courage than any other officer who participated in the War of 1812," a most extraordinary and gratifying compliment. Still another of those early graduates who was engaged in this work became two years afterwards, in 1817, the great superintendent and father of the academy, Gen. Thayer. Equal distinction and recognition came to many others of these early graduates, and of those serving in the field one-fourth were killed or wounded.

The experiences of the War of 1812 were not without instruction to the Nation, and the Military Academy thereafter received more considerate treatment. Almost from the beginning of his administration as superintendent, Gen. Thayer had for several years the earnest and enlightened support of John C. Calhoun, the Secretary of War, and in a short time the framework of the academic system which has prevailed for over a century was firmly established.

At the breaking out of the Mexican War in 1846 there were slightly above 500 graduates of the academy in the service, and nearly an equal number in civil life, many of whom tendered their services to the War Department. With the exception of possessing a greater number of educated officers, the country was no better prepared for war in 1846 than it was in 1812, but in comparing the operations and results of the two wars the effects of the West Point education were unmistakable.

Very nearly three-fourths of the line officers in the Army at the opening of this war were graduates and nearly all of the officers of the staff corps. The brilliancy of the campaigns which brought this war to an early and victorious termination testifies to the perfection with which the operations were planned and carried out, and therefore to the skill of the regimental officers as well as to the soldierly ability of the commanding generals.

In addition to this evidence we have the direct and positive assertions of the then Secretary of War and of Gens. Scott and Taylor and other commanders that our "unexampled career of success" in this war was contributed to in an eminent degree by the graduates of the Military Academy.

As is well known, Gen. Scott, many years after the war, after abundant time for reflection, gave it as his fixed opinion "that but for the graduates of West Point the war between the United States and Mexico might, and probably would, have lasted four or five years, within its first half more defeats than victories falling to our share, whereas in less than two campaigns we conquered a great country and a peace without the loss of a single battle or skirmish."

The instances of gallantry, of professional skill and technical ability displayed by graduates in this war were entirely too numerous for special reference, but it is well known that the Mexican War gave the Military Academy a great reputation. In this war over one-fourth of the graduates in the service were killed or wounded.

Fourteen years after the close of the Mexican War there opened the greatest war in the world's history up to that time. Up to that date there existed no retirement list for officers of the Army and the senior ranking officers of the Army were not removed from the active list for age or incapacity. Partly due to this fact and to others not pertinent to mention here, and notwithstanding the brilliant record of the graduates in the Mexican War, notwithstanding the commendation that had been bestowed upon the academy graduates, nothwithstanding the continual growth of the academy in public favor up to the beginning of our Civil War, only one graduate of the Military Academy had been appointed to the full grade of brigadier general in the line and that one declined the appointment.

At the opening of this war, like all of our country's wars, military requirements were obliged to make compromises with political considerations, but within a year the magnitude of the struggle which had begun was recognized and such compromises were largely avoided or made as innocuous to military success as possible. Bearing the facts and the necessity just mentioned in mind, it will sufficiently demonstrate the part played by graduates in this great war to state a few of the striking results brought out thereby.

While there was not a single graduate of the grade of general officer in the line of the Army in January, 1861, in January, 1865, the names of graduates alone appear on this list. This position had been made the reward for successful command in the field.

"Every important battle of the war was commanded on one or both sides by graduates, generally both." "In a list of 60 of the more important battles and campaigns all but 5 were commanded on both sides by graduates. Of the five exceptions, the Army on the one side was commanded by a graduate, and in four of these exceptions he was victorious." At the end of the war all the armies on both sides were commanded by graduates, nearly all of the corps and a majority of the divisions and staff corps and supply organizations as well as many of the brigades.

Of the graduates in service on the Federal side one-third reached the general's grade and over one-half on the Confederate side. Those graduates in service on both sides who did not receive the general's star were performing services indispensable to their armies. One-third of all West Point graduates in the war were either killed or wounded.

The great national and international military distinction made by many of the graduates in this war greatly increased the prestige of West Point and made world wide its reputation, and at the same time justified the academic and military methods of the institution.

It was more than 30 years after the close of the Civil War when the Spanish War broke out, followed by the Philippine insurrection and the invasion of China. During these troubles the principal commands were held by nongraduates who were then in the senior position in the Regular Army. The graduates of the academy were subordinate commanders, and everywhere met the requirements of educated and skilled soldiers.

It is doubtful whether the American Army, officers and enlisted men, has ever received a higher, more eloquent, or more deserved compliment than that bestowed by the President through the Secretary of War in General Orders, No. 66, July 4, 1902, upon the service rendered by them up to that date in Cuba and the Philippines. This order should be consulted by all who would know the great achievements of the Army in those troubles.

The graduates of West Point were full participants in this service and shared in the glory and the praise so justly bestowed; they always and everywhere maintained and in many cases, too numerous to mention, added to the reputation of their alma mater.

From the early days of the Academy to near the end of the nineteenth century the Regular Army fought a pioneer war with the Indians in the Northwest, in Florida, and in the great western part of the country from the Canadian line to the borders of Mexico.

This service carried forward the borders of civilization and made possible the wonderful growth of our country. But generally it involved a life of isolation and dreary monotony, broken by periods of the most trying service and intense hardship. In this service are recorded some of the most astonishing military performances on record, involving endurance, determination, courage, and high sense of duty. For 40 years prior to the Civil War the great majority of the officers of the Regular Army were graduates and a very large proportion of them since that date, so that the graduates fully share the honors of this arduous, valuable, heroic, distinguished, and almost forgotten service.

Even in this extremely brief summary of the achievements of the academy's sons during the first century of its existence it would be inexcusable not to include some reference to the many important and distinguished services rendered by graduates in other than purely military lines. Under this heading we may place services of graduates as explorers, surveyors, builders, etc.

As is well known, West Point antedated the first technical school in this country, the Rensselaer Polytechnic, by 23 years, and these two institutions, as stated by President Gilman, of the Johns Hopkins, "were the only established places in this country for good technical instruction so late as 1847," when the Sheffield Scientific School was established. In considering the honors due the academy and in reckoning the achievements of our technically educated graduates we should not forget the profound influence of the academy as an example nor the great influence of our graduates as teachers in many institutions which followed the academy, besides their services now about to be mentioned.

As early as 1820 there were commenced explorations of the country previously unknown between the Mississippi and the Pacific Ocean, which explorations were continued almost uninterruptedly until the first transpacific railroad was finished in 1868. Engaged upon these explorations and services were scores and scores of graduates of the academy. Space does not permit the enumeration of these men by name. The graduates of the academy for the larger portion of this time possessed a monopoly of the knowledge necessary for these purposes. As has been truthfully stated, a modern railroad map of the West shows that graduates "blazed the way for the locomotive." In fact, nine-tenths of the recorded geographic knowledge of the great West prior to 1870 was due to the work of the Army, almost entirely performed or directed by graduates.

In the great international boundary surveys, the surveys of the Great Lakes, the latter being one of the most refined geodetic surveys of the world, graduates bore the responsibility and were the principal participants in the work.

Likewise, a graduate of the academy in 1843 was called upon to reorganize the important coast survey and was its distinguished head for 24 years. At his death the Secretary of the Treasury wrote: "No man within the present generation was more widely known in the practical walks of science * * * and his work has won the approbation of the leading learned bodies of the world, among whom his name has long been held in honor." This graduate made the survey one of the most renowned of the world.

Besides the surveys just mentioned, many other less accurate surveys were conducted by Army officers, covering large areas of territory in the West, to the great benefit of the people and Government. In 1878 the Chief of Engineers, writing to the Secretary of War, truthfully referred to these surveys in the following words: "Refined methods of topographical surveys were first used in the United States by Army officers in the performance of their varied duties; they were among the first to apply the refined methods of geodetic surveys; that from the time the Government had territories to explore, the exploration has been made mainly by them; that a large portion of the information contained in all the maps of the United States west of the Mississippi is due to their labors."

Besides the work above specified, the Government actually loaned the graduates of the academy for many other classes of work. In the construction of the first railroad in America, the Baltimore & Ohio, eight graduates of the academy were employed. Graduates of the academy were the chief engineers of at least a dozen of the earlier railroads in the eastern United States. One of them planned the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal and was president of the company. Another graduate in 1842 became the consulting engineer of the Russian Government, planned and equipped the Moscow & St. Petersburg Railroad, and was consulting engineer of the Neva Bridge.

The first railroad in Cuba and also the first in Mexico were built by graduates; several graduates were employed in completing the Panama Railroad. In the planning and operation of nearly all the railroads east of the Mississippi the services of graduates were largely employed.

Similarly in municipal engineering, especially in providing cities with water, in constructing public buildings, parks, and docks the services of graduates have been widely made use of, to the benefit of the country and distinction of the officers.

As an illustration we might note their services in connection with the Croton water supply of New York, Philadelphia water department, the supply of Washington City, the hygienic works in Memphis, in Cuba, and many other places. Many public structures, such as the Washington Monument, the Dome of the Capitol, and a large number of famous lighthouses testify to the competency of the graduates. The vast extent and the almost inestimable value to the country of the river and harbor works of the graduates can be only barely alluded to.

In strictly civil pursuits 20 per cent of the graduates who left the Army for civil life have attained what might be called distinction. Among this number may be cited 2 Presidents, 3 presidential and 2 vice presidential candidates, 4 members of the Cabinet of the United States, 1 ambassador, 14 ministers plenipotentiary, 12 consuls general and consuls, 24 Members of Congress, 17 governors of States and Territories, 46 presidents of colleges and universities, 14 regents and chancellors, and 87 presidents of railroads and corporations.

Two graduates achieved great distinction as practical astronomers, each having charge of the largest telescope of his time; 2 others became noted geologists, 3 distinguished physicians, and 6 distinguished clergymen, 1 a bishop in the Episcopal Church.

The graduates of the academy have contributed a variety of textbooks to the colleges and schools of the country, many of which met with wide use. While the West Point curriculum was never intended to develop literary production it can be confidently claimed that the writings of graduates, from the autobiographies of Grant and Sherman to the reports of our graduates on the late war, all possess the characteristics of good English in their brevity, directness, and lucidity.

A great American bibliographer has said that though our graduates are not trained as writers, "yet in the latter capacities they have left a mark upon the nineteenth century highly honorable to their alma mater and themselves." As he states, during the first century of the academy's life 4,120 men had graduated, and an incomplete bibliography of their writings shows 16,000 titles. Three graduates between 1865 and 1870 in unoccupied moments have, with considerable success, entered the field of fiction. Some of these productions have reached the highest standard of good literature.

It is not inappropriate here to refer to an investigation of the subject of the value of college education as a factor of success in life by Dr. J. H. Finley, then president of the College of New York City. He prepared a table giving the percentage of success for the total number of graduates from several institutions through various periods. His list contained 18 of our leading universities and colleges as well as West Point and Annapolis. The estimate for West Point and Annapolis covered the last 50 years of the nineteenth century. His analysis gave West Point the highest percentage of success. While recognizing that this conclusion must of necessity involve some uncertain assumptions, yet as it is the conclusion of an able and unprejudiced investigator, based upon the best available means of comparison, it may well be claimed as an honorable distinction for West Point.

This mere skeleton outline, which suggests only in very small part the full results that have followed from the academy's teaching during the first century of its existence, is thought fully to justify the great reputation of the academy as well as strongly to support the theory of education here adopted and the methods pursued in accordance therewith.

We may add much to this convincing record to append here the conclusion of that alert, observing, able, widely experienced statesman, Theodore Roosevelt, with regard to the academy at the centennial celebration of the academy in 1902. He said: "This institution has completed its first 100 years of life. During that century no other educational institution in the land has contributed as many names as West Point has contributed to the honor roll of the Nation's greatest citizens. * * * I claim to be a historian, and I speak simply in the spirit of one, simply as a reciter of facts, when I say what I have said. And, more than that, not merely has West Point contributed a greater number of the men who stand highest on the Nation's honor roll, but I think beyond question that, taken as a whole, the average graduate of West Point during this 100 years has given a greater sum of service to the country through his life than has the average graduate of any other institution in this broad land."

Since this opinion was passed on West Point's work 17 years have elapsed; there have been slight military troubles in Cuba and in the Philippines, more serious ones in Mexico. These have all been met and disposed of by the Army, and the latter one with the assistance of the National Guard, in the most creditable manner, with barely one or two exceptional instances. During this interval, too, the work of Army officers other than strictly military has been continued as in the last century: indeed, the civil duties of Army officers have been more numerous and varied than ever before. They have served with great credit to themselves and honor to the country as governors of Provinces, mayors of cities, superintendents of education, collectors of revenues, civil engineers, and in many other capacities. The river and harbor works have been continued. The interval, too, includes one of the greatest and most successful pieces of engineering construction in the history of the world, which was almost from its beginning conducted and carried to completion by Army officers—the Panama Canal.

Finally, the World War came, and our country has had an experience the like of which has never before been known in its history. The Regular Army, and the academy graduates in particular, are said to have had their way to the fullest extent in this great crisis. This is not strictly true, but they were, in the main, the directing forces in the great undertaking and readjustment by which it was attempted to convert 4,000,000 of civilians into soldiers, and this without preliminary preparation for the great undertaking. For the lack of such preparation as could have been made before the war neither the graduates nor the Army are responsible. Neither are they responsible for the fact that the Regular officers were not numerous enough to do thoroughly what they often saw was desirable and necessary under conditions for which they were not responsible.

An attempt quickly to convert a one-room railway station into the New York Grand Central Terminal without preliminary preparation, without abundant material and a large personnel would certainly result in confusion, loss of luggage, and production of ill temper.

But notwithstanding all the defects of haste, lack of early preparation, lack of personnel, and, in some cases, lack of competency, the great undertaking—the greatest of its kind in the world's history—was accomplished with creditable success; this can not be denied, and was fully demonstrated by our part in bringing the great war to a victorious conclusion.

It is impossible to conceive what would have happened had there been no graduates of the academy, no Regular Army officers, in the spring of 1917. If these officers are to be blamed and criticized for the friction, the loose wheels and the broken cogs in the war machine, they should also have the credit for the marvels accomplished in spite of the defects, which accomplishments many think are equal to or greater than any in our previous history.

Viewing the great war in the light of all the conditions, we may justly claim that our graduates have been true to the spirit of West Point and its motto, "Duty, Honor, Country," and we may properly add thereto, sacrifice, for at present the indications are that a greater proportion of the graduates of the academy have made the supreme sacrifice than any other class of officers engaged in the Great War.

At the close of the nineteenth century Dr. E. S. Holden, one of the ablest graduates of the academy, and greatly distinguished in many directions, after editing and preparing for publication the records of all graduates up to that time, wrote as follows: "These records prove in a most convincing way the splendid efficiency of the United States Military Academy as a training school for the American Army and demonstrate that the principles upon which it has been conducted are sound and sufficient and that for a period of nearly 100 years they have been carried out by competent and faithful hands. The country at large may well be proud of the records here presented, and no graduate can fail to feel a new pride in and gratitude to his alma mater in perusing them."

With full and accurate knowledge of the academy's work and of the achievements of its graduates during the 20 years that have elapsed since the above was written, there is no shadow of doubt that the conclusions of Dr. Holden apply with equal fitness at the present time. West Point has proved itself of incalculable value to the country, and its alumni may well be proud of its glorious record.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, February 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Acting Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Braden River, Manatee County, Fla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Illinois River, Ill., from Ottawa to Utica; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Coquille River, Oreg., from Myrtle Point to Coquille; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

4. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of Boston Harbor, Mass., with a view to the construction of an entrance channel through Short Beach, between Winthrop and Revere, connecting Broad Sound with the Charleston Navy Yard by way of Chelsea River; also with a view to the construction of a connecting ship channel from the proposed new entrance at Short Beach to South Boston; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination and survey of Mamaroneck Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 651); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports descriptive of water terminals and transfer facilities in harbors and waterways under jurisdiction or being maintained by the United States, and explaining that a further report of investigations now in progress by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors (general subject of water terminals) will be transmitted at a later date (H. Doc. No. 652); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examinations and survey of New York and New Jersey channels, with a view to securing a ship channel of increased width and depth necessary for the purposes of commerce from lower New York Bay, through Raritan Bay, Arthur Kill, Staten Island Sound, channel north of Shooters Island, and Kill Van Kull, to upper New York Bay (H. Doc. No. 653); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examinations and survey of Pawtucket River, R. I., with a view to increasing the width of the channel through the ledge near Pawtucket (H. Doc. No. 654); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting summary of reports in respect to accidents sustained or caused by barges while in tow through the open sea during the fiscal year 1919; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHINDBLOM, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 3187) to dispose of a certain strip of public land in Waterville, Me., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 642), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DOUGHTON: A bill (H. R. 12578) making additional appropriations for the purpose of carrying out the Federal road-aid act approved July 11, 1916; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DOMINICK: A bill (H. R. 12579) to divide the eastern district of South Carolina into four divisions and the western district of South Carolina into four divisions; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 12580) to authorize the city of Walters, Okla., to dispose of certain lands reserved for public purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 12581) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Shelly, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Caledonia, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TILLMAN: A bill (H. R. 12582) granting additional compensation to all officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, including nurses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Resolution (H. Res. 465) directing the Secretary of the Interior to transmit to the House of Representatives certain information in connection with the proposed leasing of any of the lands of the Gila River Indian Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BAER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 296) authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the Provincial Government of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick, relative to the claims of the American interests now holding leases of Crown lands acquired prior to the passage of restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. ROGERS: Memorial of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, requesting the United States Shipping Board to cause the steamship George Washington to be repaired at the Charlestown Navy Yard; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Memorial of the Commonwealth of Massachusets, requesting the United States Shipping Board to cause the steamship George Washington to be repaired at the Charlestown Navy Yard; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, memorial of the Senate of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, urging the President of the United States to defer the proposed sale of the ships of the German merchant fleet, and to consider the expediency of operating them under Government auspices; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

Also, a bill (H. R. 12589) granting a pension to William G. Lail; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McARTHUR: A bill (H. R. 12590) granting a pension to Robert Sweeney; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 12591) granting an increase of pension to Michael Kilrow; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 12592) granting an increase of pension to Rufus R. K. Hill; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 12593) for the relief of Benjamin F. Green; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 12594) granting an increase of pension to Mary Jane Wilking; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OGDEN: A bill (H. R. 12595) granting a pension to Mary C. Hall; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12596) granting a pension to Mary McJenkins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 12597) granting an increase of pension to Joshua H. Ervin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROWAN: A bill (H. R. 12598) for the relief of the estate of Katherine O'Melia; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITHWICK: A bill (H. R. 12599) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Baird; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12600) granting an increase of pension to James L. Henderson; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12601) granting a pension to Thomas N. Collins; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 12602) granting an increase of pension to Sallie Lumpkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1605. By the SPEAKER: Petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Washington, and New York City, protesting against the sale of the former German ships, etc.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1606. By Mr. EMERSON: Petition of the Federal Employees' Union, in favor of increase in pay to steamboat inspectors, etc.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1607. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of citizens of Rockford, Streator, La Salle, and Peru, Ill., opposing the sale of the 30 former German ships; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1608. Also, petition of the National Association of Wholesale Druggists, relative to second-class postage rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1609. Also, petition of V. M. Johnson, general manager of the Free Sewing Machine Co., relative to pending railroad legislation, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1610. Also, petition of Duncan McDonald, president of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, opposing the Sterling-Graham sedition bills now pending; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1611. By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of various citizens, opposing the sale of the former German ships, etc.; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1612. By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of the Men's Club of the Summit Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Jersey City, N. J., relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1613. Also, petition of the National Council of New Jersey, representing the Lithuanian population, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1614. Also, petition of the Jersey City Chamber of Commerce, relative to certain provisions in the pending railroad legislation, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1616. Also, petition of the Wholesale Coal Trade Association, New York City, protesting against the permit system governing the shipment of bituminous coal to tidewater ports; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1617. By Mr. RAKER: Petition of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, opposing the Gronna bill, relative to the wheat guaranty, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1618. Also, petition of the Commonwealth Club, of San Francisco, Calif., urging support of the appropriation for the work of stream gauging by the United States Geological Survey in California; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1619. Also, petition of the Water Front Employees' Union, of San Francisco, Calif., urging the passage of House bill 6659, etc.; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1620. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of the One hundred and seventh Infantry Post, the American Legion, of New York City, urging universal military training, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1621. Also, petition of the American Protective Tariff League, relative to certain legislation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1622. Also, petition of Adolph Lewisohn, of New York City, relative to lower taxes on profit and income; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1623. Also, petition of the Three hundred and seventh Infantry Post of the American Legion, urging universal military training, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1624. Also, petition of National Wholesale Druggists' Association, urging retention of zone postal rates; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

1625. Also, petition of Twenty Year Club, Watervliet Arsenal, Watervliet, N. Y., favoring the Army and Navy pay bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1626. Also, petition of American Association of Engineers, New York Chapter, in support of the Keating Commission; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

1627. Also, petition of American Fruit and Vegetable Shippers' Association, relating to the shipment of fruits and vegetables; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1628. Also, petition of the American Civil Liberties Union, of New York City, relative to certain editorial of the New York World of February 8, 1920; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1629. Also, petition of the Michigan Manufacturers' Association, relative to more education and less radicalism, etc.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1630. Also, petition of the National Loyalty League of Springfield, Mo., relative to protection of life and property in case of riot, etc.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

1631. Also, petition of the National Association of Tuberculosis, of New York City, relative to increase in pay for the personnel of the United States Public Health Service, etc.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1632. Also, petition of T. C. Atkeson, representative of the National Grange, and others, relative to the views of farmers on national questions, etc.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

1633. By Mr. SINCLAIR: Petition of the Central Labor Union of Devils Lake, N. Dak., favoring Federal control of the railroads for a period of two years; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1634. Also, petition of the Central Labor Union of Devils Lake, N. Dak., opposing the passage of the Sterling-Graham peace-time sedition bills; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1635. By Mr. STINESS: Petition of employees of Providence office of the Steamboat-Inspection Service, Providence, R. I., requesting an increase of salaries for the United States Steamboat-Inspection Service employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, it is our privilege to call upon Thy name and to lift our hearts in reverence and in devotion to Thee. We thank Thee for the spiritual basis of life, for the great spiritual principles to which we may gather all our thought and all our plan of life, for the great spiritual forces that run through the current of human life and thought, making for the advancement of human civilization and the establishment of justice and peace among men. Grant us to-day those spiritual principles and forces that will keep us close to the thought of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

On request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Gay	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Hale	Moses	Spencer
Brandegee	Harris	Myers	Stanley
Calder	Harrison	Nelson	Sterling
Capper	Henderson	New	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Nugent	Thomas
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Townsend
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Phipps	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Kellogg	Poindexter	Warren
Dillingham	Kenyon	Pomerene	Watson
Elkins	King	Ransdell	Williams
Fernald	Kirby	Sheppard	Wolcott
Fletcher	Knox	Sherman
France	McKellar	Smith, Ga.

Mr. DIAL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] is detained by illness. I ask that this announcement may continue for the day.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent at a meeting of the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] on business of the Senate.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION (S. DOC. NO. 226).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting supplemental estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $10,000, required for a new ash tank and vacuum cleaner for boilers in the power plant of the old Land Office Building, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FLATHEAD NATION OF INDIANS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2454) for the relief of certain members of the Flathead Nation of Indians, and for other purposes, which was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "completed," to strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert:

Provided further, That not exceeding 40 acres of each allotment made under the provisions of this act shall be designated as a homestead which shall be inalienable and nontaxable during the minority of the allottee and thereafter until such restrictions may be removed either by Congress or the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 796) for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects, which were, on page 1, line 8, after the word "proper," to insert "Provided, That the approval of such contract by the water users' association or associations shall have first been obtained"; on page 1, line 12, to strike out "unless" and insert "if"; on page 1, line 12, to strike out "not"; and on page 2, line 2, after "appropriator," insert "Provided further, That the moneys derived from such contracts shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be placed to the credit of the project from which such water is supplied."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question first? I have not had a chance to examine the amendments made by the House. Will the Senator in a few words explain the amendments and their effect upon the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I shall be pleased to do so.

One amendment strikes out the word "not" and the word "unless" and inserts the word "if" in another place. It merely changes the wording and does not alter the meaning at all. It makes the meaning a little clearer.

Another amendment provides that any moneys derived from the disposition of water under the bill shall go to the benefit of the particular reclamation project to which the water belongs, which I think is proper.

Another amendment provides that no action shall be taken under this measure, that no water shall be contracted to be supplied, unless the Secretary of the Interior shall first consult any association of water users that there may be on the particular project and get their consent.

I am quite willing to accept the amendments. I think they are all right, and I move that they be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12467) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN. I present a resolution adopted at the fifty-fifth annual convention of the National Wool Growers' Association, an old and live association which has been in session at Salt Lake City, Utah. It is a matter of only 10 lines, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Resolution adopted by the fifty-fifth annual convention of the National Wool Growers' Association, held in Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 21, 1920.]

"Whereas the armistice has been signed for over a year, and the country is full of unrest, and there is an uncertainty in regard to the future that should be allayed as soon as possible: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the National Wool Growers' Association, That the Senate of the United States as soon as possible should enact into binding statute the League of Nations pact, safeguarding American interests to the fullest extent by all the reservations that they deem necessary to secure this result. Reservations must be so strong as to leave no doubt as to any constitutional limits. The American Constitution must be preserved in all its Americanism and for the perpetuity of the Nation. If the league can not be passed in this condition, then declare the war at an end so far as the United States is concerned."

Mr. RANSDELL. I present a petition signed by a large number of customs employees at the port of New Orleans, La., requesting to have sufficient increase made in the appropriation in order that salaries on a par with those in private employ may be paid to customs employees in particular and to all Federal employees in general. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Argonia and Elk City and of McPherson County, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a resolution adopted by Lodge No. 820, Brotherhood of Railway Clerks, of Stockton, Calif., favoring an increase in the salary of railroad clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

HAWAIIAN NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. POINDEXTER. From the Committee on Pacific Islands, Porto Rico, and the Virgin Islands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park, and I submit a report (No. 428) thereon.

I will state that in substance it is a bill which authorizes the Territory of Hawaii to acquire detached pieces of private property lying within the Hawaii National Park at the expense of the Territory of Hawaii and without expense to the United States. A favorable report from the Secretary of the Interior is attached to the report of the committee; and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the Territory of Hawaii is hereby authorized to acquire, at the expense of the Territory of Hawaii, by exchange or otherwise, all privately owned lands lying within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park as defined by "An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1916, and all necessary perpetual easements and rights of way, or roadways, in fee simple, over or to said land or any part thereof.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved May 27, 1910, relating to exchanges of public lands, shall not apply in the acquisition, by exchange, of the privately owned lands herein referred to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD LANDS FOR ROAD OR PARK PURPOSES.

Mr. PITTMAN. On behalf of the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3484) authorizing certain railroad companies or their successors in interest to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of their rights of way, and I submit a report (No. 427) thereon. As I intend to ask for the present consideration of the bill, I ask to have the report read. It is very brief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Reading Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3484) authorizing certain railroad companies or their successors in interest to convey for public-road or park purposes certain parts of their rights of way, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

The bill was referred to the Interior Department for consideration and recommendation. The department recommends that the bill be passed. The report of the department is hereto attached and made a part of this report.

This bill is practically identical with S. 2100, introduced by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, on the 18th day of June, 1919, and which became a law on October 10, 1919. The only material difference in the bill under consideration and Public No. 64, Sixty-sixth Congress, is that Public No. 64 extends only to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and its successors and assigns, whereas the bill under consideration, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, has been extended to all railroad companies who have obtained rights of way over the public domain and who are in a similar position with relation to the public as the Union Pacific Railroad.

The Secretary of the Interior approved the character of the legislation but deemed it wise to have one act passed rather than to have the time of Congress and the department taken up with the passage of several similar acts. Public No. 64, Sixty-sixth Congress, is as follows:

[Public No. 64, Sixty-sixth Congress. S. 2100.]

An act authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors, to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or any of its successors or assigns, is hereby authorized to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of its right of way, to be used as a public highway or street: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way of said railroad company to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

Received by the President, October 10, 1919.

[NOTE BY THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The foregoing act having been presented to the President of the United States for his approval and not having been returned by him to the House of Congress in which it originated within the time prescribed by the Constitution of the United States has become a law without his approval.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 15, 1920.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request therefor, report is made on Senate bill No. 3484 as follows:

Said bill, entitled "A bill authorizing certain railroad companies or their successors in interest to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of their rights of way," proposes to authorize all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress, or their successors in interest or assigns, to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of such right of way to be used as a public highway, street, or park, provided that no conveyance shall diminish the right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side thereof.

Bills authorizing conveyances by railroad companies for public-road purposes have been introduced into the present Congress as follows:

Senate bill No. 2100, entitled "A bill authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad Co. or its successors to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way," upon which a report was made by me July 11, 1919, recommending the enactment of a substitute bill submitted authorizing all railroad companies to make such conveyances for public-road purposes. Prior to the receipt of said report, however, said bill passed the Senate, on July 8, 1919, and subsequently passed the House of Representtives, and was submitted to the President for his signature on October 10, 1919. The bill became a law October 22, 1919, without the signature of the President, being Public Law No. 64.

Senate bill No. 3104, entitled "A bill authorizing the Central Pacific Railroad Co. of California, or its successors or assigns, to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of its right of way," upon which a report was made by me on October 24, 1919, renewing the recommendation made in said report of July 11, 1919, that a bill of a general character be enacted.

House bill 9825, entitled "A bill authorizing any land-grant railroad company or its successors to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way," upon which a report was made by me on November 8, 1919, recommending the enactment of the substitute bill proposed in connection with said report of July 11, 1919, in the place of said House bill No. 9825.

Senate bill No. 3272, entitled "A bill authorizing any land-grant railroad company or its successors to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way," which is identical in character and language with House bill No. 9825, and upon which a report was made by me on December 2, 1919, renewing the previous recommendations as to the enactment of general legislation.

Copies of these reports of July 11, 1919; October 24, 1919; November 8, 1919; and December 2, 1919, are attached hereto.

Except for the fact that the bill now under consideration is made applicable to conveyances for park purposes, it is identical in character and language with the substitute bill proposed by me in connection with said report of July 11, 1919. I would therefore recommend its enactment.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request therefor, report is made on Senate bill No. 3272, as follows:

Said bill, entitled "A bill authorizing any land-grant railroad company or its successors to convey for public-road purposes certain parts of its right of way," is identical in character and language with House bill No. 9825, upon which report was made by this department November 8, 1919, copy of which is inclosed.

The recommendation made in said report that the substitute bill referred to therein be enacted is hereby renewed.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, November 8, 1919.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: In response to your request therefor, report is made on H. R. 9825, as follows:

Said bill, entitled "A bill authorizing any land-grant railroad company or its successors to convey for public purposes certain parts of its right of way," proposes to authorize any land-grant railroad company or any of its successors or assigns to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of its right of way to be used as a public highway or street, provided that no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main tract of the railroad as now established and maintained.

These bills authorizing railroad companies to convey portions of their rights of way for road and highway purposes have been introduced in the present Congress. Senate bill No. 2100 authorized the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to make conveyances of portions of its right of way for the purposes mentioned. A report was made by me on this bill on July 11, 1919, in which I recommended the enactment of a substitute applicable to all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress. On July 8, 1919, prior to the receipt of said report of July 11, 1919, the bill as originally introduced was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands and passed the Senate on the same date. It was introduced in the House of Representatives on July 9, 1919, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, which also made a favorable report July 29, 1919, recommending the enactment of the bill as originally introduced. The bill passed the House October 6, 1919, and on October 10, 1919, the enrolled bill was submitted to me for a report as to objections to the approval thereof.

Senate bill No. 3104 authorized the Central Pacific Railroad Co. to make conveyances of portions of its right of way for use as a public highway, street, or park. A report was made on this bill on October 24, 1919, in which I again renewed my recommendation that the substitute bill proposed in connection with my report of July 11, 1919, be enacted in place of this bill. Copies of said reports of October 24, 1919, and July 11, 1919, and of the proposed substitute bill are hereto attached.

The term "land grant railroad" has acquired a special meaning in the administration of the public land laws being applied to such railroads for which grants of public land to aid in the construction thereof were made similar to the grant made by the acts of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), and July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), for the benefit of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad companies referred to in said report dated July 11, 1919. These acts contain grants for right of way purposes similar in character to that in section 2 of said act of July 1, 1862.

By the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 482), a grant of the right of way through the public lands of the United States was made to railroad companies organized as therein set forth to the extent of 100 feet on each side of the line of the road and also adjacent grounds for station buildings, depots, machine shops, sidetracks, turnouts, and water stations, not to exceed in amount 20 acres for each station to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of such road. Other acts, both general and specific in character, have made grants of rights of way through the public lands, some of them not exceeding in width 50 feet on each side of the line of road.

The use of the term "land grant railroad" is therefore confusing and might cause the bill here under consideration, if enacted, to be construed as applying to rights of way only granted by such acts of Congress by which grants of public lands were also made to aid in the construction of railroads. It is therefore recommended that the substitute bill proposed in connection with said report of July 11, 1919, on Senate bill No. 2100, be enacted in place of the bill now under consideration.

Cordially, yours,

F. K. LANE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 24, 1919.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request therefor, dated October 8, 1919, report is made on Senate bill No. 3104, as follows:

Said bill, entitled "A bill authorizing the Central Pacific Railroad Co. of California, or its successors or assigns, to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of its right of way," proposes to authorize said railroad company, or any of its successors or assigns, to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of its right of way to be used as a public highway, street, or park, provided that no conveyance shall diminish the right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the main tract of the railroad as now established and maintained.

Except for the addition of the words "or park," on line 6 of said bill, it is identical in character and language with Senate bill No. 2100, on which a report was made by me on July 11, 1919, in which I recommended the enactment in the place thereof of a substitute bill applicable to all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress. A copy of said report is inclosed herewith.

It appears that said Senate bill No. 2100 was favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands on July 8, 1919, prior to the receipt of said report of July 11, 1919, and passed the Senate on the same date. It was introduced in the House of Representatives on July 9, 1919, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, which also made a favorable report July 29, 1919, recommending the enactment of the bill as originally introduced. It was subsequently passed by the House of Representatives, and on October 10, 1919, the enrolled bill was submitted to me for a report as to the objections to the approval thereof, and appears to be now before the President awaiting his signature.

The introduction of this bill applicable to the right of way of the Central Pacific Railroad Co. indicates the necessity of legislation applicable to all railroad companies, such as that proposed in my report of July 11, 1919, and I so recommend.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 11, 1919.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request therefor report is made on Senate bill 2100, as follows:

Said bill, entitled "A bill authorizing the Union Pacific Railroad Co. or its successors to convey for public road purposes certain parts of its right of way," proposes to authorize said Union Pacific Railroad Co., or any of its successors or assigns, to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of its right of way, to be used as a public highway or street, provided that no conveyance shall diminish the right of way to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of said railroad as now established and maintained.

By the acts of Congress approved July 1, 1862 (12 Stat., 489), and July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 356), a grant of lands was made to aid in the construction of said Union Pacific Railroad, among others, and by section 2 of the said act of July 1, 1862, a right of way through the public lands was granted to said company to the extent of 200 feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass over the public lands, including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine shops, switches, sidetracks, turntables, and water stations.

In the case of Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. Townsend (190 U. S., 267), the grant for said right of way was construed as follows:

"In effect the grant was of a limited fee, made on an implied condition of reverter in the event that the company ceased to use or retain the land for the purpose for which it was granted."

In the case of Rio Grande Western Railway Co. v. Stringham (239 U. S., 44), which was a suit to quiet title to a strip of land claimed and used by the railway company as a railroad right of way under the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 482), and to which the defendant asserted title to a patent for a placer mining claim, the court held:

"the right of way granted by this and similar acts is neither a mere easement nor a fee simple absolute, but a limited fee made upon an implied condition of reverter in the event that the company ceases to use or retain the land for the purposes for which it is granted and carries with it the incidents and limitations usually attending the fee," citing New Mexico v. United States Trust Co., 172 U. S., 171, 183; Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. Townsend, 190 U. S., 267, 271; United States v. Michigan, 190 U. S., 379, 392; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co., 195 U. S., 540, 570.

The effect of the abandonment of a right of way, the grant for which was made to the Northern Pacific Railroad Co. by the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 365), was considered by the department in the case of E. A. Crandall (43 L. D., 556), in which it was held that upon the abandonment by the railway company of the right of way granted to it across the lands included in a homestead patent there under consideration the legal title to the lands of such right of way reverted to and became the property of the United States, and must so remain until some provision of statute has been made by Congress for its disposition.

Acts confirming the validity of conveyances made by certain railway companies for portions of their rights of way have heretofore been passed by Congress among which may be mentioned the acts of April 28, 1904 (38 Stat., 538); March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1014), and June 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 138).

A draft of a bill which is proposed as a substitute for the bill under consideration is herewith attached and it is recommended that it be enacted in the place of said bill which limits its object to conveyances made by the Union Pacific Railroad Co., or its successors or assigns.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to object to the consideration of the bill if there is no debate to follow, but if it is to take any time I shall have to object, as I have given notice that I shall call up the deficiency appropriation bill this morning.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sure there will be no debate. It is simply a repetition of an act that has become a law extended to another railroad.

Mr. WARREN. If it leads to no debate, I shall not object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all railroad companies to which grants for rights of way through the public lands have been made by Congress, or their successors in interest or assigns, are hereby authorized to convey to any State, county, or municipality any portion of such right of way to be used as a public highway, street, or park: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have the effect to diminish the right of way of such railroad company to a less width than 50 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3931) granting an increase of pension to Frank G. Vallereux (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 3932) granting a pension to Rose Mercer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GAY (by request):

A bill (S. 3935) for the relief of certain estates; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 3936) granting an increase of pension to James A. Keefer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I introduce two bills to amend the Federal reserve act, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Both bills propose to amend the same subject matter and purport to extend to State banks, which are members of the Federal Reserve System, in their transactions with Federal reserve banks all the rediscounting privileges now possessed by national banking associations. One incorporates in the original law the full text of the law as amended and the other merely amends the Federal reserve act by extending the above privileges to the member State banks without writing into the Federal reserve act the provisions of law relative to national banks.

Under existing law State banks are at a disadvantage with national banks, and the purpose of the amendment is to place them on a parity. The principle of the amendment of the act has the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

The bill (S. 3933) to amend paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and

The bill (S. 3934) to amend paragraph 10 of section 9 of the Federal reserve act approved December 23, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ADDRESS BY ROME G. BROWN.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an address made by Rome G. Brown, of the Minneapolis Tribune, before the Middlesex County Bar Association, at Boston, Mass., which I should like to have referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document. I do not ask to have it printed in the RECORD at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the Committee on Printing.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 154) authorizing the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to turn over to the State of Kansas emergency hospital equipment to be used temporarily in emergency hospitals to be established in that State, and for other purposes.

RAILROAD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I present the report of the committee of conference upon House bill 10453, commonly known as the railroad bill. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD, and I give notice that immediately after the House acts upon the report, if the report is adopted by the House, I shall ask consideration on the part of the Senate. It is probable that the House will dispose of the report on Saturday.

The report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"TITLE I.—DEFINITIONS.

"SECTION 1. This act may be cited as the 'Transportation act, 1920.'

"SEC. 2. When used in this act—

"The term 'Interstate commerce act' means the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended;

"The term 'commerce court act' means the act entitled 'An act to create a commerce court, and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes,' approved June 18, 1910;

"The term 'Federal control act' means the act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918, as amended;

"The term 'Federal control' means the possession, use, control, and operation of railroads and systems of transportation, taken over or assumed by the President under section 1 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916, or under the Federal control act; and

"The term 'commission' means the Interstate Commerce Commission.

"TITLE II.—TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 200. (a) Federal control shall terminate at 12.01 a. m., March 1, 1920; and the President shall then relinquish possession and control of all railroad and systems of transportation then under Federal control and cease the use and operation thereof.

"(b) Thereafter the President shall not have or exercise any of the powers conferred upon him by the Federal control act relating—

"(1) To the use or operation of railroads or systems of transportation;

"(2) To the control or supervision of the carriers owning or operating them, or of the business or affairs of such carriers;

"(3) To their rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices;

"(4) To the purchase, construction, or other acquisition of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, or coastwise waterways; or (except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control) of terminals, motive power, cars, or equipment, on or in connection with any railroad or system of transportation;

"(5) To the utilization or operation of canals;

"(6) To the purchase of securities of carriers, except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control, or as a necessary or proper incident to the adjustment, settlement, liquidation and winding up of matters arising out of Federal control; or

"(7) To the use for any of the purposes above stated (except in pursuance of contracts or agreements entered into before the termination of Federal control, and except as a necessary or proper incident to the winding up or settling of matters arising out of Federal control, and except as provided in section 202) of the revolving fund created by such act, or of any of the additions thereto made under such act, or by the act entitled 'An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918,' approved June 30, 1919.

"(c) Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or limiting the power of the President in time of war (under section 1 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes,' approved August 29, 1916) to take possession and assume control of any system of transportation and utilize the same.

"GOVERNMENT-OWNED BOATS ON INLAND WATERWAYS.

"SEC. 201. (a) On the termination of Federal control, as provided in section 200, all boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities, on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways (hereinafter in this section called 'transportation facilities') acquired by the United States in pursuance of the fourth paragraph of section 6 of the Federal control act (except the transportation facilities constituting parts of railroads or transportation systems over which Federal control was assumed) are transferred to the Secretary of War, who shall operate or cause to be operated such transportation facilities so that the lines of inland water transportation established by or through the President during Federal control shall be continued, and assume and carry out all contracts and agreements in relation thereto entered into by or through the President in pursuance of such paragraph prior to the time above fixed for such transfer. All payments under the terms of such contracts, and for claims arising out of the operation of such transportation facilities by or through the President prior to the termination of Federal control, shall be made out of moneys available under the provisions of this act for adjusting, settling, liquidating, and winding up matters arising out of or incident to Federal control. Moneys required for such payments shall, from time to time, be transferred to the Secretary of War as required for payment under the terms of such contracts.

"(b) All other payments after such transfer in connection with the construction, utilization, and operation of any such transportation facilities, whether completed or under construction, shall be made by the Secretary of War out of funds now or hereafter made available for that purpose.

"(c) The Secretary of War is hereby authorized, out of any moneys hereafter made available therefor, to construct or contract for the construction of terminal facilities for the interchange of traffic between the transportation facilities operated by him under this section and other carriers whether by rail or water, and to make loans for such purposes under such terms and conditions as he may determine to any State whose constitution prohibits the ownership of such terminal facilities by other than the State or a political subdivision thereof.

"(d) Any transportation facilities owned by the United States and included within any contract made by the United States for operation on the Mississippi River above St. Louis, the possession of which reverts to the United States at or before the expiration of such contract, shall be operated by the Secretary of War, so as to provide facilities for water carriage on the Mississippi River above St. Louis.

"(e) The operation of the transportation facilities referred to in this section shall be subject to the provisions of the interstate-commerce act as amended by this act or by subsequent legislation, and to the provisions of the 'shipping act, 1916,' as now or hereafter amended, in the same manner and to the same extent as if such transportation facilities were privately owned and operated; and all such vessels while operated and employed solely as merchant vessels shall be subject to all other laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels, whether the United States is interested therein as owner, in whole or in part, or holds any mortgage, lien, or interest therein. For the performance of the duties imposed by this section the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint or employ such number of experts, clerks, and other employees as may be necessary for service in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, and as may be provided for by Congress.

"SETTLEMENT OF MATTERS ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 202. The President shall, as soon as practicable after the termination of Federal control, adjust, settle, liquidate, and wind up all matters, including compensation, and all questions and disputes of whatsoever nature, arising out of or incident to Federal control. For these purposes and for the purpose of making the payments specified in subdivision (a) of section 201, all unexpended balances in the revolving fund created by the Federal control act or of the moneys appropriated by the act entitled 'An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for carrying out the act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918,' approved June 30, 1919, are hereby reappropriated and made available until expended; and all moneys derived from the operation of the carriers or otherwise arising out of Federal control, and all moneys that have been or may be received in payment of the indebtedness of any carrier to the United States arising out of Federal control, shall be and remain available until expended for the aforesaid purposes; and there is hereby appropriated for the aforesaid purposes, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $200,000,000 in addition to the above, to be available until expended.

"COMPENSATION OF CARRIERS WITH WHICH NO CONTRACT MADE.

"SEC. 203. (a) Upon the request of any carrier entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, but with which no contract fixing or waiving compensation has been made and which has made no waiver of compensation, the President: (1) shall pay to it so much of the amount he may determine to be just compensation as may be necessary to enable such carrier to have the sums required for interest, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses referred to in paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers, accruing during the period for which such carrier is entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, and also the sums required for dividends declared and paid during the same period, including, also, in addition, a sum equal to that proportion of such last dividend which the period between its payment and the termination of the period for which the carrier is entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act bears to the last dividend period; and (2) may, in his discretion, pay to such carrier the whole or any part of the remainder of such estimated amount of just compensation.

"(b) The acceptance of any benefits by a carrier under this section—

"(1) Shall not deprive it of the right to claim additional compensation, which, unless agreed upon, shall be ascertained in the manner provided in section 3 of the Federal control act; but

"(2) Shall constitute an acceptance by the carrier of all the provisions of the Federal control act as modified by this act, and obligate the carrier to pay to the United States, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from a date or dates fixed in proceedings under section 3 of the Federal control act, the amount by which the sums received on account of such compensation, under this section or otherwise, exceed the sum found due in such proceedings.

"REIMBURSEMENT OF DEFICITS DURING FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 204. (a) When used in this section—

"The term 'carrier' means a carrier by railroad which, during any part of the period of Federal control, engaged as a common carrier in general transportation, and competed for traffic, or connected, with a railroad under Federal control, and which sustained a deficit in its railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad or system of transportation; but does not include any street or interurban electric railway which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic or sale of power, heat, and light, or both; and

"The term 'test period' means the three years ending June 30, 1917.

"(b) For the purposes of this section—

"Railway operating income or any deficit therein for the period of Federal control shall be computed in a manner similar to that provided in section 209 with respect to such income or deficit for the guaranty period; and

"Railway operating income or any deficit therein for the test period shall be computed in the manner provided in section 1 of the Federal control act.

"(c) As soon as practicable after March 1, 1920, the commission shall ascertain for every carrier, for every month of the period of Federal control during which its railroad or system of transportation was not under Federal operation, its deficit in railway operating income, if any, and its railway operating income, if any, (hereinafter called 'Federal control return'), and the average of its deficit in railway operating income, if any, and of its railway operating income, if any, for the three corresponding months of the test period taken together, (hereinafter called 'test period return'): Provided, That 'test period return,' in the case of a carrier which operated its railroad or system of transportation for at least one year during, but not for the whole of, the test period, means its railway operating income, or the deficit therein, for the corresponding month during the test period, or the average thereof for the corresponding months during the test period taken together, during which the carrier operated its railroad or system of transportation.

"(d) For every month of the period of Federal control during which the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier was not under Federal operation, the commission shall then ascertain (1) the difference between its Federal control return, if a deficit, and its test period return, if a smaller deficit, or (2) the difference between its test period return, if an income, and its Federal control return, if a smaller income, or (3) the sum of its Federal control return, if a deficit, plus its test period return, if an income. The sum of such amounts shall be credited to the carrier.

"(e) For every such month the commission shall then ascertain (1) the difference between the carrier's Federal control return, if an income, and its test period return, if a smaller income, or (2) the difference between its test period return, if a deficit, and its Federal control return, if a smaller deficit, or (3) the sum of its Federal control return, if an income, plus its test period return, if a deficit. The sum of such amounts shall be credited to the United States.

"(f) If the sum of the amounts so credited to the carrier under subdivision (d) exceeds the sum of the amounts so credited to the United States under subdivision (e), the difference shall be payable to the carrier. In the case of a carrier which operated its railroad or system of transportation for less than a year during, or for none of, the test period, the foregoing computations shall not be used, but there shall be payable to such carrier its deficit in railway operating income for that portion (as a whole) of the period of Federal control during which it operated its own railroad or system of transportation.

"(g) The commission shall promptly certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the several amounts payable to carriers under paragraph (f). The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of each such carrier upon the Treasury of the United States for the amount shown in such certificate as payable thereto. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"INSPECTION OF CARRIERS' RECORDS.

"SEC. 205. The President shall have the right, at all reasonable times until the affairs of Federal control are concluded, to inspect the property and records of all carriers whose railroads or systems of transportation were at any time under Federal control, whenever such inspection is necessary or appropriate (1) to protect the interests of the United States, or (2) to supervise matters being handled for the United States by agents of the carriers, or (3) to secure information concerning matters arising during Federal control, and such carriers shall provide all reasonable facilities therefor, including the issuance of free transportation to all agents of the President while traveling on official business for these purposes.

"Such carriers shall, at their expense, upon the request of the President, or those duly authorized by him, furnish all necessary and proper information and reports compiled from the records made or kept during the period of Federal control affecting their respective lines, and shall keep and continue such records and furnish like information and reports compiled therefrom.

"Any carrier which refuses or obstructs such inspection, or which willfully fails to provide reasonable facilities therefor, or to furnish such information or reports shall be liable to a penalty of $500 for each day of the continuance of such offense, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action to be brought by the United States.

"CAUSES OF ACTION ARISING OUT OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 206. (a) Actions at law, suits in equity, and proceedings in admiralty, based on causes of action arising out of the possession, use, or operation by the President of the railroad or system of transportation of any carrier (under the provisions of the Federal control act, or of the act of August 29, 1916) of such character as prior to Federal control could have been brought against such carrier, may, after the termination of Federal control, be brought against an agent designated by the President for such purpose, which agent shall be designated by the President within 30 days after the passage of this act. Such actions, suits, or proceedings may, within the periods of limitation now prescribed by State or Federal statutes, but not later than two years from the date of the passage of this act, be brought in any court which but for Federal control would have had jurisdiction of the cause of action had it arisen against such carrier.

"(b) Process may be served upon any agent or officer of the carrier operating such railroad or system of transportation, if such agent or officer is authorized by law to be served with process in proceedings brought against such carrier and if a contract has been made with such carrier by or through the President for the conduct of litigation arising out of operation during Federal control. If no such contract has been made process may be served upon such agents or officers as may be designated by or through the President. The agent designated by the President under subdivision (a) shall cause to be filed, upon the termination of Federal control, in the office of the clerk of each district court of the United States, a statement naming all carriers with whom he has contracted for the conduct of litigation arising out of operation during Federal control, and a like statement designating the agents or officers upon whom process may be served in actions, suits, and proceedings arising in respect to railroads or systems of transportation with the owner of which no such contract has been made; and such statements shall be supplemented from time to time, if additional contracts are made or other agents or officers appointed.

"(c) Complaints praying for reparation on account of damage claimed to have been caused by reason of the collection or enforcement by or through the President during the period of Federal control of rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices (including those applicable to interstate, foreign, or intrastate traffic) which were unjust, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or unduly or unreasonably prejudical, or otherwise in violation of the interstate commerce act, may be filed with the commission, within one year after the termination of Federal control, against the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a), naming in the petition the railroad or system of transportation against which such complaint would have been brought if such railroad or system had not been under Federal control at the time the matter complained of took place. The commission is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and decide such complaints in the manner provided in the interstate commerce act, and all notices and orders in such proceedings shall be served upon the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a).

"(d) Actions, suits, proceedings, and reparation claims, of the character above described pending at the termination of Federal control shall not abate by reason of such termination, but may be prosecuted to final judgment, substituting the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a).

"(e) Final judgments, decrees, and awards in actions, suits, proceedings, or reparation claims, of the character above described, rendered against the agent designated by the President under subdivision (a), shall be promptly paid out of the revolving fund created by section 210.

"(f) The period of Federal control shall not be computed as a part of the periods of limitation in actions against carriers or in claims for reparation to the commission for causes of action arising prior to Federal control.

"(g) No execution or process, other than on a judgment recovered by the United States against a carrier, shall be levied upon the property of any carrier where the cause of action on account of which the judgment was obtained grew out of the possession, use, control, or operation of any railroad or system of transportation by the President under Federal control.

"REFUNDING OF CARRIERS' INDEBTEDNESS TO UNITED STATES.

"SEC. 207. (a) As soon as practicable after the termination of Federal control the President shall ascertain (1) the amount of the indebtedness of each carrier to the United States, which may exist at the termination of Federal control, incurred for additions and betterments made during Federal control and properly chargeable to capital account; (2) the amount of indebtedness of such carrier to the United States otherwise incurred; and (3) the amount of the indebtedness of the United States to such carrier arising out of Federal control. The amount under clause (3) may be set off against either or both of the amounts under clauses (1) and (2), so far as deemed wise by the President, but only to the extent permitted under any contract now or hereafter made between such carrier and the United States in respect to the matters of Federal control, or, where no such contract exists, to the extent permitted under paragraph (b) of section 7 of the standard contract between the United States and the carriers relative to deductions from compensation: Provided, That such right of set-off shall not be so exercised as to prevent such carrier from having the sums required for interest, taxes, and other corporate charges and expenses referred to in paragraph (b) of section 7 of such standard contract, accruing during Federal control, and also the sums required for dividends declared and paid during Federal control, including, also in addition, a sum equal to that proportion of such last dividend which the period between its payment and the termination of Federal control bears to the last regular dividend period: And provided further, That such right of set-off shall not be exercised unless there shall have first been paid such sums in addition as may be necessary to provide the carrier with working capital in amount not less than one twenty-fourth of its operating expenses for the calendar year 1919.

"(b) Any remaining indebtedness of the carrier to the United States in respect to such additions and betterments shall, at the request of the carrier, be funded for a period of 10 years from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period at the option of the carrier, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, subject to the right of such carrier to pay on any interest-payment day the whole or any part of such indebtedness. Any carrier obtaining the funding of such indebtedness as aforesaid shall give, in the discretion of the President, such security, in such form and upon such terms, as he may prescribe.

"(c) If the President and the various carriers, or any of them, shall enter into an agreement for funding, through the medium of car trust certificates, or otherwise, the indebtedness of any such carrier to the United States incurred for equipment ordered for the benefit of such carrier, such indebtedness so funded shall not be refundable under the foregoing provisions.

"(d) Any other indebtedness of any such carrier to the United States which may exist after the settlement of accounts between the United States and the carrier and is then due shall be evidenced by notes payable in one year from the termination of Federal control, or a shorter period at the option of the carrier, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and secured by such collateral security as the President may deem it advisable to require.

"(e) With respect to any bonds, notes, or other securities, acquired under the provisions of this section or of the Federal control act or of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes,' approved November 19, 1919, the President shall have the right to make such arrangements for extension of the time of payment or for the exchange of any of them for other securities, or partly for cash and partly for securities, as may be provided for in any agreement entered into by him or as may in his judgment seem desirable.

"(f) Carriers may, by agreement with the President, issue notes or other evidences of indebtedness, secured by equipment trust agreements, for equipment purchased during Federal control by or through the President under section 6 of the Federal control act, and allocated to such carriers respectively; and the filing of such equipment trust agreements with the commission shall constitute notice thereof to all the world.

"(g) A carrier may issue evidences of indebtedness pursuant to this section without the authorization or approval of any authority, State or Federal, and without compliance with any requirement, State or Federal, as to notification.

"EXISTING RATES TO CONTINUE IN EFFECT.

"SEC. 208. (a) All rates, fares, and charges, and all classifications, regulations, and practices, in any wise changing, affecting, or determining, any part or the aggregate of rates, fares, or charges, or the value of the service rendered, which on February 29, 1920, are in effect on the lines of carriers subject to the interstate-commerce act, shall continue in force and effect until thereafter changed by State or Federal authority, respectively, or pursuant to authority of law; but prior to September 1, 1920, no such rate, fare, or charge shall be reduced, and no such classification, regulation, or practice shall be changed in such manner as to reduce any such rate, fare, or charge, unless such reduction or change is approved by the commission.

"(b) All divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, which on February 29, 1920, are in effect between the lines of carriers subject to the interstate-commerce act, shall continue in force and effect until thereafter changed by mutual agreement between the interested carriers or by State or Federal authorities, respectively.

"(c) Any land-grant railroad organized under the act of July 28, 1866 (chapter 300), shall receive the same compensation for transportation of property and troops of the United States as is paid to land-grant railroads organized under the land-grant act of March 3, 1863, and the act of July 27, 1866 (chapter 278).

"GUARANTY TO CARRIERS AFTER TERMINATION OF FEDERAL CONTROL.

"SEC. 209. (a) When used in this section—

"The term 'carrier' means (1) a carrier by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, whose railroad or system of transportation is under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates, or which has heretofore engaged as a common carrier in general transportation and competed for traffic, or connected, with a railroad at any time under Federal control; and (2) a sleeping car company whose system of transportation is under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates; but does not include a street or interurban electric railway not under Federal control at the time Federal control terminates, which has as its principal source of operating revenue urban, suburban, or interurban passenger traffic or sale of power, heat, and light, or both;

"The term 'guaranty period' means the six months beginning March 1, 1920;

"The term 'test period' means the three years ending June 30, 1917; and

"The term 'railway operating income' and other references to accounts of carriers by railroad shall, in the case of a sleeping car company, be construed as indicating the appropriate corresponding accounts in the accounting system prescribed by the commission.

"(b) This section shall not be applicable to any carrier which does not on or before March 15, 1920, file with the commission a written statement that it accepts all the provisions of this section.

"(c) The United States hereby guarantees—

"(1) With respect to any carrier with which a contract (exclusive of so-called cooperative contracts or waivers) has been made fixing the amount of just compensation under the Federal control act, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half the amount named in such contract as annual compensation, or, where the contract fixed a lump sum as compensation for the whole period of Federal operation, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than an amount which shall bear the same proportion to the lump sum so fixed as six months bears to the number of months during which such carrier was under Federal operation, including in both cases the increases in such compensation provided for in section 4 of the Federal control act;

"(2) With respect to any carrier entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, with which such a contract has not been made, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half of the annual amount estimated by the President as just compensation for such carrier under the Federal control act, including the increases in such compensation provided for in section 4 of the Federal control act. If any such carrier does not accept the President's estimate respecting its just compensation, and if in proceedings under section 3 of the Federal control act it is determined that a larger or smaller annual amount is due as just compensation, the guaranty under this paragraph shall be increased or decreased accordingly;

"(3) With respect to any carrier, whether or not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, with which such a contract has not been made, and for which no estimate of just compensation is made by the President, and which for the test period as a whole sustained a deficit in railway operating income, the guaranty shall be a sum equal to (a) the amount by which any deficit in its railway operating income for the guaranty period as a whole exceeds one-half of its average annual deficit in railway operating income for the test period, plus (b) an amount equal to one-half the annual sum fixed by the President under section 4 of the Federal control act;

"(4) With respect to any carrier not entitled to just compensation under the Federal control act, which for the test period as a whole had an average annual railway operating income, that the railway operating income of such carrier for the guaranty period as a whole shall not be less than one-half the average annual railway operating income of such carrier during the test period.

"(d) If for the guaranty period as a whole the railway operating income of any carrier entitled to a guaranty under paragraph (1), (2), or (4) of subdivision (c) is in excess of the minimum railway operating income guaranteed in such paragraph, such carrier shall forthwith pay the amount of such excess into the Treasury of the United States. If for the guaranty period as a whole the railway operating income of any carrier entitled to a guaranty under paragraph (3) of subdivision (c) is in excess of one-half of the annual sum fixed by the President with respect to such carrier under section 4 of the Federal control act, such carrier shall forthwith pay the amount of such excess into the Treasury of the United States. The amounts so paid into the Treasury of the United States shall be added to the funds made available under section 202 for the purposes indicated in such section. Notwithstanding the provisions of this subdivision, any carrier may retain out of any such excess any amount necessary to enable it to pay its fixed charges accruing during the guaranty period.

"(e) For the purposes of this section railway operating income, or any deficit therein, for the test period shall be computed in the manner provided for in section 1 of the Federal control act.

"(f) In computing railway operating income, or any deficit therein, for the guaranty period for the purposes of this section—

"(1) Debits and credits arising from the accounts, called in the monthly reports to the commission equipment rents and joint facility rents, shall be included, but debits and credits arising from the operation of such street electric passenger railways, including railways commonly called interurbans, as are not under Federal control at the time of termination thereof, shall be excluded;

"(2) Proper adjustments shall be made (a) in case any lines which were, during any portion of the period of Federal control, a part of the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier, and whose railway operating income was included in such income of the carrier for the test period, do not continue to be a part of such railroad or system of transportation during the entire guaranty period, and (b) in case of any lines acquired by, leased to, or consolidated with, the railroad or system of transportation of the carrier at any time since the end of the test period and prior to the expiration of the guaranty period, for which separate operating returns to the commission are not made in respect to the entire portion of the guaranty period;

"(3) There shall not be included in operating expenses, for maintenance of way and structures, or for maintenance of equipment, more than an amount fixed by the commission. In fixing such amount the commission shall so far as practicable apply the rule set forth in the proviso in paragraph (a) of section 5 of the 'standard contract' between the United States and the carriers (whether or not such contract has been entered into with the carrier whose railway operating income is being computed);

"(4) There shall not be included any taxes paid under Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917, or such portion of the taxes paid under Title II or III of the revenue act of 1918 as by the terms of such act are to be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I or II of the revenue act of 1917; and

"(5) The commission shall require the elimination and restatement of the operating expenses and revenues (other than for maintenance of way and structures, or maintenance of equipment) for the guaranty period, to the extent necessary to correct and exclude any disproportionate or unreasonable charge to such expenses or revenues for such period, or any charge to such expenses or revenues for such period which under a proper system of accounting is attributable to another period.

"(g) The commission shall, as soon as practicable after the expiration of the guaranty period, ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the several amounts necessary to make good the foregoing guaranty to each carrier. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of each such carrier upon the Treasury of the United States, for the amount shown in such certificate as necessary to make good such guaranty. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"(h) Upon application of any carrier to the commission, asking that during the guaranty period there may be advanced to it from time to time such sums, not in excess of the estimated amount necessary to make good the guaranty, as are necessary to enable it to meet its fixed charges and operating expenses, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of, and times at which, such advances, if any, shall be made. The Secretary of the Treasury, on receipt of such certificate, is authorized and directed to make the advances in the amounts and at the times specified in the certificate, upon the execution by the carrier of a contract, secured in such manner as the Secretary may determine, that upon final determination of the amount of the guaranty provided for by this section such carrier will repay to the United States any amounts which it has received from such advances in excess of the guaranty, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the time such excess was paid. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make the advances referred to in this subdivision.

"(i) If the American Railway Express Co. shall, on or before March 15, 1920, file with the commission a written statement that it accepts all the provisions of this subdivision, the contract of June 26, 1918, between such company and the Director General of Railroads, as amended and continued by agreement dated November 21, 1918, shall remain in full force and effect during the guaranty period in so far as the same constitutes a guaranty on the part of the United States to such company against a deficit in operating income.

"In computing operating income, and any deficit therein, for the guaranty period for the purposes of this subdivision, the commission shall require the elimination and restatement of the operating expenses and revenues for the guaranty period, to the extent necessary to correct and exclude any disproportionate or unreasonable charge to such expenses or revenues for such period, or any charge to such expenses or revenues for such period which under a proper system of accounting is attributable to another period, and to exclude from operating expenses so much of the charge for payment for express privileges to carriers on whose lines the express traffic is carried as is in excess of 50.25 per cent of gross express revenue.

"For the guaranty period the American Railway Express Co. shall pay to every carrier which accepts the provisions of this section, as provided in subdivision (b) hereof, 50.25 per cent of the gross revenue earned on the transportation of all its express traffic on the carrier's lines, and every such carrier shall accept from the American Railway Express Co. such percentage of the gross revenue as its compensation. In arriving at the gross revenue on through or joint express traffic, the method of dividing the revenue between the carriers shall be that agreed upon between the carriers and such express company and approved by the commission.

"If for the guaranty period as a whole the American Railway Express Co. does not have a deficit in operating income, it shall forthwith pay the amount of its operating income for such period into the Treasury of the United States. The amount so paid shall be added to the funds made available under section 202 for the purposes indicated in such section.

"The commission shall, as soon as practicable after the expiration of the guaranty period, certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount necessary to make good the foregoing guaranty to the American Railway Express Co. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed thereupon to draw warrants in favor of such company upon the Treasury of the United States for the amount shown in such certificate as necessary to make good such guaranty. An amount sufficient to pay such warrants is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"Upon application of the American Railway Express Co. to the commission, asking that during the guaranty period there may be advanced to it from time to time such sums, not in excess of the estimated amount necessary to make good the guaranty, as are necessary to enable it to meet its operating expenses, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of, and times at which, such advances, if any, shall be made. The Secretary of the Treasury, on receipt of such certificate, is authorized and directed to make the advances in the amounts and at the times specified in the certificate, upon the execution by such company of a contract, secured in such manner as the Secretary may determine, that upon final determination of the amount of the guaranty provided for by this subdivision such company will repay to the United States any amounts which it has received from such advances in excess of the guaranty, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the time such excess was paid. There is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make the advances referred to in this subdivision.

"NEW LOANS TO RAILROADS.

"SEC. 210. (a) For the purpose of enabling carriers by railroad subject to the Interstate Commerce act properly to serve the public during the transition period immediately following the termination of Federal control, any such carrier may, at any time after the passage of this act and before the expiration of two years after the termination of Federal control, make application to the commission for a loan from the United States, setting forth the amount of the loan and the term for which it is desired, the purpose of the loan and the uses to which it will be applied, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to repay the loan and meet the requirements of its obligations in that regard, the character and value of the security offered, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for and the ability of the applicant to make good the obligation, as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"(b) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the making, in whole or in part, of the proposed loan by the United States is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant and the character and value of the security offered are such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor, and to meet its other obligations in connection with such loan, the commission may certify to the Secretary of the Treasury its findings of fact and its recommendations as to: the amount of the loan which is to be made; the time, not exceeding five years from the making thereof, within which it is to be repaid; the character of the security which is to be offered therefor; and the terms and conditions of the loan.

"(c) Upon receipt of such certificate from the commission, the Secretary of the Treasury, at any time before the expiration of 26 months after the termination of Federal control, is authorized to make a loan, not exceeding the maximum amount recommended in such certificate, out of any moneys in the revolving fund provided for in this section. All such loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually to the Secretary of the Treasury and to be placed to the credit of the revolving fund provided for in this section. The time, not exceeding five years from the making thereof, within which such loan is to be repaid, the security which is to be taken therefor, which shall be adequate to secure the loan, the terms and conditions of the loan, and the form of the obligation to be entered into, shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(d) The commission or the Secretary of the Treasury may call upon the Federal Reserve Board for advice and assistance with respect to any such application or loan.

"(e) There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $300,000,000, which shall be used as a revolving fund for the purpose of making the loans provided for in this section, and for paying the judgments, decrees, and awards referred to in subdivision (e) of section 206.

"(f) A carrier may issue evidences of indebtedness to the United States pursuant to this section without the authorization or approval of any authority, State or Federal, and without compliance with any requirement, State or Federal, as to notification.

"EXECUTION OF POWERS OF PRESIDENT.

"SEC. 211. All powers and duties conferred or imposed upon the President by the preceding sections of this act, except the designation of the agent under section 206, may be executed by him through such agency or agencies as he may determine.

"TITLE III.—DISPUTES BETWEEN CARRIERS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES AND SUBORDINATE OFFICIALS.

"SEC. 300. When used in this title—

"(1) The term 'carrier' includes any express company, sleeping car company, and any carrier by railroad, subject to the interstate commerce act, except a street, interurban, or suburban electric railway not operating as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation;

"(2) The term 'adjustment board' means any railroad board of labor adjustment established under section 302;

"(3) The term 'labor board' means the railroad labor board;

"(4) The term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other Territory, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation; and

"(5) The term 'subordinate official' includes officials of carriers of such class or rank as the commission shall designate by regulation formulated and issued after such notice and hearing as the commission may prescribe, to the carriers, and employees and subordinate officials of carriers, and organizations thereof, directly to be affected by such regulations.

"SEC. 301. It shall be the duty of all carriers and their officers, employees, and agents to exert every reasonable effort and adopt every available means to avoid any interruption to the operation of any carrier growing out of any dispute between the carrier and the employees or subordinate officials thereof. All such disputes shall be considered and, if possible, decided in conference between representatives designated and authorized so to confer by the carriers, or the employees or subordinate officials thereof, directly interested in the dispute. If any dispute is not decided in such conference, it shall be referred by the parties thereto to the board which under the provisions of this title is authorized to hear and decide such dispute.

"SEC. 302. Railroad boards of labor adjustment may be established by agreement between any carrier, group of carriers, or the carriers as a whole, and any employees or subordinate officials of carriers, or organization or group of organizations thereof.

"SEC. 303. Each such adjustment board shall (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon the written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, (3) upon the adjustment board's own motion, or (4) upon the request of the labor board whenever such board is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving only grievances, rules, or working conditions, not decided as provided in section 301, between the carrier and its employees or subordinate officials, who are, or any organizations thereof which is, in accordance with the provisions of section 302, represented upon any such adjustment board.

"SEC. 304. There is hereby established a board to be known as the 'railroad labor board' and to be composed of nine members as follows:

"(1) Three members, constituting the labor group, representing the employees and subordinate officials of the carriers, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from not less than six nominees whose nominations shall be made and offered by such employees in such manner as the commission shall by regulation prescribe;

"(2) Three members, constituting the management group, representing the carriers, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from not less than six nominees whose nominations shall be made and offered by the carriers in such manner as the commission shall by regulation prescribe; and

"(3) Three members, constituting the public group, representing the public, to be appointed directly by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"Any vacancy on the labor board shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

"SEC. 305. If either the employees or the carriers fail to make nominations and offer nominees in accordance with the regulations of the commission, as provided in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 304, within 30 days after the passage of this act in case of any original appointment to the office of member of the labor board, or in case of a vacancy in any such office within 15 days after such vacancy occurs, the President shall thereupon directly make the appointment, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In making any such appointment the President shall, as far as he deems it practicable, select an individual associated in interest with the carriers or employees thereof, whichever he is to represent.

"SEC. 306. (a) Any member of the labor board who during his term of office is an active member or in the employ of or holds any office in any organization of employees or subordinate officials, or any carrier, or owns any stock or bond thereof, or is pecuniarily interested therein, shall at once become ineligible for further membership upon the labor board; but no such member is required to relinquish honorary membership in, or his rights in any insurance or pension or other benefit fund maintained by, any organization of employees or subordinate officials or by a carrier.

"(b) Of the original members of the labor board, one from each group shall be appointed for a term of three years, one for two years, and one for one year. Their successors shall hold office for terms of five years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he succeeds. Each member shall receive from the United States an annual salary of $10,000. A member may be removed by the President for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

"SEC. 307. (a) The labor board shall hear, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions, in respect to which any adjustment board certifies to the labor board that in its opinion the adjustment board has failed or will fail to reach a decision within a reasonable time, or in respect to which the labor board determines that any adjustment board has so failed or is not using due diligence in its consideration thereof. In case the appropriate adjustment board is not organized under the provisions of section 302, the labor board, (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon a written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or (3) upon the labor board's own motion if it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, shall receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, any dispute involving grievances, rules, or working conditions which is not decided as provided in section 301 and which such adjustment board would be required to receive for hearing and decision under the provisions of section 303.

"(b) The labor board, (1) upon the application of the chief executive of any carrier or organization of employees or subordinate officials whose members are directly interested in the dispute, (2) upon a written petition signed by not less than 100 unorganized employees or subordinate officials directly interested in the dispute, or (3) upon the labor board's own motion if it is of the opinion that the dispute is likely substantially to interrupt commerce, shall receive for hearing, and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide, all disputes with respect to the wages or salaries of employees or subordinate officials of carriers, not decided as provided in section 301. The labor board may upon its own motion within 10 days after the decision, in accordance with the provisions of section 301, of any dispute with respect to wages or salaries of employees or subordinate officials of carriers, suspend the operation of such decision if the labor board is of the opinion that the decision involves such an increase in wages or salaries as will be likely to necessitate a substantial readjustment of the rates of any carrier. The labor board shall hear any decision so suspended and as soon as practicable and with due diligence decide to affirm or modify such suspended decision.

"(c) A decision by the labor board under the provisions of paragraphs (a) or (b) of this section shall require the concurrence therein of at least five of the nine members of the labor board: Provided, That in case of any decision under paragraph (b), at least one of the representatives of the public shall concur in such decision. All decisions of the labor board shall be entered upon the records of the board and copies thereof, together with such statement of facts bearing thereon as the board may deem proper, shall be immediately communicated to the parties to the dispute, the President, each adjustment board, and the commission, and shall be given further publicity in such manner as the labor board may determine.

"(d) All the decisions of the labor board in respect to wages or salaries and of the labor board or an adjustment board in respect to working conditions of employees or subordinate officials of carriers shall establish rates of wages and salaries and standards of working conditions which in the opinion of the board are just and reasonable. In determining the justness and reasonableness of such wages and salaries or working conditions the board shall, so far as applicable, take into consideration among other relevant circumstances:

"(1) The scales of wages paid for similar kinds of work in other industries;

"(2) The relation between wages and the cost of living;

"(3) The hazards of the employment;

"(4) The training and skill required;

"(5) The degree of responsibility;
"(6) The character and regularity of the employment; and
"(7) Inequalities of increases in wages or of treatment, the result of previous wage orders or adjustments.

"SEC. 308. The labor board—
"(1) Shall elect a chairman by majority vote of its members;
"(2) Shall maintain central offices in Chicago, Ill., but the labor board may, whenever it deems it necessary, meet at such other place as it may determine;
"(3) Shall investigate and study the relations between carriers and their employees, particularly questions relating to wages, hours of labor, and other conditions of employment and the respective privileges, rights, and duties of carriers and employees, and shall gather, compile, classify, digest, and publish, from time to time, data and information relating to such questions to the end that the labor board may be properly equipped to perform its duties under this title and that the members of the adjustment boards and the public may be properly informed;
"(4) May make regulations necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in it by this title; and
"(5) Shall at least annually collect and publish the decisions and regulations of the labor board and the adjustment boards and all court and administrative decisions and regulations of the commission in respect to this title, together with a cumulative index-digest thereof.

"SEC. 309. Any party to any dispute to be considered by an adjustment board or by the labor board shall be entitled to a hearing either in person or by counsel.

"SEC. 310. (a) For the efficient administration of the functions vested in the labor board by this title, any member thereof may require, by subpœna issued and signed by himself, the attendance of any witness and the production of any book, paper, document, or other evidence from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and the taking of a deposition before any designated person having power to administer oaths. In the case of a deposition the testimony shall be reduced to writing by the person taking the deposition or under his direction, and shall then be subscribed to by the deponent. Any member of the labor board may administer oaths and examine any witness. Any witness summoned before the board and any witness whose deposition is taken shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States.

"(b) In case of failure to comply with any subpœna or in case of the contumacy of any witness appearing before the labor board, the board may invoke the aid of any United States district court. Such court may thereupon order the witness to comply with the requirements of such subpœna, or to give evidence touching the matter in question, as the case may be. Any failure to obey such order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

"(c) No person shall be excused from so attending and testifying or deposing, nor from so producing any book, paper, document, or other evidence on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no natural person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing, as to which in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise. But no person shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"SEC. 311. (a) When necessary to the efficient administration of the functions vested in the labor board by this title, any member, officer, employee, or agent thereof, duly authorized in writing by the board, shall at all reasonable times for the purpose of examination have access to and the right to copy any book, account, record, paper, or correspondence relating to any matter which the board is authorized to consider or investigate. Any person who upon demand refuses any duly authorized member, officer, employee, or agent of the labor board such right of access or copying, or hinders, obstructs, or resists him in the exercise of such right, shall upon conviction thereof be liable to a penalty of $500 for each such offense. Each day during any part of which such offense continues shall constitute a separate offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"(b) Every officer or employee of the United States, whenever requested by any member of the labor board or an adjustment board duly authorized by the board for the purpose, shall supply to such board any data or information pertaining to the administration of the functions vested in it by this title, which may be contained in the records of his office.

"(c) The President is authorized to transfer to the labor board any books, papers, or documents pertaining to the administration of the functions vested in the board by this title, which are in the possession of any agency, or railway board of adjustment in connection therewith, established for executing the powers granted the President under the Federal control act and which are no longer necessary to the administration of the affairs of such agency.

"SEC. 312. Prior to September 1, 1920, each carrier shall pay to each employee or subordinate official thereof wages or salary at a rate not less than that fixed by the decision of any agency, or railway board of adjustment in connection therewith, established for executing the powers granted the President under the Federal control act, in effect in respect to such employee or subordinate official immediately preceding 12.01 a. m. March 1, 1920. Any carrier acting in violation of any provision of this section shall upon conviction thereof be liable to a penalty of $100 for each such offense. Each such action with respect to any such employee or subordinate official and each day or portion thereof during which the offense continues shall constitute a separate offense. Such penalty shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States, and shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 313. The labor board, in case it has reason to believe that any decision of the labor board or of an adjustment board is violated by any carrier, or employee or subordinate official, or organization thereof, may upon its own motion after due notice and hearing to all persons directly interested in such violation, determine whether in its opinion such violation has occurred and make public its decision in such manner as it may determine.

"SEC. 314. The labor board may (1) appoint a secretary, who shall receive from the United States an annual salary of $5,000; and (2) subject to the provisions of the civil-service laws, appoint and remove such officers, employees, and agents; and make such expenditures for rent, printing, telegrams, telephone, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, and other supplies and expenses, including salaries, traveling expenses of its members, secretary, officers, employees, and agents, and witness fees, as are necessary for the efficient execution of the functions vested in the board by this title and as may be provided for by Congress from time to time. All of the expenditures of the labor board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the labor board.

"SEC. 315. There is hereby appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended by the labor board, for defraying the expenses of the maintenance and establishment of the board, including the payment of salaries as provided in this title.

"SEC. 316. The powers and duties of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation created by the act approved July 15, 1913, shall not extend to any dispute which may be received for hearing and decision by any adjustment board or the labor board.

"TITLE IV.—AMENDMENTS TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

"SEC. 400. The first four paragraphs of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, as such paragraphs appear in section 7 of the commerce court act, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(1) That the provisions of this act shall apply to common carriers engaged in—

"'(a) The transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement for a continuous carriage or shipment; or

"'(b) The transportation of oil or other commodity, except water and except natural or artificial gas, by pipe line, or partly by pipe line and partly by railroad or by water; or

"'(c) The transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless;—

from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from one place in a Territory to another place in the same Territory, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States, or from or to any place in the United States to or from a foreign country, but only in so far as such transportation or transmission takes place within the United States.

"'(2) The provisions of this act shall also apply to such transportation of passengers and property and transmission of intelligence, but only in so far as such transportation or transmission takes place within the United States, but shall not apply—

"'(a) To the transportation of passengers or property, or to the receiving, delivering, storage, or handling of property, wholly within one State and not shipped to or from a foreign country from or to any place in the United States as aforesaid;

"'(b) To the transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless wholly within one State and not transmitted to or from a foreign country from or to any place in the United States as aforesaid; or

"'(c) To the transportation of passengers or property by a carrier by water where such transportation would not be subject to the provisions of this act except for the fact that such carrier absorbs, out of its port-to-port water rates or out of its proportional through rates, any switching, terminal, lighterage, car rental, trackage, handling, or other charges by a rail carrier for services within the switching, drayage, lighterage, or corporate limits of a port terminal or district.

"'(3) The term "common carrier" as used in this act shall include all pipe-line companies; telegraph, telephone, and cable companies operating by wire or wireless; express companies; sleeping-car companies; and all persons, natural or artificial, engaged in such transportation or transmission as aforesaid as common carriers for hire. Wherever the word "carrier" is used in this act it shall be held to mean "common carrier." The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges, car floats, lighters, and ferries used by or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any common carrier operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease, and also all switches, spurs, tracks, terminals, and terminal facilities of every kind used or necessary in the transportation of the persons or property designated herein, including all freight depots, yards, and grounds, used or necessary in the transportation or delivery of any such property. The term "transportation" used in this act shall include locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, vessels, and all instrumentalities and facilities of shipment or carriage, irrespective of ownership or of any contract, express or implied, for the use thereof, and all services in connection with the receipt, delivery, elevation, and transfer in transit, ventilation, refrigeration or icing, storage, and handling of property transported. The term "transmission" as used in this act shall include the transmission of intelligence through the application of electrical energy or other use of electricity, whether by means of wire, cable, radio apparatus, or other wire or wireless conductors or appliances, and all instrumentalities and facilities for and services in connection with the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of messages, communications, or other intelligence so transmitted, hereinafter also collectively called messages.

"'(4) It shall be the duty of every common carrier subject to this act engaged in the transportation of passengers or property to provide and furnish such transportation upon reasonable request therefor, and to establish through routes and just and reasonable rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto, and to provide reasonable facilities for operating through routes and to make reasonable rules and regulations with respect to the operation of through routes, and providing for reasonable compensation to those entitled thereto; and in case of joint rates, fares, or charges, to establish just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof as between the carriers subject to this act participating therein which shall not unduly prefer or prejudice any of such participating carriers.

"'(5) All charges made for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation of passengers or property or in the transmission of intelligence by wire or wireless as aforesaid, or in connection therewith, shall be just and reasonable, and every unjust and unreasonable charge for such service or any part thereof is prohibited and declared to be unlawful: Provided, That messages by wire or wireless subject to the provisions of this act may be classified into day, night, repeated, unrepeated, letter, commercial, press, Government, and such other classes as are just and reasonable, and different rates may be charged for the different classes of messages: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent telephone, telegraph, and cable companies from entering into contracts with common carriers for the exchange of services.

"'(6) It is hereby made the duty of all common carriers subject to the provisions of this act to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable classifications of property for transportation, with reference to which rates, tariffs, regulations, or practices are or may be made or prescribed, and just and reasonable regulations and practices affecting classifications, rates, or tariffs, the issuance, form, and substance of tickets, receipts, and bills of lading, the manner and method of presenting, marking, packing, and delivering property for transportation, the facilities for transportation, the carrying of personal, sample, and excess baggage, and all other matters relating to or connected with the receiving, handling, transporting, storing, and delivery of property subject to the provisions of this act which may be necessary or proper to secure the safe and prompt receipt, handling, transportation, and delivery of property subject to the provisions of this act upon just and reasonable terms, and every unjust and unreasonable classification, regulation, and practice is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.'

"SEC. 401. The fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce act, as such paragraphs appear in section 7 of the Commerce Court act, are hereby amended by inserting '(7)' at the beginning of such fifth paragraph, '(8)' at the beginning of such sixth paragraph, and '(9)' at the beginning of such seventh paragraph.

"SEC. 402. The paragraphs added to section 1 of the Interstate Commerce act by the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," as amended, in respect of car service, and for other purposes,' approved May 29, 1917, are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(10) The term "car service" in this act shall include the use, control, supply, movement, distribution, exchange, interchange, and return of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles used in the transportation of property, including special types of equipment, and the supply of trains, by any carrier by railroad subject to this act.

"'(11) It shall be the duty of every carrier by railroad subject to this act to furnish safe and adequate car service and to establish, observe, and enforce just and reasonable rules, regulations, and practices with respect to car service; and every unjust and unreasonable rule, regulation, and practice with respect to car service is prohibited and declared to be unlawful.

"'(12) It shall also be the duty of every carrier by railroad to make just and reasonable distribution of cars for transportation of coal among the coal mines served by it, whether located upon its line or lines or customarily dependent upon it for car supply. During any period when the supply of cars available for such service does not equal the requirements of such mines it shall be the duty of the carrier to maintain and apply just and reasonable ratings of such mines and to count each and every car furnished to or used by any such mine for transportation of coal against the mine. Failure or refusal so to do shall be unlawful, and in respect of each car not so counted shall be deemed a separate offense, and the carrier, receiver, or operating trustee so failing or refusing shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $100 for each offense, which may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"'(13) The commission is hereby authorized by general or special orders to require all carriers by railroad subject to this act, or any of them, to file with it from time to time their rules and regulations with respect to car service, and the commission may, in its discretion, direct that such rules and regulations shall be incorporated in their schedules showing rates, fares, and charges for transportation, and be subject to any or all of the provisions of this act relating thereto.

"'(14) The commission may, after hearing, on a complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, establish reasonable rules, regulations, and practices with respect to car service by carriers by railroad subject to this act, including the compensation to be paid for the use of any locomotive, car, or other vehicle not owned by the carrier using it, and the penalties or other sanctions for nonobservance of such rules, regulations, or practices.

"'(15) Whenever the commission is of opinion that shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency requiring immediate action exists in any section of the country, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders, without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine: (a) to suspend the operation of any or all rules, regulations, or practices then established with respect to car service for such time as may be determined by the commission; (b) to make such just and reasonable directions with respect to car service without regard to the ownership as between carriers of locomotives, cars, and other vehicles, during such emergency as in its opinion will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, upon such terms of compensation as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; (c) to require such joint or common use of terminals, including main-line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminals, as in its opinion will best meet the emergency and serve the public interest, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable; and (d) to give directions for preference or priority in transportation, embargoes, or movement of traffic under permits, at such time and for such periods as it may determine, and to modify, change, suspend, or annul them. In time of war or threatened war the President may certify to the commission that it is essential to the national defense and security that certain traffic shall have preference or priority in transportation, and the commission shall, under the power herein conferred, direct that such preference or priority be afforded.

"'(16) Whenever the commission is of opinion that any carrier by railroad subject to this act is for any reason unable to transport the traffic offered it so as properly to serve the public, it may, upon the same procedure as provided in paragraph (15), make such just and reasonable directions with respect to the handling, routing, and movement of the traffic of such carrier and its distribution over other lines of roads, as in the opinion of the commission will best promote the service in the interest of the public and the commerce of the people, and upon such terms as between the carriers as they may agree upon, or, in the event of their disagreement, as the commission may after subsequent hearing find to be just and reasonable.

"'(17) The directions of the commission as to car service and to the matters referred to in paragraphs (15) and (16) may be made through and by such agents or agencies as the commission shall designate and appoint for that purpose. It shall be the duty of all carriers by railroad subject to this act, and of their officers, agents, and employees, to obey strictly and conform promptly to such orders or directions of the commission, and in case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, receiver, or operating trustee to comply with any such order or direction such carrier, receiver, or trustee shall be liable to a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500 for each such offense and $50 for each and every day of the continuance of such offense, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States: Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the right of a State, in the exercise of its police power, to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service for intrastate business, except in so far as such requirement is inconsistent with any lawful order of the commission made under the provisions of this act.

"'(18) After 90 days after this paragraph takes effect no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall undertake the extension of its line of railroad, or the construction of a new line of railroad, or shall acquire or operate any line of railroad, or extension thereof, or shall engage in transportation under this act over or by means of such additional or extended line of railroad, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity require or will require the construction or operation, or construction and operation, of such additional or extended line of railroad, and no carrier by railroad subject to this act shall abandon all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, unless and until there shall first have been obtained from the commission a certificate that the present or future public convenience and necessity permit of such abandonment.

"'(19) The application for and issuance of any such certificate shall be under such rules and regulations as to hearings and other matters as the commission may from time to time prescribe, and the provisions of this act shall apply to all such proceedings. Upon receipt of any application for such certificate the commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the governor of each State in which such additional or extended line of railroad is proposed to be constructed or operated, or all or any portion of a line of railroad, or the operation thereof, is proposed to be abandoned, with the right to be heard as hereinafter provided with respect to the hearing of complaints or the issuance of securities; and said notice shall also be published for three consecutive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in each county in or through which said line of railroad is constructed or operates.

"'(20) The commission shall have power to issue such certificate as prayed for, or to refuse to issue it, or to issue it for a portion or portions of a line of railroad, or extension thereof, described in the application, or for the partial exercise only of such right or privilege, and may attach to the issuance of the certificate such terms and conditions as in its judgment the public convenience and necessity may require. From and after issuance of such certificate, and not before, the carrier by railroad may, without securing approval other than such certificate, comply with the terms and conditions contained in or attached to the issuance of such certificate and proceed with the construction, operation, or abandonment covered thereby. Any construction, operation, or abandonment contrary to the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) or (19) of this section may be enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction at the suit of the United States, the commission, any commission or regulating body of the State or States affected, or any party in interest; and any carrier which, or any director, officer, receiver, operating trustee, lessee, agent, or person, acting for or employed by such carrier, who knowingly authorizes, consents to, or permits any violation of the provisions of this paragraph or of paragraph (18) of this section, shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years, or both.

"'(21) The commission may, after hearing, in a proceeding upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, authorize or require by order any carrier by railroad subject to this act, party to such proceeding, to provide itself with safe and adequate facilities for performing as a common carrier its car service as that term is used in this act, and to extend its line or lines: Provided, That no such authorization or order shall be made unless the commission finds, as to such extension, that it is reasonably required in the interest of public convenience and necessity, or as to such extension or facilities that the expense involved therein will not impair the ability of the carrier to perform its duty to the public. Any carrier subject to this act which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the commission made in pursuance of this paragraph shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each day during which such refusal or neglect continues, which shall accrue to the United States and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"'(22) The authority of the commission conferred by paragraphs (18) to (21), both inclusive, shall not extend to the construction or abandonment of spur, industrial, team, switching or side tracks, located or to be located wholly within one State, or of street, suburban, or interurban electric railways, which are not operated as a part or parts of a general steam railroad system of tansportation.'

"SEC. 403. The fifteenth and sixteenth paragraphs of section 1 of the interstate commerce act, added to such section by the act entitled 'An act to amend the act to regulate commerce, as amended, and for other purposes,' approved August 10, 1917, are hereby amended by inserting '(23)' at the beginning of such fifteenth paragraph and '(24)' at the beginning of such sixteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 404. Section 2 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That if any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, by any special rate, rebate, drawback, or other device, charge, demand, collect, or receive from any person or persons a greater or less compensation for any service rendered, or to be rendered, in the transportation of passengers or property or the transmission of intelligence, subject to the provisions of this act, than it charges, demands, collects, or receives from any other person or persons for doing for him or them a like and contemporaneous service in the transportation or transmission of a like kind of traffic or message under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, such common carrier shall be deemed guilty of unjust discrimination, which is hereby prohibited and declared to be unlawful.'

"SEC. 405. The first paragraph of section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning thereof.

"Section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by adding after the first paragraph a new paragraph to read as follows:

"'(2) From and after July 1, 1920, no carrier by railroad subject to the provisions of this act shall deliver or relinquish possession at destination of any freight transported by it until all tariff rates and charges thereon have been paid, except under such rules and regulations as the commission may from time to time prescribe to assure prompt payment of all such rates and charges and to prevent unjust discrimination: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not be construed to prohibit any carrier from extending credit in connection with rates and charges on freight transported for the United States, for any department, bureau, or agency thereof, or for any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof, or for the District of Columbia.'

"The second paragraph of section 3 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(3) All carriers, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property, subject to the provisions of this act, shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers or property to and from their several lines and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates, fares, and charges between such connecting lines, or unduly prejudice any such connecting line in the distribution of traffic that is not specifically routed by the shipper.

"'(4) If the commission finds it to be in the public interest and to be practicable, without substantially impairing the ability of a carrier owning or entitled to the enjoyment of terminal facilities to handle its own business, it shall have power to require the use of any such terminal facilities, including main line track or tracks for a reasonable distance outside of such terminal, of any carrier, by another carrier or other carriers, on such terms and for such compensation as the carriers affected may agree upon, or, in the event of a failure to agree, as the commission may fix as just and reasonable for the use so required, to be ascertained on the principle controlling compensation in condemnation proceedings. Such compensation shall be paid or adequately secured before the enjoyment of the use may be commenced. If under this paragraph the use of such terminal facilities of any carrier is required to be given to another carrier or other carriers, and the carrier whose terminal facilities are required to be so used is not satisfied with the terms fixed for such use, or if the amount of compensation so fixed is not duly and promptly paid, the carrier whose terminal facilities have thus been required to be given to another carrier or other carriers shall be entitled to recover, by suit or action against such other carrier or carriers, proper damages for any injuries sustained by it as the result of compliance with such requirement, or just compensation for such use, or both, as the case may be.'

"SEC. 406. Section 4 of the interstate-commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4 (1) That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers, or of like kind of property, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line or route in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance, or to charge any greater compensation as a through rate than the aggregate of the intermediate rates subject to the provisions of this act, but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge or receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, That upon application to the commission such common carrier may in special cases, after investigation, be authorized by the commission to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section; but in exercising the authority conferred upon it in this proviso the commission shall not permit the establishment of any charge to or from the more distant point that is not reasonably compensatory for the service performed; and if a circuitous rail line or route is, because of such circuity, granted authority to meet the charges of a more direct line or route to or from competitive points and to maintain higher charges to or from intermediate points on its line, the authority shall not include intermediate points as to which the haul of the petitioning line or route is not longer than that of the direct line or route between the competitive points; and no such authorization shall be granted on account of merely potential water competition not actually in existence: And provided further, That rates, fares, or charges existing at the time of the passage of the amendatory act by virtue of orders of the commission or as to which application has theretofore been filed with the commission and not yet acted upon shall not be required to be changed by reason of the provisions of this section until the further order of or a determination by the commission.

"'(2) Wherever a carrier by railroad shall in competition with a water route or routes reduce the rates on the carriage of any species of freight to or from competitive points it shall not be permitted to increase such rates unless after hearing by the commission it shall be found that such proposed increase rests upon changed conditions other than the elimination of water competition.'

"SEC. 407. The first paragraph of section 5 of the interstate-commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. (1) That, except upon specific approval by order of the commission as in this section provided, and except as provided in paragraph (16) of section 1 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense: Provided, That whenever the commission is of opinion, after hearing upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this act, or upon its own initiative, that the division of their traffic or earnings, to the extent indicated by the commission, will be in the interest of better service to the public, or economy in operation, and will not unduly restrain competition, the commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize, if assented to by all the carriers involved, such division of traffic or earnings, under such rules and regulations, and for such consideration as between such carriers and upon such terms and conditions, as shall be found by the commission to be just and reasonable in the premises.

"'(2) Whenever the commission is of opinion, after hearing, upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this act, that the acquisition, to the extent indicated by the commission, by one of such carriers of the control of any other such carrier or carriers either under a lease or by the purchase of stock or in any other manner not involving the consolidation of such carriers into a single system for ownership and operation, will be in the public interest, the commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize such acquisition, under such rules and regulations and for such consideration and on such terms and conditions as shall be found by the commission to be just and reasonable in the premises.

"'(3) The commission may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such orders, supplemental to any order made under paragraph (1) or (2), as it may deem necessary or appropriate.

"'(4) The commission shall as soon as practicable prepare and adopt a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. In the division of such railways into such systems under such plan, competition shall be preserved as fully as possible and wherever practicable the existing routes and channels of trade and commerce shall be maintained. Subject to the foregoing requirements, the several systems shall be so arranged that the cost of transportation as between competitive systems and as related to the values of the properties through which the service is rendered shall be the same, so far as practicable; so that these systems can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective railway properties.

"'(5) When the commission has agreed upon a tentative plan, it shall give the same due publicity and upon reasonable notice, including notice to the governor of each State, shall hear all persons who may file or present objections thereto. The commission is authorized to prescribe a procedure for such hearings and to fix a time for bringing them to a close. After the hearings are at an end, the commission shall adopt a plan for such consolidation and publish the same; but it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application, reopen the subject for such changes or modifications as in its judgment will promote the public interest. The consolidations herein provided for shall be in harmony with such plan.

"'(6) It shall be lawful for two or more carriers by railroad, subject to this act, to consolidate their properties or any part thereof, into one corporation for the ownership, management, and operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership, management, and operation, under the following conditions:

"'(a) The proposed consolidation must be in harmony with and in furtherance of the complete plan of consolidation mentioned in paragraph (5) and must be approved by the commission;

"'(b) The bonds at par of the corporation which is to become the owner of the consolidated properties, together with the outstanding capital stock at par of such corporation, shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission. The value of the properties sought to be consolidated shall be ascertained by the commission under section 19a of this act, and it shall be the duty of the commission to proceed immediately to the ascertainment of such value for the properties involved in a proposed consolidation upon the filing of the application for such consolidation;

"'(c) Whenever two or more carriers propose a consolidation under this section, they shall present their application therefor to the commission, and thereupon the commission shall notify the governor of each State in which any part of the properties sought to be consolidated is situated and the carriers involved in the proposed consolidation, of the time and place for a public hearing. If after such hearing the commission finds that the public interest will be promoted by the consolidation and that the conditions of this section have been or will be fulfilled, it may enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, and thereupon such consolidation may be effected, in accordance with such order, if all the carriers involved assent thereto, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

"'(7) The power and authority of the commission to approve and authorize the consolidation of two or more carriers shall extend and apply to the consolidation of four express companies into the American Railway Express Co., a Delaware corporation, if application for such approval and authority is made to the commission within 30 days after the passage of this amendatory act; and pending the decision of the commission such consolidation shall not be dissolved.

"'(8) The carriers affected by any order made under the foregoing provisions of this section and any corporation organized to effect a consolidation approved and authorized in such order shall be, and they are hereby, relieved from the operation of the "antitrust law," as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, and of all other restraints or prohibitions by law, State or Federal, in so far as may be necessary to enable them to do anything authorized or required by any order made under and pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section.'

"SEC. 408. The paragraph of section 5 of the interstate commerce act, added to such section by section 11 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone,' approved August 24, 1912, is hereby amended by inserting '(9)' at the beginning thereof.

"The two paragraphs of section 11 of such act of August 24, 1912, which follow the paragraph added by such section to section 5 of the interstate commerce act, are hereby made a part of section 5 of the interstate commerce act. The first paragraph so made a part of section 5 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(10)' at the beginning thereof, and the second such paragraph is hereby amended by inserting '(11)' at the beginning thereof.

"SEC. 409. Section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, '(7)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(8)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(9)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(10)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(11)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, '(12)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph, and '(13)' at the beginning of the thirteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 410. The third paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided further, That the commission is hereby authorized to make suitable rules and regulations for the simplification of schedules of rates, fares, charges, and classifications and to permit in such rules and regulations the filing of an amendment of or change in any rate, fare, charge, or classification without filing complete schedules covering rates, fares, charges, or classifications not changed if, in its judgment, not inconsistent with the public interest.'

"SEC. 411. The seventh paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out the proviso at the end.

"SEC. 412. The two paragraphs under (a) of the thirteenth paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended so as to be combined into one paragraph to read as follows:

"'(a) To establish physical connection between the lines of the rail carrier and the dock at which interchange of passengers or property is to be made by directing the rail carrier to make suitable connection between its line and a track or tracks which have been constructed from the dock to the limits of the railroad right of way, or by directing either or both the rail and water carrier, individually or in connection with one another, to construct and connect with the lines of the rail carrier a track or tracks to the dock. The commission shall have full authority to determine and prescribe the terms and conditions upon which these connecting tracks shall be operated, and it may, either in the construction or the operation of such tracks, determine what sum shall be paid to or by either carrier: Provided, That construction required by the commission under the provisions of this paragraph shall be subject to the same restrictions as to findings of public convenience and necessity and other matters as is construction required under section 1 of this act.'

"SEC. 413. Paragraph (c) of the thirteenth paragraph of section 6 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(c) To establish proportional rates, or maximum, or minimum, or maximum and minimum proportional rates, by rail to and from the ports to which the traffic is brought, or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine to what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply. By proportional rates are meant those which differ from the corresponding local rates to and from the port and which apply only to traffic which has been brought to the port or is carried from the port by a common carrier by water.'

"SEC. 414. Section 10 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, and by inserting after the words 'transportation of passengers or property,' in the proviso in the first paragraph thereof, the words 'or the transmission of intelligence.'

"SEC. 415. Section 12 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, and '(7)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph.

"'(3) Whenever in any investigation under the provisions of this act, or in any investigation instituted upon petition of the carrier concerned, which petition is hereby authorized to be filed, there shall be brought in issue any rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, made or imposed by authority of any State, or initiated by the President during the period of Federal control, the commission, before proceeding to hear and dispose of such issue, shall cause the State or States interested to be notified of the proceeding. The commission may confer with the authorities of any State having regulatory jurisdiction over the class of persons and corporations subject to this act with respect to the relationship between rate structures and practices of carriers subject to the jurisdiction of such State bodies and of the commission; and to that end is authorized and empowered, under rules to be prescribed by it, and which may be modified from time to time, to hold joint hearings with any such State regulating bodies on any matters wherein the commission is empowered to act and where the rate-making authority of a State is or may be affected by the action taken by the commission. The commission is also authorized to avail itself of the cooperation, service, records, and facilities of such State authorities in the enforcement of any provision of this act.

"'(4) Whenever in any such investigation the commission, after full hearing, finds that any such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce on the one hand and interstate or foreign commerce on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, which is hereby forbidden and declared to be unlawful, it shall prescribe the rate, fare, or charge, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum, thereafter to be charged, and the classification, regulation, or practice thereafter to be observed, in such manner as, in its judgment, will remove such advantage, preference, prejudice, or discrimination. Such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be observed while in effect by the carriers parties to such proceeding affected thereby, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.'

"SEC. 417. Section 14 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, and '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph.

"SEC. 418. The first four paragraphs of section 15 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15. (1) That whenever, after full hearing, upon a complaint made as provided in section 13 of this act, or after full hearing under an order for investigation and hearing made by the commission on its own initiative, either in extension of any pending complaint or without any complaint whatever, the commission shall be of opinion that any individual or joint rate, fare, or charge whatsoever demanded, charged, or collected by any common carrier or carriers subject to this act for the transportation of persons or property or for the transmission of messages as defined in the first section of this act, or that any individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice whatsoever of such carrier or carriers subject to the provisions of this act, is or will be unjust or unreasonable or unjustly discriminatory or unduly preferential or prejudicial, or otherwise in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized and empowered to determine and prescribe what will be the just and reasonable individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or rates, fares, or charges, to be thereafter observed in such case, or the maximum or minimum, or maximum and minimum, to be charged (or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto), and what individual or joint classification, regulation, or practice is or will be just, fair, and reasonable, to be thereafter followed, and to make an order that the carrier or carriers shall cease and desist from such violation to the extent to which the commission finds that the same does or will exist, and shall not thereafter publish, demand, or collect any rate, fare, or charge for such transportation or transmission other than the rate, fare, or charge so prescribed, or in excess of the maximum or less than the minimum so prescribed, as the case may be, and shall adopt the classification and shall conform to and observe the regulation or practice so prescribed.

"'(2) Except as otherwise provided in this act, all orders of the commission, other than orders for the payment of money, shall take effect within such reasonable time, not less than 30 days, and shall continue in force until its further order, or for a specified period of time, according as shall be prescribed in the order, unless the same shall be suspended or modified or set aside by the commission, or be suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction.

"'(3) The commission may, and it shall whenever deemed by it to be necessary or desirable in the public interest, after full hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative without a complaint, establish through routes, joint classifications, and joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportation of passengers or property, or the maxima or minima, or maxima and minima, to be charged (or, in the case of a through route where one of the carriers is a water line, the maximum rates, fares, and charges applicable thereto), and the divisions of such rates, fares, or charges as hereinafter provided, and the terms and conditions under which such through routes shall be operated; and this provision, except as herein otherwise provided, shall apply when one of the carriers is a water line. The commission shall not, however, establish any through route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge, between street electric passenger railways not engaged in the general business of transporting freight in addition to their passenger and express business, and railroads of a different character; nor shall the commission have the right to establish any route, classification, or practice, or any rate, fare, or charge when the transportation is wholly by water, and any transportation by water affected by this act shall be subject to the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water.

"'(4) In establishing any such through route the commission shall not (except as provided in section 3, and except where one of the carriers is a water line), require any carrier by railroad, without its consent, to embrace in such route substantially less than the entire length of its railroad and of any intermediate railroad operated in conjunction and under a common management or control therewith, which lies between the termini of such proposed through route, unless such inclusion of lines would make the through route unreasonably long as compared with another practicable through route which could otherwise be established: Provided, That in time of shortage of equipment, congestion of traffic, or other emergency declared by the commission it may (either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, if it so orders without answer or other formal pleadings by the interested carrier or carriers, and with or without notice, hearing, or the making or filing of a report, according as the commission may determine) establish temporarily such through routes as in its opinion are necessary or desirable in the public interest.

"'(5) Transportation wholly by railroad of ordinary live stock in carload lots destined to or received at public stockyards shall include all necessary service of unloading and reloading en route, delivery at public stockyards of inbound shipments into suitable pens, and receipt and loading at such yards of outbound shipments, without extra charge therefor to the shipper, consignee, or owner, except in cases where the unloading or reloading en route is at the request of the shipper, consignee, or owner, or to try an intermediate market, or to comply with quarantine regulations. The commission may prescribe or approve just and reasonable rules governing each of such excepted services. Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to affect the duties and liabilities of the carriers now existing by virtue of law respecting the transportation of other than ordinary live stock, or the duty of performing service as to shipments other than those to or from public stockyards.

"'(6) Whenever, after full hearing upon complaint or upon its own initiative, the commission is of opinion that the divisions of joint rates, fares, or charges, applicable to the transportaton of passengers or property, are or will be unjust, unreasonable, inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial as between the carriers parties thereto (whether agreed upon by such carriers, or any of them, or otherwise established), the commission shall by order prescribe the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers, and in cases where the joint rate, fare, or charge was established pursuant to a finding or order of the commission and the divisions thereof are found by it to have been unjust, unreasonable, or inequitable, or unduly preferential or prejudicial the commission may also by order determine what (for the period subsequent to the filing of the complaint or petition or the making of the order of investigation) would have been the just, reasonable, and equitable divisions thereof to be received by the several carriers and require adjustment to be made in accordance therewith. In so prescribing and determining the divisions of joint rates, fares, and charges the commission shall give due consideration, among other things, to the efficiency with which the carriers concerned are operated, the amount of revenue required to pay their respective operating expenses, taxes, and a fair return on their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, and the importance to the public of the transportation services of such carriers; and also whether any particular participating carrier is an originating, intermediate, or delivering line, and any other fact or circumstance which would ordinarily, without regard to the mileage haul, entitle one carrier to a greater or less proportion than another carrier of the joint rate, fare, or charge.

"'(7) Whenever there shall be filed with the commission any schedule stating a new individual or joint rate, fare, or charge, or any new individual or joint classification, or any new individual or joint regulation or practice affecting any rate, fare, or charge, the commission shall have, and it is hereby given, authority, either upon complaint or upon its own initiative without complaint, at once, and if it so orders without answer or other formal pleading by the interested carrier or carriers, but upon reasonable notice, to enter upon a hearing concerning the lawfulness of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice; and pending such hearing and the decision thereon the commission, upon filing with such schedule and delivering to the carrier or carriers affected thereby a statement in writing of its reasons for such suspension, may suspend the operation of such schedule and defer the use of such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice, but not for a longer period than 120 days beyond the time when it would otherwise go into effect; and after full hearing, whether completed before or after the rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice goes into effect, the commission may make such order with reference thereto as would be proper in a proceeding initiated after it had become effective. If any such hearing can not be concluded within the period of suspension, as above stated, the commission may extend the time of suspension for a further period not exceeding 30 days, and if the proceeding has not been concluded and an order made at the expiration of such 30 days the proposed change of rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice shall go into effect at the end of such period, but in case of a proposed increased rate or charge for or in respect to the transportation of property the commission may by order require the interested carrier or carriers to keep accurate account in detail of all amounts received by reason of such increase, specifying by whom and in whose behalf such amounts are paid, and upon completion of the hearing and decision may by further order require the interested carrier or carriers to refund with interest to the persons in whose behalf such amounts were paid such portion of such increased rates or charges as by its decision shall be found not justified. At any hearing involving a rate, fare, or charge increased after January 1, 1910, or of a rate, fare, or charge sought to be increased after the passage of this act, the burden of proof to show that the increased rate, fare, or charge, or proposed increased rate, fare, or charge, is just and reasonable shall be upon the carrier, and the commission shall give to the hearing and decision of such questions preference over all other questions pending before it and decide the same as speedily as possible.'

"SEC. 419. The fifth paragraph of section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(8)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 420. Section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting after the fifth paragraph two new paragraphs, to read as follows:

"'(9) Whenever property is diverted or delivered by one carrier to another carrier contrary to routing instructions in the bill of lading, unless such diversion or delivery is in compliance with a lawful order, rule, or regulation of the commission, such carriers shall, in a suit or action in any court of competent jurisdiction, be jointly and severally liable to the carrier thus deprived of its right to participate in the haul of the property, for the total amount of the rate or charge it would have received had it participated in the haul of the property. The carrier to which the property is thus diverted shall not be liable in such suit or action if it can show, the burden of proof being upon it, that before carrying the property it had no notice, by bill of lading, waybill or otherwise, of the routing instructions. In any judgment which may be rendered the plaintiff shall be allowed to recover against the defendant a reasonable attorney's fee to be taxed in the case.

"'(10) With respect to traffic not routed by the shipper, the commission may, whenever the public interest and a fair distribution of traffic require, direct the route which such traffic shall take after it arrives at the terminus of one carrier or at a junction point with another carrier, and is to be there delivered to another carrier.'

"SEC. 421. Section 15 of the interstate commerce act is hereby further amended by inserting '(11)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph, '(12)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(13)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, and '(14)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph.

"SEC. 422. The interstate commerce act is further amended by inserting after section 15 a new section to be known as section 15a and to read as follows:

"'SEC. 15a. (1) When used in this section the term "rates" means rates, fares, and charges, and all classifications, regulations, and practices, relating thereto; the term "carrier" means a carrier by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water, within the continental United States, subject to this act, excluding (a) sleeping-car companies and express companies, (b) street or suburban electric railways unless operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation, (c) interurban electric railways unless operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation or engaged in the general transportation of freight, and (d) any belt-line railroad, terminal switching railroad, or other terminal facility, owned exclusively and maintained, operated, and controlled by any State or political subdivision thereof; and the term "net railway operating income" means railway operating income, including in the computation thereof debits and credits arising from equipment rents and joint facility rents.

"'(2) In the exercise of its power to prescribe just and reasonable rates the commission shall initiate, modify, establish or adjust such rates so that carriers as a whole (or as a whole in each of such rate groups or territories as the commission may from time to time designate) will, under honest, efficient and economical management and reasonable expenditures for maintenance of way, structures and equipment, earn an aggregate annual net railway operating income equal, as nearly as may be, to a fair return upon the aggregate value of the railway property of such carriers held for and used in the service of transportation: Provided, That the commission shall have reasonable latitude to modify or adjust any particular rate which it may find to be unjust or unreasonable, and to prescribe different rates for different sections of the country.

"'(3) The commission shall from time to time determine and make public what percentage of such aggregate property value constitutes a fair return thereon, and such percentage shall be uniform for all rate groups or territories which may be designated by the commission. In making such determination it shall give due consideration, among other things, to the transportation needs of the country and the necessity (under honest, efficient, and economical management of existing transportation facilities) of enlarging such facilities in order to provide the people of the United States with adequate transportation: Provided, That during the two years beginning March 1, 1920, the commission shall take as such fair return a sum equal to 5½ per cent of such aggregate value, but may, in its discretion, add thereto a sum not exceeding one-half of 1 per cent of such aggregate value to make provision in whole or in part for improvements, betterments or equipment, which, according to the accounting system prescribed by the commission, are chargeable to capital account.

"'(4) For the purposes of this section, such aggregate value of the property of the carriers shall be determined by the commission from time to time and as often as may be necessary. The commission may utilize the results of its investigation under section 19a of this act, in so far as deemed by it available, and shall give due consideration to all the elements of value recognized by the law of the land for rate-making purposes, and shall give to the property investment account of the carriers only that consideration which under such law it is entitled to in establishing values for rate-making purposes. Whenever pursuant to section 19a of this act the value of the railway property of any carrier held for and used in the service of transportation has been finally ascertained, the value so ascertained shall be deemed by the commission to be the value thereof for the purpose of determining such aggregate value.

"'(5) Inasmuch as it is impossible (without regulation and control in the interest of the commerce of the United States considered as a whole) to establish uniform rates upon competitive traffic which will adequately sustain all the carriers which are engaged in such traffic and which are indispensable to the communities to which they render the service of transportation, without enabling some of such carriers to receive a net railway operating income substantially and unreasonably in excess of a fair return upon the value of their railway property held for and used in the service of transportation, it is hereby declared that any carrier which receives such an income so in excess of a fair return, shall hold such part of the excess, as hereinafter prescribed, as trustee for, and shall pay it to, the United States.

"'(6) If, under the provisions of this section, any carrier receives for any year a net railway operating income in excess of 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, one-half of such excess shall be placed in a reserve fund established and maintained by such carrier, and the remaining one-half thereof shall, within the first four months following the close of the period for which such computation is made, be recoverable by and paid to the commission for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a general railroad contingent fund as hereinafter described. For the purposes of this paragraph the value of the railway property and the net railway operating income of a group of carriers, which the commission finds are under common control and management and are operated as a single system, shall be computed for the system as a whole irrespective of the separate ownership and accounting returns of the various parts of such system. In the case of any carrier which has accepted the provisions of section 209 of this amendatory act the provisions of this paragraph shall not be applicable to the income for any period prior to September 1, 1920. The value of such railway property shall be determined by the commission in the manner provided in paragraph (4).

"'(7) For the purpose of paying dividends or interest on its stocks, bonds, or other securities, or rent for leased roads, a carrier may draw from the reserve fund established and maintained by it under the provisions of this section to the extent that its net railway operating income for any year is less than a sum equal to 6 per cent of the value of the railway property held for and used by it in the service of transportation, determined as provided in paragraph (6); but such fund shall not be drawn upon for any other purpose.

"'(8) Such reserve fund need not be accumulated and maintained by any carrier beyond a sum equal to 5 per cent of the value of its railway property determined as herein provided, and when such fund is so accumulated and maintained the portion of its excess income which the carrier is permitted to retain under paragraph (6) may be used by it for any lawful purpose.

"'(9) The commission shall prescribe rules and regulations for the determination and recovery of the excess income payable to it under this section, and may require such security and prescribe such reasonable terms and conditions in connection therewith as it may find necessary. The commission shall make proper adjustments to provide for the computation of excess income for a portion of a year, and for a year in which a change in the percentage constituting a fair return or in the value of a carrier's railway property becomes effective.

"'(10) The general railroad contingent fund so to be recoverable by and paid to the commission and all accretions thereof shall be a revolving fund and shall be administered by the commission. It shall be used by the commission in furtherance of the public interest in railway transportation either by making loans to carriers to meet expenditures for capital account or to refund maturing securities originally issued for capital account, or by purchasing transportation equipment and facilities and leasing the same to carriers, as hereinafter provided. Any moneys in the fund not so employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or deposited in authorized depositaries of the United States subject to the rules promulgated from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury relating to Government deposits.

"'(11) A carrier may at any time make application to the commission for a loan from the general railroad contingent fund, setting forth the amount of the loan and the term for which it is desired, the purpose of the loan and the uses to which it will be applied, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to repay the loan and meet the requirements of its obligations in that regard, the character and value of the security offered, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of granting the loan applied for and the ability of the applicant to make good the obligation, as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"'(12) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the making, in whole or in part, of the proposed loan from the general railroad contingent fund is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant and the character and value of the security offered are such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to repay the loan within the time fixed therefor, and to meet its other obligations in connection with such loan, the commission may make a loan to the applicant from such railroad contingent fund, in such amount, for such length of time, and under such terms and conditions as it may deem proper. The commission shall also prescribe the security to be furnished, which shall be adequate to secure the loan. All such loans shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually to the commission. Such loan when repaid, and all interest paid thereon, shall be placed in the general railroad contingent fund.

"'(13) A carrier may at any time make application to the commission for the lease to it of transportation equipment or facilities, purchased from the general railroad contingent fund, setting forth the kind and amount of such equipment or facilities and the term for which it is desired to be leased, the uses to which it is proposed to put such equipment or facilities, the present and prospective ability of the applicant to pay the rental charges thereon and to meet the requirements of its obligations under the lease, and the extent to which the public convenience and necessity will be served. The application shall be accompanied by statements showing such facts and details as the commission may require with respect to the physical situation, ownership, capitalization, indebtedness, contract obligations, operation, and earning power of the applicant, together with such other facts relating to the propriety and expediency of leasing such equipment or facilities to the applicant as the commission may deem pertinent to the inquiry.

"'(14) If the commission, after such hearing and investigation, with or without notice, as it may direct, finds that the leasing to the applicant of such equipment or facilities, in whole or in part, is necessary to enable the applicant properly to meet the transportation needs of the public, and that the prospective earning power of the applicant is such as to furnish reasonable assurance of the applicant's ability to pay promptly the rental charges and meet its other obligations under such lease, the commission may lease such equipment or facilities purchased by it from the general railroad contingent fund, to the applicant for such length of time, and under such terms and conditions as it may deem proper. The rental charges provided in every such lease shall be at least sufficient to pay a return of 6 per cent per annum, plus allowance for depreciation determined as provided in paragraph (5) of section 20 of this act, upon the value of the equipment or facilities leased thereunder. All rental charges and other payments received by the commission in connection with such equipment and facilities, including amounts received under any sale thereof, shall be placed in the general railroad contingent fund.

"'(15) The commission may from time to time purchase, contract for the construction, repair and replacement of, and sell, equipment and facilities, and enter into and carry out contracts and other obligations in connection therewith, to the extent that moneys included in the general railroad contingent fund are available therefor, and in so far as necessary to enable it to secure and supply equipment and facilities to carriers whose applications therefor are approved under the provisions of this section, and to maintain and dispose of such equipment and facilities.

"'(16) The commission may from time to time prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this section respecting the making of loans and the lease of equipment and facilities.

"'(17) The provisions of this section shall not be construed as depriving shippers of their right to reparation in case of overcharges, unlawfully excessive or discriminatory rates, or rates excessive in their relation to other rates, but no shipper shall be entitled to recover upon the sole ground that any particular rate may reflect a proportion of excess income to be paid by the carrier to the commission in the public interest under the provisions of this section.

"'(18) Any carrier, or any corporation organized to construct and operate a railroad, proposing to undertake the construction and operation of a new line of railroad may apply to the commission for permission to retain for a period not to exceed 10 years all or any part of its earnings derived from such new construction in excess of the amount heretofore in this section provided, for such disposition as it may lawfully make of the same, and the commission may, in its discretion, grant such permission, conditioned, however, upon the completion of the work of construction within a period to be designated by the commission in its order granting such permission.'

"SEC. 423. The first paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 424. The second paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(2)' at the beginning of such paragraph, and by striking out the last sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following as a new paragraph:

"'(3) All actions at law by carriers subject to this act for recovery of their charges, or any part thereof, shall be begun within three years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after. All complaints for the recovery of damages shall be filed with the commission within two years from the time the cause of action accrues, and not after, unless the carrier, after the expiration of such two years or within ninety days before such expiration, begins an action for recovery of charges in respect of the same service, in which case such period of two years shall be extended to and including ninety days from the time such action by the carrier is begun. In either case the cause of action in respect of a shipment of property shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to accrue upon delivery or tender of delivery thereof by the carrier, and not after. A petition for the enforcement of an order for the payment of money shall be filed in the district court or State court within one year from the date of the order, and not after.'

"SEC. 425. The third, fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(4)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, '(5)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph, '(6)' at the beginning of the fifth paragraph, and '(7)' at the beginning of the sixth paragraph.

"SEC. 426. The seventh paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(8) Any carrier, any officer, representative, or agent of a carrier, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, or agent of either of them, who knowingly fails or neglects to obey any order made under the provisions of sections 3, 13, or 15 of this act shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $5,000 for each offense. Every distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense.'

"SEC. 427. The eighth and ninth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(9)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph and '(10)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph.

"SEC. 428. The tenth paragraph of section 16 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(11) The commission may employ such attorneys as it finds necessary for proper legal aid and service of the commission or its members in the conduct of their work, or for proper representation of the public interests in investigations made by it or cases or proceedings pending before it, whether at the commission's own instance or upon complaint, or to appear for or represent the commission in any case in court; and the expenses of such employment shall be paid out of the appropriation for the commission.'

"SEC. 429. The eleventh and twelfth paragraphs of section 16 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(12)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph and '(13)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph.

"SEC. 430. Section 17 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph.

"SEC. 431. The second paragraph of section 17 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(2) The commission is hereby authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into as many divisions (each to consist of not less than three members) as it may deem necessary, which may be changed from time to time. Such divisions shall be denominated, respectively, division 1, division 2, etc. Any commissioner may be assigned to and may serve upon such division or divisions as the commission may direct, and the senior in service of the commissioners constituting any of said divisions shall act as chairman thereof. In case of vacancy in any division, or of absence or inability to serve thereon of any commissioner thereto assigned, the chairman of the commission or any commissioner designated by him for that purpose, may temporarily serve on said division until the commission shall otherwise order.'

"SEC. 432. The third and fourth paragraphs of section 17 of the interstate-commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph.

"The fifth and sixth paragraphs of such section are hereby repealed.

"The seventh paragraph of such section is hereby amended by inserting '(5)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"SEC. 433. Section 18 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, and '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph.

"Section 19a of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(a)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(b)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(c)' at the beginning of the seventh paragraph, '(d)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(e)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(f)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(g)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, '(h)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph, '(i)' at the beginning of the thirteenth paragraph, '(j)' at the beginning of the fourteenth paragraph, '(k)' at the beginning of the fifteenth paragraph, and '(l)' at the beginning of the sixteenth paragraph.

"SEC. 434. Section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(1)' after the section number at the beginning of the first paragraph, '(2)' at the beginning of the second paragraph, '(3)' at the beginning of the third paragraph, and '(4)' at the beginning of the fourth paragraph.

"SEC. 435. The fifth paragraph of section 20 of the interstate-commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(5) The commission may, in its discretion, prescribe the forms of any and all accounts, records, and memoranda to be kept by carriers subject to the provisions of this act, including the accounts, records, and memoranda of the movement of traffic, as well as of the receipts and expenditures of moneys. The commission shall, as soon as practicable, prescribe, for carriers subject to this act, the classes of property for which depreciation charges may properly be included under operating expenses, and the percentages of depreciation which shall be charged with respect to each of such classes of property, classifying the carriers as it may deem proper for this purpose. The commission may, when it deems necessary, modify the classes and percentages so prescribed. The carriers subject to this act shall not charge to operating expenses any depreciation charges on classes of property other than those prescribed by the commission, or charge with respect to any class of property a percentage of depreciation other than that prescribed therefor by the commission. No such carrier shall in any case include in any form under its operating or other expenses any depreciation or other charge or expenditure included elsewhere as a depreciation charge or otherwise under its operating or other expenses. The commission shall at all times have access to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by carriers subject to this act, and the provisions of this section respecting the preservation and destruction of books, papers, and documents shall apply thereto, and it shall be unlawful for such carriers to keep any other accounts, records, or memoranda than those prescribed or approved by the commission, and it may employ special agents or examiners, who shall have authority under the order of the commission to inspect and examine any and all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, and kept or required to be kept by such carriers. This provision shall apply to receivers of carriers and operating trustees. The provisions of this section shall also apply to all accounts, records, and memoranda, including all documents, papers, and correspondence now or hereafter existing, kept during the period of Federal control, and placed by the President in the custody of carriers subject to this act.'

"SEC. 436. The sixth paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting '(6)' at the beginning of such paragraph.

"The seventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by striking out 'Par. 7' at the beginning of such paragraph and inserting '(7)' in lieu thereof.

"The eighth to twelfth paragraphs, inclusive, of section 20 of the interstate commerce act are hereby amended by inserting '(8)' at the beginning of the eighth paragraph, '(9)' at the beginning of the ninth paragraph, '(10)' at the beginning of the tenth paragraph, '(11)' at the beginning of the eleventh paragraph, and '(12)' at the beginning of the twelfth paragraph.

"SEC. 437. The eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act is hereby amended by inserting immediately before the first proviso thereof the following:

"'Provided, That if the loss, damage, or injury occurs while the property is in the custody of a carrier by water the liability of such carrier shall be determined by and under the laws and regulations applicable to transportation by water, and the liability of the initial carrier shall be the same as that of such carrier by water.'

"SEC. 438. The third proviso of the eleventh paragraph of section 20 of the interstate commerce act (not counting the proviso added by section 437 of this act) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any such common carrier to provide by rule, contract, regulation, or otherwise a shorter period for giving notice of claims than 90 days, for the filing of claims than four months, and for the institution of suits than two years, such period for institution of suits to be computed from the day when notice in writing is given by the carrier to the claimant that the carrier has disallowed the claim or any part or parts thereof specified in the notice.'

"SEC. 439. The interstate commerce act is further amended by inserting therein a new section between section 20 and section 21, to be designated section 20a, and to read as follows:

"'SEC. 20a. (1) That as used in this section the term "carrier" means a common carrier by railroad (except a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway which is not operated as a part of a general steam railroad system of transportation) which is subject to this act, or any corporation organized for the purpose of engaging in transportation by railroad subject to this act.

"'(2) From and after 120 days after this section takes effect it shall be unlawful for any carrier to issue any share of capital stock or any bond or other evidence of interest in or indebtedness of the carrier (hereinafter in this section collectively termed "securities") or to assume any obligation or liability as lessor, lessee, guarantor, indorser, surety, or otherwise, in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, even though permitted by the authority creating the carrier corporation, unless and until, and then only to the extent that, upon application by the carrier, and after investigation by the commission of the purposes and uses of the proposed issue and the proceeds thereof, or of the proposed assumption of obligation or liability in respect of the securities of any other person, natural or artificial, the commission by order authorizes such issue or assumption. The commission shall make such order only if it finds that such issue or assumption (a) is for some lawful object within its corporate purposes and compatible with the public interest, which is necessary or appropriate for or consistent with the proper performance by the carrier of service to the public as a common carrier, and which will not impair its ability to perform that service, and (b) is reasonably necessary and appropriate for such purpose.

"'(3) The commission shall have power by its order to grant or deny the application as made, or to grant it in part and deny it in part, or to grant it with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as the commission may deem necessary or appropriate in the premises, and may from time to time, for good cause shown, make such supplemental orders in the premises as it may deem necessary or appropriate, and may by any such supplemental order modify the provisions of any previous order as to the particular purposes, uses, and extent to which, or the conditions under which, any securities so theretofore authorized or the proceeds thereof may be applied, subject always to the requirements of the foregoing paragraph (2).

"'(4) Every application for authority shall be made in such form and contain such matters as the commission may prescribe. Every such application, as also every certificate of notification hereinafter provided for, shall be made under oath, signed and filed on behalf of the carrier by its president, a vice president, auditor, comptroller, or other executive officer having knowledge of the matters therein set forth and duly designated for that purpose by the carrier.

"'(5) Whenever any securities set forth and described in any application for authority or certificate of notification as pledged or held unencumbered in the treasury of the carrier shall, subsequent to the filing of such application or certificate, be sold, pledged, repledged, or otherwise disposed of by the carrier, such carrier shall, within 10 days after such sale, pledge, repledge, or other disposition, file with the commission a certificate of notification to that effect, setting forth therein all such facts as may be required by the commission.

"'(6) Upon receipt of any such application for authority the commission shall cause notice thereof to be given to and a copy filed with the governor of each State in which the applicant carrier operates. The railroad commissions, public service or utilities commissions, or other appropriate State authorities of the State shall have the right to make before the commission such representations as they may deem just and proper for preserving and conserving the rights and interests of their people and the States, respectively, involved in such proceeding. The commission may hold hearings, if it sees fit, to enable it to determine its decision upon the application for authority.

"'(7) The jurisdiction conferred upon the commission by this section shall be exclusive and plenary, and a carrier may issue securities and assume obligations or liabilities in accordance with the provisions of this section without securing approval other than as specified herein.

"'(8) Nothing herein shall be construed to imply any guaranty or obligation as to such securities on the part of the United States.

"'(9) The foregoing provisions of this section shall not apply to notes to be issued by the carrier maturing not more than two years after the date thereof and aggregating (together with all other then outstanding notes of a maturity of two years or less) not more than 5 per cent of the par value of the securities of the carrier then outstanding. In the case of securities having no par value, the par value for the purposes of this paragraph shall be the fair market value as of the date of issue. Within 10 days after the making of such notes the carrier issuing the same shall file with the commission a certificate of notification, in such form as may from time to time be determined and prescribed by the commission, setting forth as nearly as may be the same matters as those required in respect of applications for authority to issue other securities: Provided, That in any subsequent funding of such notes the provisions of this section respecting other securities shall apply.

"'(10) The commission shall require periodical or special reports from each carrier hereafter issuing any securities, including such notes, which shall show, in such detail as the commission may require, the disposition made of such securities and the application of the proceeds thereof.

"'(11) Any security issued or any obligation or liability assumed by a carrier, for which under the provisions of this section the authorization of the commission is required, shall be void, if issued or assumed without such authorization therefor having first been obtained, or if issued or assumed contrary to any term or condition of such order of authorization as modified by any order supplemental thereto entered prior to such issuance or assumption; but no security issued or obligation or liability assumed in accordance with all the terms and conditions of such an order of authorization therefor as modified by any order supplemental thereto entered prior to such issuance or assumption, shall be rendered void because of failure to comply with any provision of this section relating to procedure and other matters preceding the entry of such order of authorization. If any security so made void or any security in respect to which the assumption of obligation or liability is so made void, is acquired by any person for value and in good faith and without notice that the issue or assumption is void, such person may in a suit or action in any court of competent jurisdiction hold jointly and severally liable for the full amount of the damage sustained by him in respect thereof, the carrier which issued the security so made void, or assumed the obligation or liability so made void, and its directors, officers, attorneys, and other agents, who participated in any way in the authorizing, issuing, hypothecating, or selling of the security so made void or in the authorizing of the assumption of the obligation or liability so made void. In case any security so made void was directly acquired from the carrier issuing it the holder may at his option rescind the transaction and upon the surrender of the security recover the consideration given therefor. Any director, officer, attorney, or agent of the carrier who knowingly assents to or concurs in any issue of securities or assumptions of obligation or liability forbidden by this section, or any sale or other disposition of securities contrary to the provisions of the commission's order or orders in the premises, or any application not authorized by the commission of the funds derived by the carrier through such sale or other disposition of such securities, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

"'(12) After December 31, 1921, it shall be unlawful for any person to hold the position of officer or director of more than one carrier, unless such holding shall have been authorized by order of the commission, upon due showing, in form and manner prescribed by the commission, that neither public nor private interests will be adversely affected thereby. After this section takes effect it shall be unlawful for any officer or director of any carrier to receive for his own benefit, directly or indirectly, any money or thing of value in respect of the negotiation, hypothecation, or sale of any securities issued or to be issued by such carrier, or to share in any of the proceeds thereof, or to participate in the making or paying of any dividends of an operating carrier from any funds properly included in capital account. Any violation of these provisions shall be a misdemeanor, and on conviction in any United States court having jurisdiction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than three years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.'

"SEC. 440. Section 24 of the interstate-commerce act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 24. That the commission is hereby enlarged so as to consist of 11 members, with terms of seven years, and each shall receive $12,000 compensation annually. The qualifications of the members and the manner of payment of their salaries shall be as already provided by law. Such enlargement of the commission shall be accomplished through appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of two additional Interstate Commerce Commissioners, one for a term expiring December 31, 1923, and one for a term expiring December 31, 1924. The terms of the present commissioners, or of any successor appointed to fill a vacancy caused by the death or resignation of any of the present commissioners, shall expire as heretofore provided by law. Their successors and the successors of the additional commissioners herein provided for shall be appointed for the full term of seven years, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Not more than six commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. Hereafter the salary of the secretary of the commission shall be $7,500 a year.'

"SEC. 441. The interstate-commerce act is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections, to read as follows:

"'SEC. 25. (1) That every common carrier by water in foreign commerce, whose vessels are registered under the laws of the United States, shall file with the commission, within 30 days after this section becomes effective and regularly thereafter as changes are made, a schedule or schedules showing for each of its steam vessels intended to load general cargo at ports in the United States for foreign destinations (a) the ports of loading, (b) the dates upon which such vessels will commence to receive freight and dates of sailing, (c) the route and itinerary such vessels will follow and the ports of call for which cargo will be carried.

"(2) Upon application of any shipper a carrier by railroad shall make request for, and the carrier by water shall upon receipt of such request name, a specific rate applying for such sailing, and upon such commodity as shall be embraced in the inquiry, and shall name in connection with such rate, port charges, if any, which accrue in addition to the vessel's rates and are not otherwise published by the railway as in addition to or absorbed in the railway rate. Vessel rates, if conditioned upon quantity of shipment, must be so stated and separate rates may be provided for carload and less than carload shipments. The carrier by water, upon advices from a carrier by railroad, stating that the quoted rate is firmly accepted as applying upon a specifically named quantity of any commodity, shall, subject to such conditions as the commission by regulation may prescribe, make firm reservation from unsold space in such steam vessel as shall be required for its transportation and shall so advise the carrier by railroad, in which advices shall be included the latest available information as to prospective sailing date of such vessel.

"(3) As the matters so required to be stated in such schedule or schedules are changed or modified from time to time, the carrier shall file with the commission such changes or modifications as early as practicable after such modification is ascertained. The commission is authorized to make and publish regulations not inconsistent herewith governing the manner and form in which such carriers are to comply with the foregoing provisions. The commission shall cause to be published in compact form, for the information of shippers of commodities throughout the country, the substance of such schedules, and furnish such publications to all railway carriers subject to this act, in such quantities that railway carriers may supply to each of their agents who receive commodities for shipment in such cities and towns as may be specified by the commission, a copy of said publication; the intent being that each shipping community sufficiently important, from the standpoint of the export trade, to be so specified by the commission shall have opportunity to know the sailings and routes, and to ascertain the transportation charges of such vessels engaged in foreign commerce. Each railway carrier to which such publication is furnished by the commission is hereby required to distribute the same as aforesaid and to maintain such publication as it is issued from time to time, in the hands of its agents. The commission is authorized to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith respecting the distribution and maintenance of such publications in the several communities so specified as will further the intent of this section.

"(4) When any consignor delivers a shipment of property to any of the places so specified by the commission, to be delivered by a railway carrier to one of the vessels upon which space has been reserved at a specified rate previously ascertained, as provided herein, for the transportation by water from and for a port named in the aforesaid schedule, the railway carrier shall issue a through bill of lading to the point of destination. Such bill of lading shall name separately the charge to be paid for the railway transportation, water transportation, and port charges, if any, not included in the rail or water transportation charge; but the carrier by railroad shall not be liable to the consignor, consignee, or other person interested in the shipment after its delivery to the vessel. The commission shall, in such manner as will preserve for the carrier by water the protection of limited liability provided by law, make such rules and regulations not inconsistent herewith as will prescribe the form of such through bill of lading. In all such cases it shall be the duty of the carrier by railroad to deliver such shipment to the vessel as a part of its undertaking as a common carrier.

"(5) The issuance of a through bill of lading covering shipments provided for herein shall not be held to constitute "an arrangement for continuous carriage or shipment" within the meaning of this act.

"SEC. 26. That the commission may, after investigation, order any carrier by railroad subject to this act, within a time specified in the order, to install automatic train-stop or train-control devices or other safety devices, which comply with specifications and requirements prescribed by the commission, upon the whole or any part of its railroad, such order to be issued and published at least two years before the date specified for its fulfillment: Provided, That a carrier shall not be held to be negligent because of its failure to install such devices upon a portion of its railroad not included in the order; and any action arising because of an accident happening upon such portion of its railroad shall be determined without consideration of the use of such devices upon another portion of its railroad. Any common carrier which refuses or neglects to comply with any order of the commission made under the authority conferred by this section shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each day that such refusal or neglect continues, which shall accrue to the United States, and may be recovered in a civil action brought by the United States.

"SEC. 27. That this act may be cited as the "interstate commerce act."

"TITLE V.—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

"SEC. 500. It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote, encourage, and develop water transportation, service, and facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, and to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation.

"It shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, with the object of promoting, encouraging, and developing inland waterway transportation facilities in connection with the commerce of the United States, to investigate the appropriate types of boats suitable for different classes of such waterways; to investigate the subject of water terminals, both for inland waterway traffic and for through traffic by water and rail, including the necessary docks, warehouses, apparatus, equipment, and appliances in connection therewith, and also railroad spurs and switches connecting with such terminals, with a view to devising the types most appropriate for different locations, and for the more expeditious and economical transfer or interchange of passengers or property between carriers by water and carriers by rail; to advise with communities, cities, and towns regarding the appropriate location of such terminals, and to cooperate with them in the preparation of plans for suitable terminal facilities; to investigate the existing status of water transportation upon the different inland waterways of the country, with a view to determining whether such waterways are being utilized to the extent of their capacity, and to what extent they are meeting the demands of traffic, and whether the water carriers utilizing such waterways are interchanging traffic with the railroads; and to investigate any other matter that may tend to promote and encourage inland water transportation. It shall also be the province and duty of the Secretary of War to compile, publish, and distribute, from time to time, such useful statistics, data, and information concerning transportation on inland waterways as he may deem to be of value to the commercial interests of the country.

"The words 'inland waterway' as used in this section shall be construed to include the Great Lakes.

"SEC. 501. The effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to January 1, 1921: Provided, That such extension shall not apply in the case of any corporation organized after January 12, 1918.

"SEC. 502. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder of the act, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment has been rendered."

And the Senate agree to the same.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KING. As in open executive session, I offer a proposed amendment to the resolution of ratification of the German peace treaty, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The proposed amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The United States understands that by article 10 the United States undertakes separately to respect the territorial integrity and existing political independence of each other member of the league, but that article 10 does not impose upon the United States the separate, sole, and singular duty to preserve the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league as against the external aggression of the other powers; but only that in case of such aggression or threat of the same the council will advise upon the means for preserving the territorial integrity and existing political independence of the member against which such aggression is exerted, and will recommend to members of the league the measures which it may deem proper and necessary to protect the covenants of the league, and that the United States may consider such recommendations and take such action as Congress may in its discretion deem appropriate in such case.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 12467. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill 12046, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that we may omit the formal reading of the bill, that the bill may be read for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Council of National Defense," on page 2, line 14, after the word "supplies," to strike out "including law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals"; in line 15, after the word "travel," to strike out "including the expenses of members of the advisory commission, or subordinate bodies or other employees going to and attending meetings of the advisory commission or subordinate bodies"; and in line 20, after the words "Printing Office," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of the Council of National Defense; for the employment of a director, secretary, chief clerk, and other expert, clerical, and other assistance; equipment and supplies; and printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office, $40,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in reference to the item for the Council of National Defense. Is not that work a mere duplication of work in other departments? As I understand, at the present time it is engaged purely in gathering together statistics and has no other purpose. Why should we not carry that in this bill and not have the work done by other departments of the Government?

Mr. WARREN. Possibly, what the Senator from Tennessee says may be true eventually, but at the present time there are unfinished matters before the council which should be finished. If the Senator will notice, the committee has reported to reduce the amount of the appropriation. The council asked for $150,000; that was the estimate; the other House allowed $50,000, and the Senate committee has recommended that the amount be reduced to $40,000. Furthermore, the committee has recommended the elimination of many of the items to which the appropriation may be applied, so that it shall extend only to the routine business until matters are finished. For instance, in connection with the affairs of the publicity bureau, the so-called Creel bureau, Mr. Ellsworth, of the council, states that there are sums to be paid and sums yet to be collected. So the committee has seen fit to allow $40,000 as a sum which is necessary to be appropriated now, whatever may become of the National Defense Council finally as an organization.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I see this appropriation also carries the privilege of having printing and binding done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thought we were going to stop that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Georgia that we are trying to stop as much of it as we can; but the law which appropriated the money for the settlement of the affairs of the publicity bureau—the so-called Creel bureau—provided that it should be done in a certain way. Not only that, but the reports of the Council of National Defense, if we are going to get anything out of them, have got to be printed. If we do not wish to print them, then let us knock out this $40,000 entirely.

While I am on my feet, I wish to express the hope that this may be the last request that will ever be made for an appropriation for the Council of National Defense.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ought we not, at least, to limit the amount of the printing? If we turn them loose to print all they please at the Government Printing Office at the expense of the Government, how can we hope to avoid the evils which the Senator from Utah has been presenting to the attention of the Senate from time to time in the past?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that under the $40,000 appropriation that can not be done, because the first requirement will be the payment of the salaries of the employees of the National Council of Defense; and I say that that is going to take most of the $40,000. That is why we cut the appropriation down to $40,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But they do not pay anything for the printing at the Government Printing Office, do they?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; it comes out of the $40,000, just the same as all other departments pay the Printing Office for the amount of printing done. In this case, the printing will come out of the $40,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask another question about this matter. This item provides an appropriation of $40,000 for expenses, and also "for the employment of a director, secretary, chief clerk, and other expert, clerical, and other assistance." Manifestly that amount will not do anything more than pay the salaries and keep certain men on the pay roll. I understand the council originally asked for $150,000, but that has now been reduced to an amount sufficient to keep these men in the Government employ at probably fairly good salaries under the circumstances. I think the appropriation ought to be eliminated entirely. I am advised—I do not know how accurately, and I am not willing to say how accurately, because I do not myself know—that, as a matter of fact, the work that is being done by these men is a duplication of work which is done in other departments. I think the Senator from Utah will probably know whether or not that is correct, and I should like for him to state to the Senate whether or not it is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say as to the work of the Council of National Defense from now on that the remaining employees under that organization are doing work that no other department is doing. It is a summary of the work that has already been done. The reports are to be printed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have noticed their printed report, and it seems to me to be largely a duplication of what is found in reports of other departments. I think the appropriation is unnecessary, and I hope it will be defeated. Indeed, in order to see whether we are going to have economy, I move to strike it out entirely, if that be now in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator makes that motion I desire to say one other word. I am rather inclined to sympathize with the Senator's views; but if we strike this appropriation out entirely, what is to become of the winding up of the affairs of the publicity bureau which this council has in hand at the present time?

Mr. McKELLAR. Under the law that now exists the President has ample authority to turn that bureau over to other bureaus. There is no trouble about it in the least. He may transfer that bureau to other departments to which it ought to be transferred.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish I thought that that were possible.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator knows that the Overman Act, which is still in existence, provides that that may be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of the existence of that act.

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no doubt in the world about the President's authority.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me the other departments to which the work of that bureau might be transferred would immediately apply to Congress for additional employees, for they do not now have the work in hand, and it would involve a greater expense than to make this appropriation for the completion of the work of the bureau, which I think Congress agrees should be completed.

Mr. McKELLAR. All I have to say in answer to that is that if that argument were used at each successive Congress we should have these bureaus until the end of time.

Mr. SMOOT. I have expressed the hope that this would be the last appropriation that would ever be made for the Council of National Defense.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope this item will not be stricken out. The Council of National Defense is provided for by law, and we are proceeding under the law in proposing this appropriation of $40,000 for the work of the council up to the 30th of June next. As to future appropriations, that is a matter which rests, of course, with Congress; but if the council is to be discontinued there must be a change in the law, for, as I have said, it is now provided for by law.

The Secretary of War expressed anxiety enough about this matter to appear before the House committee to supplement the statements of those connected directly with the council, and there are in the hearings many pages setting forth the reasons why the appropriation should be made. Furthermore, the Secretary of War requested that he might come before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and when he appeared before the subcommittee this was the only item that he wished to bring to our attention, as he considered the other matters of less importance.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield there, do I understand the Senator to say that if this item is agreed to as it appears in its amended form there will be no more appropriations for succeeding years? If I do so understand, I am perfectly willing that the matter shall take that course. I am willing to make any sort of an arrangement that will effectually do away with this service, which is merely, I repeat, a duplication of the work of other departments, in my judgment.

Mr. WARREN. I do not say that it is a mere matter of carrying it on until then, for if the existing law is not repealed, there will be other appropriations made necessary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that I hope the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will not make the promise that is now asked of him.

Mr. WARREN. I have no intention of doing so.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Because the Council of National Defense proved itself of great use during the war in getting together statistics that were availed of by all of the bureaus of the War Department. I do not think it ought to be abolished; I think it ought to be retained as a permanent institution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what the law is to which he refers?

Mr. WARREN. Just a moment; I was about to tell the Senator, and I will do so now. The Council of National Defense was created in the Army appropriation bill of 1916, and the most excellent chairman of the committee at that time has alluded to the value of the services rendered by it. It is an advisory board, composed of six members of the Cabinet. The law also authorizes the President upon recommendation to appoint an advisory commission designed to bring into the service of the Government, on a volunteer basis, six or seven men of great distinction and expertness in the industrial and commercial activities of the country, so that the advice of men of affairs may be brought to the aid of the council and be made available to the Government. The council brings together the War, Navy, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, and Labor Departments. As the Senator from Nebraska is aware, the chairman of the council is the Secretary of War, and other members of the Cabinet are members. The council also has a director and a corps of assistants.

The matter to which I referred a moment ago in regard to winding up the affairs of the so-called Creel bureau is in charge of a Mr. Ellsworth, who is the assistant director. Since he has taken hold of that work he has turned into the Treasury, in the first place, a million dollars, and since then something over $300,000, and there is possibly as much more in the way of unsettled accounts which, while it may not be turned into the Treasury, will at least be collected and used to pay such obligations as may exist.

Instead of the $150,000 asked for and the $50,000 allowed by the House, the Senate Committee on Appropriations recommends an appropriation of $40,000, and the items to which that amount shall be applied have been restricted as closely as the subcommittee and later the full committee thought it was proper to do.

As to the future of this council, it is a matter for Congress to decide whether it shall or shall not be continued. This appropriation has nothing whatsoever to do with that feature of the question, and is designed merely to furnish the small sum which will be necessary to conduct its business from now until the 30th day of June.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The 30th day of next June?

Mr. WARREN. The 30th day of next June.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator what force the Council of National Defense now employs? What does the pay roll amount to?

Mr. WARREN. I have not the pay roll before me, but I think it can be procured for the Senator in a moment. The council has a director, an assistant director, and the usual quota of stenographers and clerks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I must confess that my impression was that the Council of National Defense was only to exist during the emergency with which the country was then confronted.

Mr. WARREN. That was not the intention of the law. However, I shall see if I can answer the Senator's inquiry. In connection with the estimate of $150,000, the question was asked—

How much a force have you now?

The reply was "63 all together."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That strikes me as a great extravagance. I can not see any possible use for that number of employees on the pay roll of the Council of National Defense. I do not know anybody who reads their reports, and, while it may be desirable to keep a small organization together for the sake of coordinating the work of various departments of the Government, there certainly is no use for keeping in existence a great bureau like that with 63 people employed.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say that during the war the employees of the Council of National Defense amounted to 295, but the number has been reduced, and under the appropriation which the committee has allowed they will not be able to retain 63, but only a portion of that number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What number can be kept under the appropriation proposed by the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that I am prepared to answer the question specifically, because I do not know just how extensive the duties devolved upon the council are and what inquiries they receive.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state how he arrives at the figures $40,000? I should like to know how it is proposed to spend the money.

Mr. WARREN. The way it is arrived at is this: As I have stated to the Senator, an estimate was submitted in the regular way for $150,000. The House thought $50,000 would be sufficient, and the Senate committee, after a hearing and examining the list of employees, believed that the council could pull through with $40,000. In the meantime it is presumed that this matter will be taken up in connection with other legislation and properly provided for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In fixing $40,000 there must have been some estimate that the committee made in order to arrive at that conclusion. How many employees are provided for in the estimate?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, Mr. President, in that case it is necessary to know the salary each employee receives and what the contingent expenses are. That is a refinement of analysis that no committee of the Senate can possibly have the time to make, for we have to consider hundreds of subjects. We sometimes have to make assumptions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the committee thought that $150,000 was altogether too much money to appropriate for the Council of National Defense up to June 30 of this year. The council has 63 employees at this time. The duties required of the council ought to be completed by one-third the number of employees now on the roll of the council, or by slightly more than 20 employees. The payments to the twenty-odd employees until June 30 and the estimate as to the amount of printing that will be required do not exceed $40,000, and therefore the committee agreed upon $40,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us what salary the director receives?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the figures before me, but it would not surprise me if his salary were $10,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that in the case of the director of a bureau expending $40,000 and employing twenty-odd clerks the payment of that much salary is rather topheavy?

Mr. SMOOT. I will remind the Senator that this is a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator another question. As I recall the act authorizing the creation of the Council of National Defense, it provides that it must be a voluntary association. Can the Senator give the number of volunteers now connected with the council? If the act provides that the services shall be voluntary, or largely so, what I want to know is how many are on the pay roll and how many are volunteers?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the only volunteers are the Cabinet appointments, including the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and, if I remember correctly, the Secretary of Labor. Of course, they are not paid for their services in connection with the work of the Council of National Defense; but they are not the men who do the work; the men who do the actual work, as enumerated in the amendment, are the director, the secretary, the chief clerk, and other expert and clerical assistants. They have always drawn salaries, and are doing so now.

Mr. McKELLAR. My judgment is that this item should go out and that the business of the council should be closed.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say, on the matter of salary, that while it may have been $10,000 during the war, my understanding is that it is less than that sum at the present time.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say it was $10,000. I only expressed the opinion, because that was the salary that has been paid to the directors of nearly all the small bureaus that have been created.

Mr. McKELLAR. Who fixes the salary, and at what figure is it fixed?

Mr. WARREN. We have sent for the act that was passed, to show what the salary is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then it is not left to the people in charge to fix their own salaries?

Mr. WARREN. We shall determine that when we get the law.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I should like to know if the appropriation at the top of page 2, the first item on the page, is for the payment of the expenses of the commission which has been sitting in this city for the purpose of adjusting the wages of coal miners?

Mr. WARREN. I understand this to be for the commission that is now in charge of the affairs that have been submitted to them by the President.

Mr. MYERS. That item is for the payment of the expenses of that commission?

Mr. WARREN. I so understand.

Mr. MYERS. Is there any item in the bill for the payment of the expenses of the first industrial conference, so-called, which sat here last fall during the steel strike, and accomplished nothing?

Mr. WARREN. An appropriation was asked for, and one was made. Whether or not that is sufficient, we have not yet been informed.

Mr. MYERS. Is there any item in this bill for the further payment of the expenses of that conference?

Mr. WARREN. There is not.

Mr. MYERS. Is there any item in this bill for the payment of the expenses of the second industrial conference which is now sitting in the city to consider every dispute between labor and capital?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that there is. We shall come to that in a little while.

Mr. MYERS. I am opposed to these numerous commissions and conferences to discuss every dispute between labor and capital. I think they only encourage strikes. I am sure the commission which is now sitting, the expenses of which this item is intended to pay, will decree a further increase in the wages of coal miners, over and above the 14 per cent which has already been allowed them, and all of which, there is evidence to show, is now coming out of the public. I think it was a foregone conclusion when this commission met that it would grant a still further increase, and the public will have to bear that, and I think these numerous commissions to arbitrate every dispute about wages simply encourage workmen to strike. I think they reason in this way: "We will go on a strike, and it will be referred to some Government commission. The Government will interfere, and appoint a commission to arbitrate the matter, and if we do not get all that we demand, still we will get a part of it"; and it comes out of the public, invariably.

I am not in favor of the plan, but I simply ask for information as to the nature of the item.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I agree with many things he has said regarding these commissions. Of course, it becomes the duty of the Appropriations Committee under the law to recommend appropriations when requested by the proper departments, if the committee thinks the appropriations should be made. In fact, it is a duty. There must be some very good reason why they do not do it if they do their duty.

As to the first commission, they asked for some two hundred and odd thousand dollars. We provided in an appropriation bill for some sixty or seventy thousand dollars, but all of it was not used, and we have provided no more in this bill for that commission.

As to the second industrial conference, the House put in a matter, as I remember, of some $20,000. It was stricken out on a point of order, and we have not reinstated it, so that it is not contained in this bill.

As to the coal matter, I think the Senator is right. I think the 14 per cent, and perhaps more, will be paid by the Senator and by me and others who have to buy coal; but here is a commission appointed in due course by the President of the United States. They are honorable gentlemen—at least, we have no reason to doubt it—they are tendering their services, and it would seem that we must in this case provide some compensation, at least, for their clerks and their other incidental expenses.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator for his information. I just wanted to be informed.

I said a minute ago that I did not think the first industrial conference, which assembled here last fall, resulted in anything; but I will correct that. I think it did have one result. I think it resulted in the steel strike, which was then in existence, being prolonged very much longer than it would have lasted if that industrial conference had not assembled.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I presume that there is an obligation upon the Senate to appropriate this money for the expenses of this commission which was created by the President under the authority of the Lever Act. I have no confidence in this commission, in the results which it will obtain.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. Is not the Senator confident that it will result in an increase of wages which the public will have to bear?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not prepared at the present time to make that statement, but I feel that the interests of the public are not being conserved by this commission. I feel that the commission was constituted to settle a wage dispute between the miners and the operators, and that they are devoting their attention to that problem, and that the interests of the public at the present time are not being considered by the commission.

When the commission was constituted, the President in his letter, I think to the miners, stated that the 14 per cent advance recommended by Dr. Garfield should be borne by the operators; that the public should not be compelled to pay an increased price for their coal. That statement was reinforced by the statement of Dr. Garfield, and further by the statement of the Attorney General in a telegram which was not sent to the head of the miners' union, but which appeared in the hearings before a subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee, in which the Attorney General stated that the 14 per cent was to be borne by the operators. Now, testimony yesterday given by the public-service corporations of the United States showed that 80 per cent of the bituminous coal consumed in the country is under contract, and that in all of the contracts there is a labor provision which provides for an increased price of coal should the wages of the miners be increased, and, therefore, automatically the increase of 14 per cent imposed upon these public-service corporations a burden of 80 per cent of $170,000,000 added to the cost of the commodity. This is on top of $450,000,000 added to the cost of the commodity during the war by reason of the 58 per cent added to the wages of the miners by Dr. Garfield in his so-called Washington agreement.

The public at the present time is under the impression, by reason of these public statements, that the operators are going to bear this 14 per cent advance; but that is an erroneous and an inaccurate and an untruthful statement, because at the present time the public-service corporations are paying it, and indirectly, through them, the consumers, because they must increase the price of electricity, of gas, and of transportation by reason of the increased cost of the coal which they consume.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it not true that the operators likewise agreed with the statement that the 14 per cent increase would be absorbed by them and not passed on to the public?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I so read the statement made by the operators in accepting the terms laid down by Dr. Garfield in their answer, which I think was addressed to the President.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I so understand their statement myself; so is not this the situation—that every party to the settlement which resulted in setting up this commission agreed upon the proposition that the 14 per cent increase would be absorbed by the operators, the operators being a party to that agreement. And if the 14 per cent increase is now being passed on to the public, as charged by the Senator, and as I believe is true, because I think the Senator's information is correct, is it not true that the operators are breaching their agreement? And is it fair in any wise to blame the commission that is investigating the subject for that situation? Is it not rather fair to assume that the commission, having before it the agreement of the operators that they will not pass on the 14 per cent, in the settlement will require the operators to carry the 14 per cent?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is quite true that there is an obligation upon the operators to pay this advance, but on the face of the contracts already made with the public-service corporations they are imposing it upon the public-service corporations and the consumers. The commission which is investigating the wage question, with powers to increase or decrease the wages, or readjust them, has the power to impose an additional burden on the public, but it has not the power to bring relief to the consumers by compelling the operators to assume this burden, and that is why I am complaining of the one-sidedness of this matter. At the present time there is no Fuel Administrator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. When I finish my statement I shall be very glad to yield. Before Dr. Garfield's resignation certain of his powers were transferred to the Director General of Railroads, but those powers were limited to the distribution of coal. Other powers were transferred to this commission to settle the wage dispute; but as to the power of readjusting this question, of compelling the operators to assume that burden, and giving the public-service corporations a ruling to the effect that they had a right to protest and compel the operators to assume this added cost, there is no power in the Government at the present time, except in the President of the United States, to correct that injustice against the public until and unless the President sees fit to appoint a fuel administrator to act in that capacity or acts himself.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator that his exception answers all that he has said. It is true that if this commission determines that the increased wage cost shall be borne by the operators, there is power to-day to see to it that that settlement, if not voluntarily accepted by the coal operators, as I believe perhaps they agreed in advance to accept it, shall be accepted by compulsion as long as the Lever Act is in effect. Therefore, why does the Senator say that this commission can do nothing but pass a burden on to the public, and has no power and there is no power anywhere in the Government to relieve the public from undue burdens?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is power in the President's hands, or in the hands of an agent appointed by him.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why does the Senator assume that if a wrong is being done to the public by the coal operators the President of the United States will not call forth his power and correct the wrong? The Senator is rather in advance of the time. He does not know what will be done. He is assuming the worst. He is assuming that the President will not do his duty in the situation and will not transfer the power to those who can effectively correct the wrong.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not running in advance of the times. The Senator himself is. The burden is imposed upon the public. Three months have transpired, and the public is bearing the burden. At the present time there is no relief in sight, and there has been no power conferred upon any agency of the Government by the President or anyone else to relieve the public, and this commission has not the power.

I simply rose to make a protest against this kind of a commission. While I am going to vote for this item, because I intend to support the committee, I believe that the proper method to be pursued in order to give justice would have been to appoint an impartial commission, not connected with the industry, composed of men who could administer justice to the public as well as to the miners and the operators, a commission like the Gray commission, with which the Senator probably is familiar, which made a study of the anthracite problem, which composed those differences, and which has resulted in industrial peace in the anthracite region ever since, instead of a commission composed of operators and miners, who sit down in agreement and between themselves arrange to increase the wages without giving the public hearings.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator wants to be fair. He describes this commission as composed of miners and operators. Is not the Senator aware of the fact that there is a representative of the public on the commission, who is in no wise connected with the coal industry? If that be true, why does the Senator state that this is a commission set up by miners and operators alone, people who are interested only—the one in securing bigger profits out of the public and the other in securing bigger wages? There is a representative of the public on the commission.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is a so-called representative of the public on the commission, it is true; but the very fact that there is $170,000,000 imposed upon the public to-day in the way of increased cost of coal, and the public believe that the operators are paying it, and this commission has no power to compel the operators to pay it, shows that the public are not being served by that commission.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator a question. He is familiar with this subject. Is there not some committee of the Senate now investigating the coal situation or the coal strike under a resolution passed by the Senate?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The coal situation, but not the coal strike.

Mr. HARRISON. It was some months ago, as I recall, when the resolution was passed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Who is chairman of that committee?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am.

Mr. HARRISON. Has there been any report made to the Senate?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Not yet. The committee is continuing hearings, and only yesterday developed the fact that notwithstanding the public statement of the President and Dr. Garfield and the Attorney General that the 14 per cent was to be borne by the operators, the public-service corporations and indirectly through them the people were bearing the increased cost by reason of the nature of the contracts that the operators have with the public-service corporations.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator give us any idea when that committee will make a report?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I can not. We have some investigations yet to make in the anthracite fields, and we also have the question of considering recommendations to Congress for legislation which we hope will relieve many of the problems that now exist.

The committee has been continuously conducting hearings, and I believe that they accomplished something in cooperating with the Director General in relieving the car shortage in the fall, which I think resulted in an increased supply of coal which tided us over the one month of the strike. The committee will be able to report, I hope, within a month.

There are other subjects which the committee wish to take up. We suspended our hearings owing to the fact that members of the committee were engaged on other important committees, but we resumed them yesterday and contemplate completing them and making a report to Congress.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question in the nature of a suggestion?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am very glad to do so.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator and to the committee of which he is chairman that if the coal operators have added the 14 per cent to the selling price, there is such a combination manifest upon its face that it would seem that they were violating the terms of the Sherman antitrust law. I think it would be a good idea for the chairman of the committee to challenge the attention of the Department of Justice to this apparent violation of law and have some of the coal operators indicted. They ought to be prosecuted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee by what authority this commission created a deficit of $40,000? They knew, as I understand, the limit of the appropriation which was carried by the general appropriation act to take care of the commission until the 30th of June, 1920. If, in the teeth of the law, they incurred a deficit, it would seem as if somebody was liable to punishment, as many other officials of the Government are who, in the face of the statute, create large deficits.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's inquiry is a very pertinent one, and could be made with reference to almost any item. This item, however, was created in this way: We made no appropriation in 1919 except to reappropriate what had been appropriated the year before and what they had not expended. That was not sufficient, of course, to carry them through this year, and it requires this much, as we believe, in order to carry the commission to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. KING. Did the committee understand, when they reappropriated the amount to which the Senator refers, that that amount would be inadequate to carry the commission through until the close of the fiscal year?

Mr. WARREN. It was not considered as to sufficiency, because it was there and reappropriated, assuming that it would go as far as it could. As the Senator knows, during these war times we have been besieged with a constant flow of deficiencies, some of them perhaps erroneous, but most of them created in a natural way. We believed, of course, that they would cut down, and they have cut down, from 295 employees to 63 employees. So we simply reappropriated that sum, which otherwise would have gone back into the Treasury and left them without funds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the chairman state whether he has received any information with reference to the salaries connected with this commission? For instance, how much is the salary of the director?

Mr. WARREN. The members of the council draw no salary.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, but I am speaking of the director.

Mr. WARREN. The director during the heavy press has had $200 a week.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is $10,400 a year.

Mr. WARREN. The clerks have had from $3,000 down through the usual civil-service payments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the director receive the same salary since the war is over?

Mr. WARREN. I can not tell the Senator what his salary is at the present moment, but I understand it has been cut down. Of course, it is from a lump-sum appropriation, as the Senator knows.

Mr. McKELLAR. My understanding is that it is $10,400 a year. It does seem to me that it is not proper to fix a salary like that out of a lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator must not overlook the fact that we were asked for $150,000, of which we are only giving $40,000, or about one-fourth the amount requested. The Senator must see that they had to be cut down in order to exist.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," subhead "Public schools," on page 2, line 23, after the word "from," to strike out "February" and insert "March," so as to make the clause read:

Teachers: For 68 teachers from March 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, at minimum rates of salary, as follows.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if in the general appropriation act which carried the appropriations for the District for educational purposes there was not appropriated the required amount to take care of the schools for the current year?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that the committee did not give the amount asked for nor did it give them the number of teachers that were asked for. Furthermore, from our best information, the necessities are for more teachers than they asked for and more than they have had. They now ask for 139 teachers in addition to the present force, and we are giving them 68, which I think is entirely proper. We took out the word "February" and inserted the word "March," because the month of February is nearly past.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry regarding this item. I notice that the appropriation is reduced on page 3, in the next committee amendment which we will take up, from $28,966.67 to $23,173.33. I take it that is because the month of February was stricken out of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the chairman to say that there had been a request for a good many more teachers than the committee allowed.

Mr. WARREN. More than the committee on the House side allowed, and the Senate committee did not consider it proper at this time to increase the number beyond what the House had provided.

Mr. HARRISON. I have just read the hearings before the Senate committee, and I do not find there that a representative of the school system of the District was before the Senate committee.

Mr. WARREN. We had no one from the District of Columbia before the committee on that and other items, because they were all heard before the House committee quite extensively. In fact, no one asked us for a hearing regarding the District of Columbia items. It was the conclusion of the Senate committee to abide by what the House had done. The cutting down of the amount of money, as the Senator will readily perceive, is simply cutting off the one month.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I thought. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if there was any increase in the salary of teachers in the District of Columbia during the last year?

Mr. WARREN. There was last year.

Mr. HARRISON. How much?

Mr. WARREN. I can turn to the law and ascertain.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to get from the committee information as to just what increase the teachers have had in the last two or three years. Has the increase been proportionately as large as to Government employees generally?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the increase to the teachers of the District of Columbia was larger than the bonus given to Government employees, particularly as to the lower-salaried teachers in the District. In fact some of the lower-salaried teachers were raised as much, I think, as 50 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. The increase was extended to 1,986 teachers, and the amount of the increase was $189,010.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason that prompted me to ask the question is that I have noticed that the superintendent of schools in this city is making speeches all the time before great crowds and complaining about the lack of teachers in the city of Washington and the small pay of teachers in this city. If the condition he depicts is true Congress ought to remedy the situation.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I shall give him the amount of the increases extended to the teachers. The thousand-dollar teachers were given $1,060; the nine-hundred-and-fifty-dollar teachers were increased to $1,000; those at $800 to $900; class 3 and class 2 from $750 to $800; class 1 from $750 to $850. The special beginner teachers were increased from $800 to $900.

Mr. HARRISON. That was for last year, if I understood the Senator correctly?

Mr. WARREN. It was in last year's appropriation act for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Utah stated that in some instances the increase has been as large as 50 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. That only applied to the low-salaried teachers.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the information of the chairman of the committee as to whether there is a sufficient number of teachers in the District of Columbia to adequately take care of the situation?

Mr. WARREN. First, I wish to say that they have asked for higher salaries, and that matter is being considered by the proper subcommittee of the House in the annual appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1921. Perhaps I might read a few words from Mr. Thurston's testimony before the House committee on the subject about which the Senator has made inquiry:

The CHAIRMAN. I had supposed that you were more crowded for building facilities than for teachers.

This was where they were asking for an increased number of teachers.

Mr. THURSTON. We are crowded, and the only way we can take care of these classes is by early and late hours.

He had mentioned those we had provided teachers for.

We can begin early in the morning and let some of the students have their instruction and then have others come in and have the use of the classrooms for recitation purposes; by that means we get the use of certain classrooms for an additional number of pupils, and it enables us to extend the use of our laboratories, auditoriums, and facilities of that kind. Of course, when we go on those shifts we, so far as possible, cut out the study hours; the student studies more outside and he gets just as much instruction under that plan as he gets under the other. We do everything to save space or increase the space we can use.

All those matters are being considered in the forthcoming annual bill.

Mr. HARRISON. There is an item on page 3 of the bill providing for 16 teachers at a thousand dollars each. That means at the rate of a thousand dollars a session?

Mr. WARREN. It means a thousand dollars per annum.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, that means nine months, and they have the other three months in which to do whatever they desire.

Mr. WARREN. It means 10 months subject to vacation. It means that January and February have passed and there are 10 months for which they will receive the pay, unless there is some deduction for lost time.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand it is in that proportion.

Mr. WARREN. Yes, and they are allowed that salary, which was increased in the last bill, as I informed the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to inquire of the chairman with reference to "two principals of junior high schools, at $2,500 each." Then the bill provides:

Group A of class 6, 25 at $1,060 each.

Then classes 5, 4, 2, and 1 are provided for. What are the requisites for each particular class?

Mr. WARREN. The teachers are supposed to be classed according to their education and ability. Furthermore, they are classed as to the kind of students they have. As the Senator well knows, the proper teachers are selected to instruct the students in the kindergarten class and up through the grades of the schools. Teachers with lesser education, perhaps, though with special training, go to the kindergarten classes and the ones of higher education to the high schools, and so forth.

Mr. HARRISON. What is there in the assertion that many of the school-teachers, because of lack of pay, are resigning positions, and there is now a shortage of school-teachers in the District, and the children are suffering thereby?

Mr. WARREN. That is true in all Government lines. The teachers, the dear things, will get married when they have an opportunity, as they ought to do, and sometimes they get better compensation in other lines. That is a matter of flow, like the waters that flow down under the bridge. We can not stop it. It is not a matter of salaries.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the chairman of the committee that this matter has been called to my attention because of personal contact in that I have several children going to school. I notice that very often in the wintertime the children go to school, and when they get to the school they find that, either because they have no janitor or the janitor has not performed his duties, the building is not properly heated, or it may be because the building is not so that it can be heated properly. The children are sent back home, oftentimes trudging through the snow, and they are told to report back at a certain time in the afternoon.

Can the Senator give us any information with reference to who is at fault about that matter? Have any complaints of that kind come to his attention?

Mr. WARREN. Sometimes it may be the striking coal miners and shortage of coal. It may be that occasionally they may have a janitor who for a day or so may not be attentive. We hope that with certain legislation which has been had of a restrictive nature in the last year there will be fewer intervals of nonattention on the part of employees. I think there is no unusual lack of attention such as the Senator mentions.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think the Senator from Wyoming can lay that fact to the coal miners. It might be that they can truthfully be charged with a great deal, but I can not believe, with inefficient service or bad buildings here in the city that can not be properly heated, that the coal miners can be justly charged with that condition.

Mr. WARREN. Possibly not.

Mr. HARRISON. Something is wrong.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator knows that we have had times here when it has been extremely difficult to get coal.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that; but it does seem to me that Government officials whose duty it is to see that the schools are maintained, that the children may be educated, should see that they have sufficient coal to keep the buildings warm. It seems to me that somebody is at fault with reference to that situation. I do not know whether it is the superintendent of the city schools or not. I do not know even who he is. I understood the Senator to say his name is Preston.

Mr. KING. His name is Thurston.

Mr. HARRISON. He and the men under him are charged with the duty of at least seeing that janitors are employed and that coal is provided and with seeing that these buildings are sufficiently warm so that the children should not be compelled to go to school in the cold and then be sent back home in the cold and snow simply because there is no coal there or because the building is not properly heated. Somebody is at fault in that respect, and I know of no way to elicit the information except by asking the chairman or members of the committee who are in charge of the duty of investigating those conditions and who recommend the appropriations to the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Rev. Dr. Van Schaick is president of the school board. Not satisfied with that important position, his name is before us now for confirmation or rejection as a member of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I fancy the president of the school board would have something to do with the conditions to which the Senator refers.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know who is at fault, but I do believe that the condition should be looked into, and it should be remedied. Personally I feel that if there is a dearth of school-teachers in the District of Columbia, and they are inadequately paid and are leaving those positions to go into other employment, the Congress of the United States is charged with the duty of appropriating a sufficient amount of money to increase the salaries in order to get good teachers in the schools of the District.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I think perhaps it will be proper at this time to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the salaries provided for in this bill, beginning on page 3, do not cover all of the compensation which the teachers in each of the grades receive. Take the first one, "Group A of class 6, 25 at $1,060 each." Under legislative enactments relating to the school system of the District of Columbia there is given to each teacher of that grade or group of teachers longevity pay of $100 for each year of service up to and including the eighth year. So, if a teacher in group A of class 6, with a salary of $1,060, remains in the schools of the District of Columbia as a teacher for eight years, the salary of that teacher will be $1,860.

In the last District of Columbia appropriation bill the total appropriation for the teachers of the schools of the District of Columbia amounted to $1,925,260. For longevity pay for the same teachers we appropriated $450,000; so that, taking all of the teachers together, the longevity pay provided an increase of nearly 24 per cent over the amount which was appropriated for the salaries.

I will say to the Senator that the salaries provided for here are the salaries for any teachers who enter de novo each of the groups and classes. As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has stated, teachers are grouped after an examination as to their qualifications and fitness for teaching the various grades to which the pupils are assigned. However, there is not a teacher in the District of Columbia who does not receive for nine months' service in the schools the wage that has been stated by the Senator from Wyoming. Those teachers, I will say, were appropriated for as follows:

Assistant supervisor of manual training, $1,300.
Heads of departments in high and manual-training high schools in group B of class 6, 14 at $1,900 each.
Normal, high, and manual-training high schools, promoted for superior work, group B of class 6, 28 at $1,900 each.
Group A of class 6, including 7 principals of grade manual-training schools, 334 at $1,060 each.
Class 5, 136 at $1,000 each, including vocational and trade instructors.
Class 4, 498 at $900 each.
Class 3, 543 at $860 each.
Class 2, 364 at $860 each.
Class 1, 90 at $860 each.

Then there was a proviso that no amount should be paid from the appropriation to any teacher for the teaching of German in the schools. So, Mr. President, the Senator will notice that instead of the minimum wage now paid in the District of Columbia to teachers being $550 per annum, with the longevity pay added yearly it is $860. That, as I stated when I first answered the Senator, is an increase of nearly 50 per per cent over the former wage that was paid before the passage of the last District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the information which the Senator from Utah gives me is quite interesting and new to me. I had prepared and had intended offering an amendment to increase the pay of the teachers in the District of Columbia by 15 per cent, but, due to the fact that their salaries have been increased, as the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Utah have stated, and the further fact that there is a subcommittee, I think, of the House Committee on the District of Columbia working on the matter, with a view of equalizing the salaries of teachers and adjusting the whole situation, I shall not propose the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 7, after the word "teachers," to strike out "$28,966.67" and insert "$23,173.33," so as to make the clause read:

In all for teachers, $23,173.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 11, after "$25,000," to insert: "Provided, That payment is authorized to all employees who served in the night schools during the period from February 16, 1920, to the date of approval of this act, both inclusive, at the rate of pay they were receiving on February 15, 1920, this payment to be in addition to the nominal sum of $1 which such employees received for the service rendered."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to recur to line 20, on page 2, for the purpose of offering an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee will have ample time to do that before we finish the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have just been discussing that matter, and it will take but a moment or two. I think the Senator will probably agree to the amendment I desire to offer.

Mr. WARREN. I prefer not to turn back in that way at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if the Senator objects, I shall wait and offer the amendment at the proper time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Federal Board for Vocational Education," on page 4, line 15, after the word "periodicals," to strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$10,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, funeral and other incidental expenses (including transportation of remains) of deceased trainees of the board, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $10,000,000: Provided, That the salary limitation placed upon the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 19, 1919, shall apply to the appropriation herein made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 19, to strike out:

The Secretary of War shall have authority to transfer to the Federal Board of Vocational Education, without compensation therefor, certain surplus machine tools and other equipment belonging to the War Department and now in possession of the Federal board and being used by that board as equipment in schools for vocational education controlled by the board. Property so transferred shall be dropped from the records of the War Department on the filing with the War Department of an itemized receipt for the articles thus transferred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the chairman of the committee explain why the language beginning in line 20, on page 4, down to line 6, on page 5, is reported by the committee to be stricken out?

Mr. WARREN. The committee proposes to strike out that language so that we can take the matter to conference and reframe the provision so as to make it correspond with similar provisions contained in bills which we have already passed, one of them being for the particular institution referred to and another for other schools, so that while exactly carrying out the spirit there shall be a little more responsibility about the matter. It is desired that the tools and other equipment referred to in the amendment may not be sold or transferred, without leave, to other schools. There is no intention to take them away from the Vocational Education Board; in fact, they are there now and they are all in use.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is my understanding; and I see no reason in the world why the War Department should make any objection, for it seems to me the best possible use that these surplus machine tools can be put to. I think the provision ought to remain in the bill. Of course I understand, if the Senator desires to deal with the other House regarding it, the matter can be put in in conference by striking the language out; but I hope the Senator will assure the Senate that the substance of the provision will be retained in the conference report.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me assure the Senator from Tennessee, first, that the board has the surplus machine tools, that they are using them as was intended, and that they have been so used for a long time; and, second, that it is my intention to have the provision in fully as useful form as it is now and to have the transfer of the tools and equipment guarded, as the Military Affairs Committee has seen fit to provide in the case of one lot to this same institution and other lots to other institutions.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know that what I am going to say is entirely pertinent to the portion of the bill with regard to the vocational education of returned soldiers, but in this bill a substantial sum is being voted to this cause—and I am in entire sympathy with the cause—and I wanted to direct the attention of the Senate to a special case that came to my attention some days ago. A young soldier in the aviation branch of the Army served on the battle line for nearly a year. He was from my State. On his return to this country he was sent to Camp Sherman for the purpose of demobilization, and while there, in the course of his service, was engaged in some work about an airplane. While so engaged another soldier, by accident, fired a gun, the bullet from which struck the first soldier in the elbow and took away a part of the bone, so that he is permanently crippled. In the rating which was given to him he was marked 100 per cent disabled so far as that arm was concerned, yet under the construction which has been given to the law by the War Department he is not permitted to have the benefit of the vocational education act. If he had been wounded while on duty at the front he could have had the benefits of that act, but under the strained construction given to it, although he was still a soldier and performing duty as a soldier, he is not even now permitted to have the benefit of the payment provided by the act, to which, I think, all Senators at least thought any soldier under such circumstances would be entitled. If that construction of the law is right, the law should be amended.

Soldiers coming back from the service suffering from tuberculosis are given treatment. It is not inquired as to whether they contracted the disease while along the battle line or elsewhere; it is sufficient if they were in the service of their country. I simply wanted to call attention to this phase of the law, because I feel that it is working very great injustice if it is being properly construed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is a fact that a soldier suffering from tuberculosis is allowed to enter a hospital proper, but is the Senator sure that a tubercular patient can enter a vocational training school?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not mean that that inference should be drawn from what I said. I meant to say that a soldier suffering from tuberculosis receives benefits from the Government.

In this connection there is another very strange proposition, as I understand, which was called to my attention the other day. They examine the tubercular patients, and if they think they are curable within six months they send them to a hospital, but if they are totally disabled and are likely to die or can not be cured in six months they are sent adrift.

Mr. SMOOT. That is something I had not heard of.

Mr. POMERENE. At least that is the information I get from my correspondence. I do not understand such a proceeding.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in relation to the rating of the soldier to whom the Senator from Ohio referred, did I understand him to say that because of the wound in one arm he was rated 100 per cent disabled?

Mr. POMERENE. That is, as I recall the case, so far as the one arm was concerned. I am not familiar with the technical terms which are implied, but he only has one or two slight motions of that arm because of the wound received.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the rating is correct as to the one arm, but 100 per cent disability, the Senator having used that expression, would mean that not only was he disabled in that one arm but that he was totally disabled from doing any kind of manual labor or earning compensation from work of any character.

Mr. POMERENE. He can not do any manual work with that arm. That is the impression that I intended to leave with the Senate when I referred to the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Ohio, the young man was injured, though not during the war, and for that reason, because he was not injured during the war, he was refused admittance to one of the vocational-training schools.

Mr. POMERENE. That is as I am informed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think, then, that the act should be amended so as to cover soldiers hurt after the conclusion of the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," subhead "Foreign intercourse," on page 6, after line 8, to insert:

For the salary of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland at the rate of $10,000 per annum from February 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, $4,166.66.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming if the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Finland has already been appointed?

Mr. WARREN. I am unable to tell the Senator with definiteness regarding that, but I think he has. The appropriation contained in the bill, however, is authorized and estimated for, and the salary has been fixed by law.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I ask the question is that the appropriation is from February 1 to June 30, 1920. I think it was about February 1 that the law was passed creating this office, and I wondered whether the appointment had been made. If not, of course the amount that was appropriated could be cut down accordingly.

Mr. WARREN. Of course the salary is on a per annum basis, as the Senator will notice.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but the provision reads "from February 1 to June 30, 1920."

Mr. WARREN. It is, of course, to cover the period until next June. If, however, the minister should not enter upon the duties of the office until March or April the full amount from February would not be paid him.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the full amount would not be paid him in that event.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 20, on page 9, the last paragraph read being as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COAST GUARD.

For additional employees from February 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation, as follows: Topographical draftsman, at $1,500; chief accountant, at $2,000; clerks—8 of class 4, 8 of class 3, 15 of class 2, 9 of class 1; assistant messenger, at $720; in all, $26,341.67.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, would it not be better to strike out "February" and put in "March," and reduce the amount one-fifth, the same as we did with the employees provided for in the case of the public schools? We are appropriating here for the full amount, from February 1 to June 30.

Mr. WARREN. In what line is that?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 9, line 15. I think it would be very much better to strike out "February" and put in "March 1 to June 30," and then take out just one-fifth of the amount of the appropriation. That would cover all that it would be possible to pay, even if they got every one of these employees on the 1st day of March.

Mr. WARREN. They may already have given employment to these people; but if the Senator suggests that amendment, I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out "February," in line 15, page 9, and to insert "March."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 9, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "February" and to insert "March."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I move to correct the total amount appriated, a memorandum of which I will hand to the Secretary in a few moments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will make that change.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Coast Guard," on page 11, after line 5, to insert:

Officers and enlisted men of the Coast Guard shall be permitted to purchase quartermaster supplies from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps at the same price as is charged the officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue," on page 11, after line 12, to strike out:

Enforcement of the "National prohibition act": For the necessary expenses in preventing violations of the "National prohibition act," $1,000,000—

And insert—

Enforcement of the "National prohibition act": For the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary miscellaneous expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses, and prevent violations of the "National prohibition act," $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 12, line 15, after the word "roof," to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

Philadelphia, Pa., Mint Building: For new roof, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 5, to insert:

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

For enforcing the laws governing the importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors by the Customs Service, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service," on page 13, line 20, after the word "hospital," to strike out "$4,000,000" and insert "$3,000,000," so as to read:

For medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for war-risk insurance patients and other beneficiaries of the Public Health Service, including necessary personnel, regular and reserve commissioned officers of the Public Health Service, clerical help in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, maintenance, equipment, leases, fuel, lights, water, printing, freight, transportation and travel, maintenance and operation of passenger motor vehicles, and reasonable burial expenses (not exceeding $100 for any patient dying in hospital), $3,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 2, to insert:

Hereafter officers of the Public Health Service may purchase subsistence supplies and articles of serviceable property for the use of themselves and their families from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps at the same price as is charged officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the amendment just stated is in the usual wording? I notice, on line 4, these words:

Hereafter officers of the Public Health Service may purchase subsistence supplies and articles of serviceable property.

What is meant by "articles of serviceable property"?

Mr. WARREN. I take it to be food, and such things as that.

Mr. SMOOT. "Subsistence supplies" covers that.

Mr. WARREN. I understand; but this, as the Senator knows, is the language sent up by the department, and, of course, there are other things aside from subsistence supplies. For instance, a surgeon might want a scalpel or other instrument, or he might want certain incidental supplies which the Army and Navy buy in large quantities, and these officers simply want the privilege of taking them at cost price. This is the way the estimate came to us from the Secretary, and I can not see any objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. The officers of the Public Health Service, I suppose, should be granted the privilege of purchasing their subsistence supplies in the same way as the officers of the Army or the Navy; but it seems to me that adding the words "serviceable property" means that every officer of the Public Health Service can buy anything he wants in the way of operating instruments, scientific instruments, or anything else that he may desire to purchase. I do not know how far that would go.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows that there is no money lost in it. It is a question of whether we wish to oblige those officers by granting them the powers of officers of the other departments in buying supplies of this kind.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I know that there is not any loss to the Government in it, other than this: If this practice were extended to a wide range, whatever profit might otherwise be made by the merchants in selling these goods to the officers of the Public Health Service, the Government would at least get its taxes from that profit, and, of course, under this condition of affairs it would not get them, because whatever profit the merchant ordinarily makes goes to the officer of the Public Health Service upon all those items.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator wishes to amend that by putting in the language of the other provision, I have not the slightest objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted was this: I should like to have the wording of this privilege to the officers of the Public Health Service just like the wording of the privilege to the officers of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. I will look up the wording and have it inserted here.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator to look it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is this amendment agreed to now?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment on page 11 reads:

Shall be permitted to purchase quartermaster supplies.

That would seem to cover the matter referred to on page 14.

Mr. SMOOT. The wording on page 11 would cover the provision for the Public Health Service.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator should leave out the words "enlisted men" there.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in order to make it conform to all of the other privileges granted, I move to strike out the words "subsistence supplies and articles of serviceable property for the use of themselves and their families" and insert "quartermaster supplies for the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, at the same price as is charged the officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 14, after line 7, to insert:

Officers of the Public Health Service shall be credited with service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard in computing longevity pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 19, to insert:

Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, trachoma, influenza, or infantile paralysis, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $100,000: Provided, That a detailed report of the expenditures hereunder shall annually hereafter be submitted to Congress.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I move to amend this amendment by striking out the figures "$100,000" in line 3, page 5, and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000." This amendment has been urged very strongly by the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is an emergency if there ever was one.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, as I understand, offers to amend the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this matter was brought up before the subcommittee and considered with a great deal of care. We heard from the Public Health Service concerning it, and it came up to the full committee, and was very carefully considered there. We thought that the amount of $100,000 which we had appropriated was sufficient. Just as we were taking up the bill and without time to consult with my colleagues, my attention was called to the report of the Health Service that the plague raging at New Orleans and the country reached through that port had become more violent than at the time the report was before us.

If the Senator will make the amount $200,000 instead of $250,000, I shall not personally object to it. I have no right to accept it on the part of the committee, not having conferred with the other members of the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not sure that $200,000 will be sufficient, but I accept the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, if that is agreeable. I am not sure that they can get along with a cent less than $250,000. The health department think they need every cent of that amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this amount of money is to be expended for all the threatened epidemics named in the amendment, of course it would be entirely inadequate, but the money will all be spent for one purpose, and that is for the eradication of the bubonic plague.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator permit me to read just a paragraph from a letter received from the Chief of the Public Health Service, sent to me this morning on this very point, at my request? He says:

> In view of the fact that the expenditures under the epidemic fund at this time are necessarily $70,000 a month, of which $50,000 are required for the continuation of plague-suppressive measures in New Orleans and $20,000 for other urgent activities carried on under this fund in other parts of the United States, without relief in the form of the deficiency appropriation operations at New Orleans would have to be discontinued not later than March 15, 1920. The appropriation of $100,000 will only provide for the continuance of this work until April 30.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 1699.

Mr. STERLING. Assuming that the consideration of the pending bill will not take very long, I am willing that the unfinished business shall be temporarily laid aside, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that if I should go to the Public Health Service and state that there had been $20,000 expended in the State of Utah for the eradication of a plague and that it would require $200,000 more to finish the work, the chief of that service would immediately write to me and state that the work would have to be suspended unless an additional appropriation was made.

I also admit that there ought to be an appropriation made for the purpose of assisting the people of Louisiana to eradicate the plague that is there at the present time, caused, I think, by infection of rats. The Senator from Louisiana will know to what extent the plague is spreading better than I, but I remember that we have made appropriations for this purpose many times in the past. I call to my mind now an instance where there had been a rat or two discovered, and the first thing that the Public Health Service asked for was an appropriation of an immense amount of money.

There will be the regular appropriation bill in the Senate appropriating money for this very purpose for the next fiscal year. Before this $100,000 is expended we will know whether the plague is of a character that it is going to need more money from the Government or not. At that time we can decide whether there is a greater appropriation needed than $100,000.

The Senator from Louisiana knows just as well as I know, and as every other Senator knows, that if we made the amount $500,000 every cent of it would be expended and if we made it $1,000,000 every cent of it would be expended. There can not be a question of doubt about it. If we are ever going to cease expending money extravagantly it ought to begin now.

I wish to say to the Senator from Louisiana that if $100,000 is not sufficient to check the plague in Louisiana within the next two months, I, for one, will support any request for an appropriation that he may ask to continue the work. But let us not at this time make an undue appropriation when we know that it will be spent, no matter what the amount may be.

I have not any inclination whatever to stop the work there. I do not want to interfere at all with the assistance that the Government is giving at the present time, but I desire to say to the Senator now that if we appropriate $200,000, or $500,000, or $1,000,000, the Public Health Service will immediately see that every cent of it is spent within the time limit provided in the measure. Why not let the appropriation of $100,000 go? According to the letter which the Senator has just read that would carry on the work they are now doing for two months, and in the meantime we will know whether the plague is going to spread or not.

Let us act with the Government money just the same as if we were spending our own money. If we were looking at the situation and were responsible and our children should ask us to assist them in case of a calamity, the same as the children of Uncle Sam in Louisiana are asking now for the Government of the United States to assist them on account of a plague, we would not tell them, "Here, you shall have $100,000, or you shall have $500,000, or $1,000,000." We would tell them to go to work and stop the plague and we would do the best we could for them, not grant an amount that may be necessary.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator answer a question? The Senator says that we might get an additional appropriation if the plague is not destroyed within two months. What assurance have we that we will have another general appropriation bill within two months?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt of it in the least. I will say to the Senator that the legislative appropriation bill will be reported to-day or to-morrow to the House, and I do not think it is going to take very long to pass that bill. Following that will be the sundry civil appropriation bill, in which such items always appear and always should appear. The only reason why it is in this deficiency bill is because of the fact that we realize that it is to meet an emergency. It is not a deficiency, I will say to the Senator, and it should not be in the deficiency bill for any other cause than that which I have just stated. However, I am not going to object to an item of this kind going into a deficiency bill when the Senator from Louisiana stands upon the floor, backed by the Public Health Service, and says that there is use for the money to stay the plague that has started in Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am sorry to say that it is a very serious deficiency. The Senator knows I am not in the habit of asking for appropriations of this kind. It is no pleasure to me to have to tell my colleagues in the Senate that in the great city of my State, of which I am so proud, there are to-day a great many rats infected with the plague virus.

Dr. McLaughlin, who has charge of this work in the Public Health Service, testified before the Appropriations Committee on the 11th of this month that there are a great many of these infested rats, and that they are brought into his board at the rate of 1,000 to 1,800 a day. They are being caught by his employees, and many of them are found to be infected. There have been very few cases of human infection, though a few, and following a precedent established some time ago by the Public Health Service and the local health service of Louisiana full and due publicity was given to it. We have not tried to keep back anything of the kind.

I wish further to say to the Senator that in an attempt to completely eradicate the plague several years ago the people of this city spent a great many million dollars. I have not the facts at hand as to how much, but 80 to 90 per cent of the buildings in the city of New Orleans were rat-proofed so as to prevent any further continuance of plague. Some of the railroad buildings in the city and some of the public wharves and docks on the river front unfortunately were not rat-proofed at that time, and the infection in some way has gotten into the rat population.

It takes a long time to eradicate this plague. It can not be done hastily. The work must be carried on persistently and consistently and constantly. It took 18 months to drive the plague infection out of the city of San Francisco. It took a number of months, when we had the same rat infection in New Orleans before, to drive it out.

I am appealing not alone for my own State; I am appealing for the Nation. New Orleans is the second port in America. In the volume of its foreign commerce, imports and exports, it is exceeded only by the great city of New York. It has the closest kind of commercial relations with all its sister States in the South and by rail and water with every State in the Union. It has very close relations with all the commercial nations of the world, and those commercial nations and our sister States know we are going to trade with them, and know we are going to treat them honestly and fairly in regard to this plague. We have told them that we are going to stamp it out. We have prevented the disease from extending to more than a very few human beings.

Now, sir, we are spending a great deal of money ourselves. We are seeking the direction in a scientific way of the National Government, but the millions being expended to rat-proof the public facilities are all paid by the local people. We do not ask the Government to do that. What we ask is for the Government to carry on the work at a rate of about $50,000 per month for the next six months as the scientists say, until there is not a single infected rat in the city of New Orleans. They assure us that they must carry on the work for that length of time. If there be one infected rat in the city, it is liable to infect a great many others, and when we have a great many rats infected human beings become infected, and it will spread from that city to other cities in the land.

I wish to read a letter just received from the Public Health Service. It is very brief. I do not want to take up much of the time of the Senate. It is addressed to me and written at my request.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, February 18, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR RANSDELL: Allow me to invite your attention to the fact that the deficiency appropriation, H. R. 12046, as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations, contains an item of but $100,000 for plague-suppressive measures in New Orleans instead of $250,000 which was requested by the Public Health Service for this purpose.

I will state that that was requested in a letter from the Treasury Department, dated February 2, sent to the Senate committee.

In view of the fact that the expenditures under the epidemic fund at this time are necessarily $70,000 a month, of which $50,000 are required for the continuation of plague-suppressive measures in New Orleans and $20,000 for other urgent activities carried on under this fund in other parts of the United States, without relief in the form of the deficiency appropriation, operations at New Orleans would have to be discontinued not later than March 15, 1920. The appropriation of $100,000 will only provide for the continuance of this work until April 30.

The facts in regard to the plague situation in New Orleans are briefly as follows: The plague was found to be extensively prevalent in the rodent population about November 1, 1919, and to such an extent that human cases were already occurring. Upon the discovery of the existence of plague among rats the Public Health Service immediately instituted vigorous measures against rodents and to prevent the spread of the disease to the human population. It is only by the vigorous prosecution of such measures that such extension to the human population and the general spread of the disease from New Orleans as a focus to other parts of the United States can be prevented. As a result of these vigorous measures and the confidence which State health authorities and foreign consular officers have in the Public Health Service, no quarantine has as yet been declared against New Orleans, and commerce proceeds through this port unimpeded.

I will interrupt myself to say that there really has been substantially a quarantine declared by the Republic of Haiti, though that is under certain regulations, and business is going on.

In the event, however, of the discontinuance of the active measures carried out by the Public Health Service two eventualities seem probable:

1. The plague will spread from the rats to the human population.
2. Quarantine will be declared against New Orleans by adjoining States and foreign countries.

In order to prevent either of these eventualities it would seem of the utmost importance to continue the active suppressive measures in New Orleans up to the end of the present fiscal year.

In view of your interest in the matter, may I ask you to place these facts before the Senate for appropriate action in the premises?

In conclusion I may add that the whole question is not so much to assist the State and local authorities in combating local epidemics as to prevent the spread of the infection to other ports of the United States.

Cordially, yours,
J. C. PERRY,
Acting Surgeon General.

Now, Mr. President, for the sake of a small sum like we are asking here—I say "we," I mean the Public Health Service, and I am voicing it as one of the Senators from the State of Louisiana—are we going to jeopardize the commerce of the second port in the United States? Are we going to jeopardize the health of 400,000 citizens of New Orleans, and of the vast number of people who have such close business and social relations with that great center of the South?

I wish to say just one word more about the expenditure of money by the Public Health Service, as to whether they need it or not. These questions were asked Dr. McLaughlin when he was testifying before the Senate Committee on Appropriations on the 11th of this month:

The CHAIRMAN. What is your general fund?
Dr. MCLAUGHLIN. $400,000, and that is exhausted.
The CHAIRMAN. Do you allocate that fund to different things, or do you keep it for emergencies like this?
Dr. MCLAUGHLIN. No; in normal times the unused part of the fund is turned back. Last year we turned back $208,000.

That is very amusing, I know, to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. It is rather remarkable for a Government department to turn money back to the Treasury, but that is what Dr. McLaughlin said:

Last year we turned back $208,000; but when there is an epidemic, such as the outbreak of the plague in New Orleans, the $400,000 is never adequate. It was not adequate in 1914.

In conclusion, Mr. President—I do not wish to make a speech, though I could talk for an hour—I appeal to the Senator to permit this amendment of mine to be agreed to. The money will certainly not be used there if it is not needed. I say to the Senator in the most solemn manner that I have investigated it; I believe that we have a very serious infection, at least, of the rat population of the city of New Orleans, and I believe the repressive measures of the Public Health Service must be carried on for at least five or six months longer, and that can not be done successfully without this appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, do I understand that the people of the city have spent a large amount of money on their own part to eradicate this trouble? Did not the Senator state that the city had appropriated about $3,000,000 for wharf purposes and things of that kind?

Mr. RANSDELL. Several years ago a very much larger sum than that was expended. Practically all the property of the city was rat-proofed. I made a statement, which I repeat, that under the ordinances of the city commission government a number of poor people were obliged to mortgage their property in order to get money to rat-proof their houses. The city is now prepared to expend a good large sum of money to finish the rat-proofing of the railroad warehouse and the warehouses on the river front. I can not state the exact amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe that the rat plague will ever cease in Louisiana so long as the old wooden wharves remain in New Orleans. I do believe it will cease as soon as the new wharves are completed; and I understand there is a movement on foot to replace the old wooden wharves with cement wharves. When that time arrives I doubt whether there will ever be any more rat plagues in Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I desire to interrupt at that point to say that I think the Senator from Utah is substantially correct in that statement. The city authorities of New Orleans have recently obtained a loan from the banks of the city to go ahead with the rat-proofing, and the legislature, which meets early in May, I understand, is going to be called upon to permit the dock board to issue bonds for the thorough and complete finishing of those wharves. I do not think they will build them of cement, but they will be built either of cement or iron.

Mr. SMOOT. Either one, I will say to the Senator, would obviate the serious difficulty that the city has experienced in the past. Appropriations which were made during war time nobody questioned; we gave whatever was asked. A billion dollars were given just as freely as 5 cents would have been given. All the departments of the Government had to do was to ask, and simply say that the amount asked was for war purposes, and "everything went."

Just think that in the fiscal year 1917–18 there were $21,000,000,000 appropriated by the Government and, including the appropriations of the next fiscal year—1919—$27,000,000,000 were appropriated by Congress! It is true that all of the $27,000,000,000 was not expended, because the armistice was signed before the end of the year, and there was a great part of that money proposed by act of Congress to be returned to the Treasury. It had never really been in the Treasury, but there was a legislative act to turn the money back into the Treasury. However, it simply meant that we did not have to sell bonds to put the money into the Treasury in order to take it out to meet the appropriations.

If any such thing ever happened as the Public Health Service turning $208,000 back into the Treasury, I am going to take the time to look it up, for I want to know when any such thing happens on the part of any of the departments of our Government. If it did happen, it was because they had more money than they really could spend for the suppression of the plague or other epidemics.

Mr. President, only the other day the Public Health Service had introduced into this body a bill asking for $5,000,000 for the study and investigation of the influenza. The Senate, in its wisdom, decided to give them a tithe of that amount, and appropriated $500,000 for the purpose. I believe if there had not been one 5-cent piece appropriated, the influenza situation in the United States would have been exactly as it is to-day. I do not think a dollar of that money spent anywhere in the United States has helped the situation.

I want the Senator from Louisiana to understand that I am not complaining about the Government of the United States expending $50,000, if that is necessary to do away with the rat plague in Louisiana, but the letter which has been read itself says that if $100,000 is appropriated it will carry them until June 30.

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg pardon. The letter says with the hundred thousand dollars which is carried in the bill, if that goes in, they can work until April 30.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean April 30. By the time April 30 shall have arrived, I say now that not only will the legislative bill have passed the House of Representatives, but I think it will also have passed the Senate, and that the sundry civil bill also will be before this body. How often in such bills are appropriations made as to which it is specifically provided that certain portions of the appropriations shall be immediately available? That can be done in this case.

Allow me to plead with Senators now to keep appropriations down just as much as we can. I make that request not in opposition to an appropriation for this specific purpose, for I think the appropriation and its object are a thousand times better than some other appropriations which are found in appropriation bills.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am glad the Senator from Utah feels that way about it. I desire to ask the Senator this question: Would it be appropriate and in order to put an appropriation of this kind on the legislative bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. But it would certainly be subject to a point of order, I should think.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all. There is not a legislative appropriation bill which has ever passed this body that I know anything about but that what may be termed general legislation has been carried on it. What I desire to do is this: Not to appropriate a single dollar more of the people's money than is absolutely necessary. If it is necessary to provide an appropriation in order to protect the lives and the health of the people of Louisiana, there is no Senator on this floor who will grant that help any quicker than will I.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator from Utah for that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that if my city were afflicted with a rat plague as is New Orleans, and if the city could not handle the situation, and the State could not take care of it, I should want the Government of the United States to assist. That is my position. I think the committee has acted wisely in deciding to name $100,000. Then, if that is not sufficient, we shall have ample opportunity to make a further appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. RANSDELL. Just one word. I want to say that I am entirely satisfied to adopt the suggestion of the chairman of the committee and to make my amendment provide for $200,000 instead of $250,000.

Mr. GAY. Just one word, Mr. President. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] realizes full well that if such a provision as this should be included in the legislative bill, it would not become effective until the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President. The Senator is wrong when he makes a statement like that. The Senator knows that on every appropriation bill which is passed here—the legislative, the sundry civil, and other appropriation bills—provision is made that certain appropriations shall become immediately available. That is just as usual as it is to make appropriations. That is what would be done in this case.

Mr. GAY. I desire to say, Mr. President, that this is an emergency, and one in relation to which the Senate should not procrastinate. The Senator from Utah spoke of not desiring to delay the rat-proofing which was necessary. I desire to tell him that it will require a certain amount of money to do this work effectively. The State of Louisiana and the city of New Orleans have appropriated large sums of money—they contemplate an expenditure of between twelve and fourteen million dollars—for the purpose of rat-proofing the wharves of the city of New Orleans, not only for the protection of the city of New Orleans and of the State of Louisiana but for the protection of the entire Mississippi Valley and all sections of the United States that have commercial relations with the great city of New Orleans. This matter is of vital importance; it is a function of the Government to assist along this line and to furnish the money that has been requested by the Public Health Service.

My colleague has thoroughly covered the question. I hope that the Senate, in its wisdom, will see fit to adopt the suggestion of the chairman of the committee and that $200,000 will now be appropriated for this purpose.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, an epidemic threatens New Orleans and the country growing out of the recrudescence of the bubonic plague.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is true. It exists there to-day among the rats, but not among human beings.

Mr. KING. And this appropriation is for the purpose of meeting that contingency?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is exactly right, sir.

Mr. KING. Why should not the appropriation, then, be limited to an expenditure for the extirpation of the bubonic plague?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that, if I am informed correctly, the general fund for that purpose has practically all been expended in New Orleans and is not available to carry on the work which must be carried on in other parts of the Nation to the extent of about $20,000 a month, and therefore I do not want to limit it.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether there has been expended in New Orleans substantially all of the appropriations carried in the former bills for the items mentioned in line 20 on page 14 down to line 5 on page 15 of the pending bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. That was stated in substance by Dr. McLaughlin, representing the Public Health Service, in his testimony before the committee on the 11th day of this month. He said substantially that they had expended the greater part of the fund and would be entirely out of money by the 15th of next month if they did not get an additional appropriation. Dr. Perry says in his letter to me, which I read a few moments ago:

> If we do not get $100,000, the work must cease on April 30.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with the information which the Senator has given I am inclined to vote for his amendment; but I take this occasion to submit an observation or two with respect to the Public Health Service, as well as other executive agencies of the Government.

The Public Health Service, as I have before stated upon the floor of the Senate, has an ambitious program. I do not know how many thousand employees are in the Public Health Service, but I have been told, upon what I regard as good authority, that there are more than 3,000 physicians in that service, and, in addition to that number, there are thousands of employees, attachés, clerical help, stenographers, printers, typewriters, functionaries, and supernumeraries which characterize so many of the executive departments of the Government.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator that we give to the Agricultural Department, which takes care of the diseases of plant life and of animals and matters of that kind, something like $31,000,000 or $32,000,000 a year. The Public Health Service is the only branch of the Government which takes care of human health, and we are nothing like as generous with them as we are with the branch of the Government which investigates and studies animal and vegetable life.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few years ago, when I had the honor to represent my State in the House of Representatives, the Agricultural bill, as I remember, carried $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, but we have by leaps and bounds gone from that modest sum to what the Senator states now, namely, thirty-odd million dollars. Let me say to the Senator that last year we appropriated for the Agricultural Department more than $40,000,000, and, as I recall, the year before the appropriation for this department was nearer $50,000,000. The officials of the Agricultural Department would have rejoiced if they could have obtained $100,000,000; and if we had given it to them, they would have expended it. There is no limit to the voracious appetite of the departments and bureaus and executive agencies of the Government. They seem to have an absolute disregard of the interest of the public; they carry on extensive propagandas to secure appropriations and are never satisfied. They seem to be eager to spend and exhibit no desire to conserve. It is pitiful to witness the scrambles for appropriations for executive agencies, and it is a sorry page which records the wasteful expenditures of the Federal Government.

The executive departments of the Government close their eyes and write checks for millions, and then expect Congress to abjectly place its O. K. thereon, and then impose burdens and taxes upon the people to meet them. Federal appropriations are increasing at an alarming rate, and there seems to be no spirit of economy or effort to reduce the burdens which extravagance imposes. Unfortunately many of the people join in appeals for appropriations which in many cases are not only not warranted but which are in contravention of law and the theory of our form of government.

This is not, Mr. President, a partisan matter; Democratic officials are as culpable in these expenditures as are Republican officials. There is something that gets into the blood of many executive officials when they are invested with authority so that they want to extend their power and aggrandize themselves or their departments or their bureaus regardless of the cost to the Government or the burden to be imposed upon the people. It is frequently said that a Republic can not be efficient or give to the people economical administration. I do not care to enter into a discussion of this charge; it is manifest, however, that we have not fully learned the lesson of economy or efficiency in this Republic. Our Government costs too much.

This is true of municipal and State administrations. Our annual expenses for governmental purposes are increasing far more rapidly than is the increase in population. With the tremendous burdens which the war laid upon us, with the billions of national debt, we are not admonished to pursue a course of thrift and economy, but keep the mad pace which the war developed. We are not yet sobered, but spend and contrive schemes to spend until it seems as though we were determined to squander the savings of the past and imperil the safety of the Nation.

Mr. President, our task is not ended when we pass appropriation bills; we must then save the credit of the Nation by providing the funds to meet the appropriations. Many who are making demands upon Congress for extravagant appropriations never seem to appreciate the fact that we must become debtors and borrow money—issue interest-bearing bonds of the Government therefor, or impose taxes upon the people which will prove more or less onerous and perhaps bear so heavily upon them as to prevent financial advancement—general prosperity. And where are these taxes to come from? Prohibition has closed one fountain that yielded a large revenue. We may have reached the limit in income and excess-profits taxes. The people will resent increased internal taxation. We can not for several years hope for so large a foreign trade as we have enjoyed during the war. Indeed, what it will be during the next few years no one can determine. Europe's condition is such that her exports to the United States will be limited for some time to come. If Europe can not export, she can not buy, unless we take such securities as she can offer. There will be a slowing down in our foreign commerce. It is apparent what the effect will be upon the receipts of the United States Treasury. And a diminishing foreign market for our products will materially affect the prosperity of the American people, and that in turn will reduce the income and excess-profits taxes which they pay to the Government. That situation will call for new sources of taxation, and that, of course, will add to the burdens of the people. And let it not be forgotten that in the end the taxes fall upon the farmer and the wage earner and the ultimate consumer.

We have indulged in a discussion of "our merchant marine." We can not compete with other nations in ocean-traffic rates. We can carry our own commerce in our own ships, but we will not, I am afraid, secure much of the commerce of other nations. Our merchant marine must, then, depend upon our own foreign commerce—upon our own exports and imports. Unless we have foreign trade and commerce, Mr. President, our merchant marine will rot in the docks. If prohibitive tariffs cut off our trade with the world, we will have a sort of "Coney Island merchant marine"; our ships will be plying between New York and Coney Island and from domestic port to domestic port. We must have foreign trade in order to have a merchant marine, and foreign trade and commerce are imperative to our prosperity.

Unless we are prosperous, there will be a lean Treasury and a frequent issue of bonds, unless the most rigid and Spartan economy is practiced.

The demands which are daily being made upon the Treasury can not be met, in my opinion, unless we increase the taxes or issue millions of bonds.

I repeat, where is the money coming from to meet these great demands that are being made by the executive departments of the United States? Everybody knows that the next fiscal year will witness a considerable slacking up in the business of the United States. Profits will be less, business will be less, the earnings of the people will be less in the aggregate than during the present fiscal year. Perhaps the aggregate earnings of the people for the latter year were $50,000,000,000. It is obvious that the next fiscal year will not realize that amount as the gross earnings of the American people. Perhaps they will be $40,000,000,000, and with that reduction, of necessity, there will be greater difficulty in realizing funds with which to meet the imperative demands of the Government.

Our Republican friends claim that their party is pledged to economy. Some of us, knowing the past record of the party, are rather skeptical. But I want to assure any Republican who does honestly believe in economy that he will find upon this side of the Chamber Senators desirous of aiding him in every legitimate and proper way to reduce the expenses of the Government.

It takes some time to react from the condition in which we found ourselves during the war to the normal conditions of peace. The psychology of war projects itself into the future for an indefinite period and affects the judgment of most people; but we must at the earliest possible moment emancipate ourselves from the somewhat hysterical and unbalancing influence which the World War produced and get down to the hard, stubborn facts and realities of this biting world before us and practice the economies of real, genuine, patriotic American citizenship. We must cut down the expenses of the Government, reduce personal expenses, practice economies in our daily lives, and insist upon rigid economies in all governmental agencies and activities. This is a time to learn what "hardpan" is; we must learn that we can spend savings and capital, but that when we do we are on the road to national bankruptcy; that spending does not necessarily mean prosperity, but often means ruin.

While it is true that the Public Health Service is an old service as a branch of one of the departments of the Government, it has taken on a swollen growth, if I may be permitted that expression, of late. I repeat that it is not satisfied with what I conceive to be its legitimate and proper sphere of activity. It, like many other of the departments of the Government, seeks to increase its power and authority by inducing the States to cooperate with it. This is a favorite method of some Federal agencies—to spend some little money in the States and then urge the latter to induce Congress to make large Federal appropriations, provided the States make like appropriations. Of course, in many instances departments of the Federal Government send their representatives into States where some beneficial service is rendered. But the service is such as the States should perform and which in time they would perform. But representations are made that Congress will do the work if it is sufficiently besieged and "bedeviled," so a strong propaganda is commenced, and Congress is petitioned and then "required" to make large appropriations to carry out the work prescribed by Federal agencies.

This plan is seductive and sinister and will destroy State pride and State honor if persisted in and the people do not awaken to the demoralizing effects of this policy. Some of the States have not seen what the effects will be, but I believe that they will in the near future reject these proffered gifts which can not prove other than harmful to the Nation. The States are willing to assume whatever obligations rest upon them, and more and more they are taking upon their shoulders the responsibilities which are connected with progressive and developing Commonwealths. Many officials in the Federal service are faddists, cranks, "uplifters," dreamers, visionaries, doctrinaires, failures in the practical walks of life, and finally they find refuge in some soft berth in the departments of the Government, and there, protected by civil service and life positions, they indulge in their fads and fancies and dreams and visions, and seek the extension of their powers and covet opportunities to project the General Government into the States and into the purely domestic affairs of the people.

An official is assigned to a humble position, but one of merit, with the duties defined by law, and he immediately conceives the idea of making it a big position by the usurpation of authority. He is assigned one clerk, and he immediately conceives the idea of having two. Some friend of his in some other department has a dozen clerks and three or four stenographers and a cloud of employees under his control, and he conceives the idea that his work is just as important as his friend's, and he demands that there shall be a large increase in the personnel of the agency or bureau of which he is the head.

It is the cellular growth. The cell expands and multiplies until there is a tremendously complex organism; and then this organism or agency or bureau swells and increases, and numerous persons within the bureau fancy that their great abilities entitle them to high positions and to bureaus of their own, and so other fractures ensue and new bureaus result. One bureau, starting as a cell, becomes multicellular, and breaks up into many parts and into many bureaus, and so, by a process of procreation and breeding, these bureaus multiply until their numbers are countless.

Why, Mr. President, if the French and some of these alleged decadent nations could get some idea of the processes of fecundity which are exhibited in the departments of the Government and apply them to the biological field, it might remove one of the serious matters which now concern the French leaders.

This Public Health Service organization has increased in power and in personnel and in expenditures. The more money we appropriate to it the larger it becomes. Governmental departments grow upon the money which they get out of the Federal Treasury. If they receive a million dollars for scientific research, the first thing that is done is to get enlarged quarters, thousands and tens of thousands of dollars for the paraphernalia of the office, and then the greater part of the appropriation is expended in paying the salaries and the compensation of the officials. If one examines the thousands of appropriations which are made to many of these departments it will be found that many of them are swallowed up by increased salaries, by the enlarged personnel, and by the nameless expenditures for which no showing can be made.

It is claimed that the Public Health Service now is seeking to go into States to discharge there the duties and responsibilities which devolve alone upon the States. Some officials want to take supervision of practically every phase of the public health of the people of the States and to plan extensively for rural sanitation. Why, the Public Health Service will soon be furnishing employees to go upon the farms of the farmers and direct them in their labors, into the homes of the people and tell them how to live and think and act, and become directors of the activities of all the States and communities.

Soon they will insist that the Federal Government, by its officials, examine the teeth and eyes of the people, prescribe for all their physical and mental ills, and subject everyone to a physical examination, and place all the people under the supervision of the executive agencies of the United States.

Of course, it is a commendable thing to care for the health of the people; but we did not organize the Federal Government in order to make it the parent and the overlord of the individuals and of the States.

There must be a recrudescence of that splendid individualism and personal independence that has made this Nation the glory of the world. The idea of this growing and tyrannous bureaucracy is that it shall look after the needs and welfare of the people. That was the idea of all despots and bureaucrats. The people were not capable of governing themselves, so a paternalism was necessary. The new federalism is to preserve for the people, teach them how to run their own business, and place a Government functionary in every home. The farmers must be taught how to run their farms and dairies and conduct their business—how to plow their land and plant their crops.

The Federal Government is to look after our roads and bridges, our schools and our health and our persons, our lives and our property, and doubtless these centralizationists and bureaucrats will soon tell us what we shall wear and what we shall eat. Already the Federal Government tells us what we shall not drink and may soon legislate for or regulate our appetites. May we not expect this paternalism to extend to the homes of the people, and the Federal Government displace the authority of the father over his family and the home life. Bureaucracy is so insinuating that the internal affairs of the States are coming under its control, and the badge of the Federal official may soon destroy home authority and parental responsibility.

I was surprised the other day to receive a communication from my State stating that there were literally hundreds of Federal employees therein. There are thousands of them traveling from Washington at an expense to the Government of millions of dollars annually to investigate everything, great and small, which is related to the lives of the people. I venture the assertion that there are from two or three hundred thousand Federal employees—up to half a million—traveling through the United States at an expense of millions of dollars to the Federal Government, looking into the internal affairs of the States and the domestic affairs and lives of the people and into their business activities; work which if necessary to be done should come under the cognizance of the people themselves or under the cognizance and jurisdiction of the States.

It has seemed to me that there has been a subsidence of individual spirit and of State spirit and pride during the past few years. It was gratifying to many to read the excellent letter recently written by the Vice President challenging attention to the spirit of democracy—not a partisan democracy, but a democracy which meant individualism and personal initiative and liberty, which meant the assertion of the right of the individual to govern himself, which demanded that the Federal Government should keep its hands off from the people and off from the States with respect to matters which come under their own cognizance and within their own jurisdiction. In this hour of confused voices and uncertain creeds we need some great political prophet who will point the way to safety and plant our feet upon solid American ground, the ground occupied by the fathers and consecrated by their patriotic services. Upon this ground we must stand if the perpetuity of this Republic shall be assured.

I want to protest now, as I have in the past, against this constant and persistent invasion by the executive departments of the rights of the States and of the fields of activity in which the people themselves should alone enter.

I hope that Senators will reduce the expenditures for the executive departments to the minimum and restrain their efforts at usurpation. The Federal departments and agencies are not partisan. I venture the assertion that a majority of those within the departments belong to the opposite political faith from that to which I belong; but it makes no difference whether they are Republicans or whether they are Democrats, there are many officials when they get in the departments plan and plot to increase the authority and power of the departments and bureaus and divisions and agencies and officials and to increase the number of employees of the Government.

There were brought into the city of Washington during the war tens of thousands of employees. They have not been discharged yet. You can not get them out of office. The only way we will ever get them out of office is to legislate them out by refusing to make appropriations.

Bills come before us—one recently came before the Judiciary Committee, and I shall ask that the committee be discharged from its consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations—asking for the repeal of a law which forbade employees of the Government from going from one department to another. They want it repealed, so that if one department should possibly be compelled to discharge a few employees, they may be immediately absorbed in some other department of the Government. There is a determination that nobody shall be separated from the service. We are going to keep the thousands and tens of thousands of employees here, if it can be done; and if the Appropriations Committee and the other committees that have to do with these things do not set their faces like flint against this demand, instead of there being a diminution in the number of employees over that obtaining during the war there will be an increase.

Now, coming to this appropriation, I think the suggestion made by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] was the wise one. I would have preferred to leave it as it is, and then, if the $100,000 is legitimately and properly expended and it proves inadequate, we are in session and a further appropriation can be made; we will stay in session here, in my opinion, at least until the political conventions meet, and I hope we will not adjourn because they convene. We will be here in session for months, and we can meet any legitimate demand that may be submitted.

There are other items in this bill to which I shall call attention later, but I felt like submitting these observations in connection with the Public Health Service demand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 2 on page 15, the last paragraph read being as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue in effect the provisions of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, $500,000, to be expended at the following hospitals and in not to exceed the following amounts, respectively: Alexandria, La., $25,000; Deming, N. Mex., $20,000; Houston, Tex., $10,000; Perryville, Md., $75,000; Greenville, S. C., $75,000; Cape May, N. J., $10,000; Hoboken, Pa., $10,000; Dansville, N. Y., $10,000; St. Louis, Mo., $5,000; New Haven, Conn., $25,000; West Roxbury, Mass., $50,000; Helena, Mont., $100,000; Boise, Idaho, $75,000; East Norfolk, Mass., $10,000: Provided further, That the sum of $20,000 of the appropriation of $150,000 contained in section 6 of the above-named act is made available for such repair work and remodeling as may be necessary to adapt the hospital at Corpus Christi, Tex., to the needs of the Public Health Service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming what is the occasion for these appropriations? My recollection is that not only in the general appropriation bills dealing with vocational training, but in several special bills, emergency or deficiency bills, further appropriations were made. Are these deficiencies? Is it the plan to keep hospitals or sanitariums at each of these places? Are these permanent structures? Are they permanent hospitals and permanent sanitariums? Do they belong to the War Department? Are they under the control of the War Department?

I have asked a number of questions in order that the Senator may give us such information as will enable us to understand exactly the extent of the appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, many of these belong to the War Department and many of them do not, but have to have some extensions and refitting. The Senator will remember that when the first deficiency bill—deficiency bill No. 1, this being No. 2—was being considered on the floor the Sweet bill had passed, during the consideration of which in committee it developed that while the entire deficiency bill had only $3,000,000 and a little over, we had to add $30,000,000 because of the so-called Sweet bill, and we would have to add still further amounts. It is in order to take care of the soldiers who were injured in the war that we are compelled to spend these amounts in the hospitals named.

Mr. KING. Do I understand the Senator to mean that the Sweet bill increased the number that would have the right to enter these various sanitariums and hospitals?

Mr. WARREN. It provided not only for that, but it provided for extra pay and extra accommodations. I will say to the Senator that my colleague on the committee, and the Senator's colleague in the Senate [Mr. SMOOT], had charge of the Sweet bill, and I shall ask him to make a statement accordingly as to the effect of that measure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the so-called Sweet bill increased from $30 per month to $80 per month the pay of soldiers in hospitals who were disabled. As I stated upon the floor of the Senate when the bill was under consideration, it carried an increased expenditure of $81,000,000 per annum. The annual appropriation required over and above the appropriations that were required under the $30 per month provision of the then existing law amounted to $81,000,000 per annum.

Mr. KING. For how long?

Mr. SMOOT. For years to come, I will say to the Senator. In other words, the amount that will be required from now on to pay $80 per month and expenses attached to caring for disabled soldiers in our hospitals is $169,000,000 per annum.

The Senator will remember that in the Sweet Act there was an appropriation made of only $30,000,000. That was to take care of the back pay provided for in that bill for the disabled soldiers up to, I think, the 1st day of April, but I am not quite sure as to that. However, it is near the 1st day of April. This appropriation is absolutely necessary to meet the requirements of the legislation passed known as the Sweet bill. I gave notice at the time when the bill was passed that it carried only a temporary appropriation to take care of the immediate needs, but that the full amount required for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, would be $81,000,000.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is a little too close on that figure. As I remember, it was $91,000,000, and the pending bill carries on the next page, as it came from the House, $55,000,000, which, added to the $30,000,000, would be $85,000,000. The House did not allow the amount asked for. I am sure it was $91,000,000, and possibly $93,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that the first estimate that was given was something over $90,000,000, but there were changes made in the bill that reduced it to $81,000,000, as I have already stated. I will state that there is no question about the $55,000,000. It has to be appropriated.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask my colleague a question. The appropriation which was carried in the former bill to which he refers was to cover the payment to the soldiers themselves, as I understood him?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Why would increasing their compensation increase the demands of these various hospitals and sanitariums?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not know that the Senator's question had reference to this bill.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason for the increase in the different hospitals and sanitariums comes from the fact that the number of soldiers who are entering the hospitals is increasing every day. In other words, the Vocational Board had been very slow indeed in passing upon the cases of the different soldiers throughout the country who have made application for entrance into the hospitals up to the time of the passage of the Sweet bill, but the numbers have increased in a greater proportion to those who made application in the last two months than it had before that time because of the better functioning of the Vocational Board. I will say to my colleague that the reason for these additional appropriations is to take care of the expenses that are incurred by the additional soldiers who have entered the hospitals and sanitariums.

Mr. KING. While my colleague has the floor I should like to ask him if there is any further explanation that can be made with respect to the $55,000,000?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. KING. In other words, the explanation just made covers all that may be said in respect to that amount?

Mr. SMOOT. I have stated, I think, about all that could be said in relation to the $55,000,000. The appropriation must be made, because the Congress has passed a law requiring the money to be paid.

I will say to the Senator having the bill in charge that on page 16, lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, there is something to which I wish to call his attention. I had not read it carefully until just now. It reads:

> Appropriations herein or hereafter made for the Public Health Service shall not be expended for advertising in newspapers, magazines, or periodicals for any purpose other than the procurement of necessary services, supplies, materials, and equipment.

Mr. President, I am a little fearful of that language, and I wish to state why. Government publications in the different posts and throughout the country have been, in many cases, turned into advertising mediums, and there have been certain complaints brought to the attention of the Joint Committee on Printing through advertisements in the Government publications at the different posts. In other words, charges have been made direct that no merchant who does not advertise in those papers stands a ghost of a show of selling goods to the Government of the United States. So the Joint Committee on Printing, under the authorization given them by law, concluded to issue an order that in such publications there should be no advertisements inserted, and they are strictly prohibited by the order of your Joint Committee on Printing.

It seems to me that this paragraph has been put into the bill for the very purpose of overriding the order issued by the Joint Committee on Printing, so that the Public Health Service can insert advertisements in the magazines and periodicals if they are for the purpose of procuring necessary services, supplies, materials, and equipment. That is all the advertisements ever were for——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that in the House they put in certain claims of certain newspapers to be paid. They went out on a point of order. We did not put them in for the very reason the Senator has mentioned, but the Senator upon a moment's reflection will understand that in letting contracts for making purchases the law provides that they must advertise for bids.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WARREN. So we have provided here that—

> Appropriation herein or hereafter made for the Public Health Service shall not be expended for advertising in newspapers, magazines, or periodicals for any purpose other than the procurement of necessary services, supplies, materials, and equipment—

Which, under the law, they will have to do.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is no need for this provision if the law requires it. If it applies to newspapers or magazines or periodicals outside of the newspapers and magazines and periodicals issued by the Government, then I have no interest in it at all, because the law requires bids shall be asked for in such papers.

Mr. WARREN. That is put in to check them, so that they can only advertise that and not do as they have been doing. If we strike that out, they may take these same liberties again. This is really a check and not a permission. It checks them so that they can not spend the money except for these necessities. They did it heretofore.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator believe that with this language the Public Health Service can advertise in the post papers and post magazines and post periodicals?

Mr. WARREN. I think they can only advertise for bids, as I say. They may do that. As to what they may do unauthorized and what they may not do under the law, we shall have to reach them in some other way. I would dislike to have the Senator strike out the restriction, because the restriction is in there to accomplish the very purpose about which the Senator is talking.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I want to accomplish. I want the Public Health Service and every other department of the Government to be prevented from publishing advertisements in the Government publications printed at the different posts of the country, and also in the Indian school publications that are issued under the direction of the Government and paid for by the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. If I understood him correctly, the Senator said that the Joint Committee on Printing had issued an order prohibiting the insertion of these advertisements in these magazines.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I have never examined the law, but I wondered whether there was any doubt about the authority of the committee to do that. I am in entire sympathy with what the committee has done in that behalf.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt whatever.

Mr. POMERENE. If those advertisements have been subjected to the use which the Senator suggests, it never ought to have been done.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question of it, I will say to the Senator, and there is no department that has ever questioned the authority of the committee under the act that was passed in one of the deficiency appropriation bills of the last session of Congress.

I wish to say in passing that under that law the Joint Committee on Printing have stopped the publication of I can not tell how many periodicals and magazines that were printed by the Government of the United States. Right here I do want to call attention to this fact——

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator to allow me to insert, in support of just what he is saying, something from the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. WARREN. While the matter was being considered as to what we have left out of the bill, Representative GOOD said:

Mr. GOOD. The situation in regard to these newspaper advertisements is this: There was about $10,000 or $12,000 of the million dollars appropriated to combat influenza used for newspaper advertisements. In all cases excepting these the Secretary of the Treasury approved the bills or the contracts for inserting these advertisements. They were display advertisements of a page or half page—I have forgotten the exact space. But in these cases the Secretary did not approve of the plan and the expenditure until after the advertisements were inserted. Therefore under the ruling they had no authority to pay for them. These advertisements were not paid for, and the others were paid for. That is the reason why this item is carried here as legislation in this bill. There is no question about its being subject to a point of order.

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full sympathy with the legislation as understood by that statement. What I am fearful of is that the Public Health Service will take advantage of this provision and will advertise again in Government periodicals and magazines that are published at the different posts.

To show the Senate how some of the departments act, I wish to call attention to what took place after the Joint Committee on Printing had issued the order that at certain posts there should not be more than one magazine or periodical issued by the Government. Some of the posts were printing two and some of the Indian schools were printing two, and magazines of more costly paper than if they had been printed at Harvard University. So we decided that there should not be more than one of those Government publications printed at any of the posts and schools. What happened? We have just learned.

The printing by the printing press of the publications was discontinued. The law said "printing," and so what did they do? I find that one of the publications that was stopped is lithographed. [Exhibiting.] We thought we were going to prevent the waste of print paper. I find here a better grade of paper, and the whole contents of the magazine run off on the typewriter and then lithographed and issued as it was before, except that it was lithographed instead of printed. I hold samples of other periodicals in my hand which instead of being printed were run off on the typewriter and mimeographed. Has it saved any paper? Has it saved any money? Why, no; it would have been much better if they were going to be published at all to have them printed because of the fact that it could be done with less paper and for less money.

But what do the departments care for the laws that are passed by Congress? They do not care what laws Congress enacts if a way can be found to avoid them, particularly if it is a case of spending the people's money.

As far as I was concerned, I knew nothing about this matter until some of the other departments, seeing what was being done, asked whether the mimeographing of these magazines was printing or not, and wanted a decision upon it.

What I am afraid of is that if this language stays in the bill the way it is, the Public Health Service will simply go to work and advertise in these very periodicals that the order has been issued by the Joint Committee on Printing to discontinue.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, one of my colleagues on the committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], calls my attention to an amendment which would certainly fix that so as to make it positive, and that is in line 6, after the word "of," to insert the words "bids for," so it would read, "the procurement of bids for necessary services, supplies, materials, and equipment." That would limit it to bids for something that it is necessary to purchase.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that will make any difference, and I am perfectly willing to let the provision go as it is now, with the statement that I have made upon the floor of the Senate. I wish to say now that if the authorization is abused by the Public Health Service, and the abuse is called to my attention, I am going to ask Congress to pass a law which I think will be so worded that it can not be abused in the future. I recognize that this is a limitation on the department advertising in the general newspaper and periodical press of the country, and that is a splendid thing; I should agree with the provision if that was as far as it went. I am going to allow my statement to stand to-day, so that if the provision in the bill is used for the purpose to which I have called attention, I repeat I am going to ask for a special act of Congress to see that it is prevented in the future.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the bill, on page 2, line 20, which I desire that the Secretary shall read.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, while that is out of order, as the Senator from Tennessee desires to leave the Chamber I am willing to consent to his request. In order that he may offer his amendment to the committee amendment, at the point he indicates, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment to the paragraph on page 2, under the head of "Council of National Defense," was agreed to, and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being none, the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The Secretary will now state the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 20, after the numerals "$40,000," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That no salary shall be paid to any officer or employee of the council in excess of $4,000 per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I simply desire to say, however, for the RECORD, if the Senator from Tennessee will permit me, that in answer to a question which he asked me as to what the Director of the Council of National Defense was paid, I stated that his salary would reach at least $10,000 per annum. After looking the matter up I find the amount that I named was not quite high enough. The amount paid has been $200 a week or $10,400 per annum.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I think under the small appropriation which is here provided, and the necessary diminution of the number of employees and the importance of the work of the bureau, that a $4,000 salary is ample; and I hope my amendment to the committee amendment may be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask my colleague's attention to the matter which he has just been discussing, and I also desire the attention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. It seems to me that the amendment which has been suggested by the Senator from North Dakota would make the matter a little clearer and might tend to prohibit the flagrant abuse which has been described by my colleague. However, I suggest that this would be a better amendment: After the word "equipment," in line 7, on page 16, strike out the period and add the words "where the law requires advertisement." It would be clear then that no advertisement could be inserted in any newspaper or magazine other than for the procurement of necessary supplies, materials, and equipment where the law requires advertisement.

Mr. WARREN. I am afraid that that, perhaps, would give them too much liberty, but I have no objection to the restriction.

Mr. KING. From what has been said I supposed that the law required that in the procurement of certain supplies they must advertise, and I thought my amendment would restrict them to advertising only where the law compels them to advertise.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota, however, would make it, I think, more emphatic and restrict them to advertising for bids only.

Mr. KING. If that satisfies the chairman of the committee, it will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. GRONNA. I think the suggestion which I made—I did not propose it as an amendment—would limit them absolutely to bids.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from North Dakota should offer that as an amendment, and I shall be glad to support it.

Mr. WARREN. Very well, I suggest the amendment now, that on line 6, page 16, after the word "of" the words "bids for" be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "War Department," on page 16, after line 12, to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for the use of the War Department and its bureaus and offices, fiscal year 1919, $620.42.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, or my colleague, who has been giving attention to the question of the reassignment of the various bureaus to space in the public buildings, whether this item will cover all claims for rent for the fiscal year 1920?

Mr. WARREN. Before the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] answers his colleague's question, I will say that this is for buildings which have been used; it is to close an account; it has gone to the board of appraisement and they have made the tender, which is really, one might say, a judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that this amount ought to be paid. In further answer I will say that the building commission is taking the Government employees out of the rented buildings just as fast as it is possible to do so. I have not a doubt that the commission has saved on rent alone in the District of Columbia since its creation at least $500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 16, after line 16, to insert:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

So much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee explain this item. Before doing so I desire to ask him whether or not the amendment permits employment of additional clerical help? The Senator will keep in mind that the War Department now has more than 20,000 employees in the District of Columbia. I think many of them are wholly unnecessary. Recently a survey was made by officials of the Government who were authorized to make such survey, and I am credibly informed that in merely one branch of the War Department economies were recommended in the matter of personnel which would have saved $1,000,000. The recommendations were not carried out; and yet we are giving now, as I understand, by this amendment, to the same department—and it is The Adjutant General's office to which I am now alluding——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me to make a statement, I think he will continue his remarks with a little more information than he now has.

The amendment is really in the line of economy. It proposes to take a fund from a branch where they do undertake to save and use it in another branch where it is required to enable the work to be carried on. For instance, the appropriations made in general form have been allocated, and we do not wish to appropriate any further now. They are getting out the records as fast as possible; first, of the demobilization of the Army; and second, the records as to the draft, which by law we have required shall go to all of the States and be furnished to individuals and soldiers. They are two different propositions; but what they propose, in order to save expense, is while the demobilization sheets are being prepared, in so far as they can, that they shall be passed right over and be worked on for the other purpose. It is plain now that there is not enough, and it is impossible to take enough out of the present appropriations to complete the draft records, which are required by law and which later are to be furnished to the States.

The Adjutant General promises—and he is very earnest about it—that he will be able, without the appointment of extra clerks, simply by using the clerks he now has, and with what he might save on the other item, to carry forward and complete the necessary work required under the law.

As to the clerks, a very great number has been employed in the War Department during the war and since to a lesser extent. The office of The Adjutant General, of course, has a large amount of work accruing after the war, as in the case of the draft records, which must be completed, although that work has no reference to actual operations in the field. So while the work of The Adjutant General's office has increased, the number of clerks has been greatly reduced.

This matter was considered——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will bear with me one moment further, they asked for an appropriation, in the first place, on the first deficiency bill. The request was discussed very earnestly by The Adjutant General, the Secretary of War, and myself, and more particularly by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House. The item was kept out of that bill on the understanding that they might make application for its insertion in this bill, to see whether they could not bring about this economy, and whether, as they proceeded with the work and arranged the affairs of the office, by carrying them forward together they could not effect this economy. They have concluded that that is quite possible, and they desire to proceed along that line. The Secretary of War has now indorsed what he was about ready to indorse at that time, and he seems to have the same confidence The Adjutant General has that what they desire can be done, so that no further appropriation will be required to execute that work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, perhaps my observation may have conveyed an erroneous idea. I stated that the conditions to which I refer existed in The Adjutant General's office, but I want to acquit The Adjutant General of a failure to carry into effect the economies to which I have referred. My information is that he desired to do so, and that the failure to do so is not attributable at all to The Adjutant General. I agree with the Senator, and if this money is to be expended by The Adjutant General and he is given a free hand I shall be entirely satisfied. The Senator assures us that there will be no increase in the clerical force of other branches of the War Department. I wish to say in passing that I am not so well satisfied that some other branch of the War Department will reduce its clerical force.

Mr. WARREN. The clerical force has been largely reduced in The Adjutant General's office.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if the committee amendment remains in the bill at all I should like to offer an amendment. I believe it is in order now to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, and I send to the Secretary's desk an amendment which I ask may be stated, it to be inserted after the last word in line 2 on page 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 2, after the word "it" it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That one copy of the draft record in any individual case shall be furnished to any Member of Congress in any record or papers relating to the draft in the State in which such Member resides on his application therefor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer this amendment to the committee amendment in order to secure to Members either of the House of Representatives or of the Senate the right to one copy of the draft record in any individual case arising in his own State. I do not insist, of course, that one has or ought to have any lawful right to have such record except in the case of his own immediate constituents in the State where he lives. In the case of a Senator the right extends to the record for the entire State, but no evil can result from giving the right to a Member of the House to secure a copy of any record of the draft arising in any of the districts in his own State, although outside of the district which he represents.

The amendment only secures, as a matter of right, that which is now a matter of grace. A Senator or Representative may make application to either read or see any of the draft records relating to a particular case, and it may be denied him at the pleasure of the head of the War Department or any subordinate having the custody or care of the paper he desires to see. I undertake to say that no Member of Congress now can go to the War Department, and, upon the sole merit of his application, outside of any influence that he may have of a personal or political character, be enabled to see any part of the draft records either as affecting his own State or any other State.

While it is proposed in the amendment reported by the committee to give to public officials such records, the proposal is limited by the language, beginning in line 22 of page 16:

Shall be available for the employment of clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.

A Member of Congress does not belong to any one of the three enumerated classes; a Member of Congress is not a public official, as the courts have decided several times. He is not a public official in the sense that he is in the class with those on the pay roll in any of the executive departments, in any appointive office in the judicial department of the Government, or any of the employees or clerical help of the judiciary. As it is now worded, the provision is left open to interpretation. The interpretation might possibly, in some event, if litigation resulted, be furnished by judicial decision, but more likely it would be furnished by some subordinate in the War Department or in whatever department these records may hereafter be found. That discretion, resting in the mind of an appointive official, is not exercised under any known rule. It is an unbridled discretion. It puts in the hands of an appointee, or the head of some department or bureau, or some one at the desk having charge of the matter, complete discretionary power either to grant or to refuse, as he pleases. It, in fact, has been exercised in that way.

A Member of Congress, I say, unless he is accompanied by personal or political influence, if he goes to The Adjutant General's office and sees him in person, or any subordinate, or communicates with the head of the War Department, has no assurance whatever that he will be permitted to see a solitary one of the papers paid for by this appropriation and sought to be covered by any part of the money appropriated in this amendment. There is no assurance of that kind at all; and I know of actual applications made, under conditions that rendered it proper for the applicant to see the record and read it, and to make a copy himself if he desired, where questions have arisen in the district where the draft records originally were made, where the men drafted have come back from the service beyond seas or in the camps in this country, where some controversy has arisen making it desirable for the returned soldier, or his family in case he is dead, to have access to the draft records sent up by the local board, in order to establish the accuracy of a statement; and access to those records, or the right to read them, has been denied to Members of Congress.

Of course, we are long-suffering in it. Anybody that derides or ridicules or rebuffs or repulses or tramples upon a Member of Congress, either of the House or of the Senate, has a right to believe that it is justified by immemorial usage long acquiesced in and universally commended. No wonder the departments look upon us with contempt. We have invited it, we have helped create it, and we deserve every rebuff that a Senator or a Representative gets in a department. There is no such thing as legislative discretion in making an appropriation, especially for a deficiency bill. It does not make any difference what administration it is, whether it is the President and his appointees, the heads of departments and Cabinet members, in one political party or the other; it is the same insufferable, arrogant, narrow snob in place under any administration you find. They have no constituents. Many of them are under civil service. Their principal occupation is to clamor for an increase in salary and to treat with contempt every elective officer that has a constituency to which he must appeal every two or six years, as the case may be. The long-continued practice of Members of Congress has led them to believe they can do this with impunity, and they generally do.

On Saturday last I heard the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] make some proper strictures upon the course of business in this Chamber. It is found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date. It, no doubt, is worthy of perusal, and ought to have been made at the time. However, the burden of the criticism was that the civil-service retirement bill was pending and had been pending all that afternoon and that the entire afternoon had been occupied in considering and discussing everything else except the retirement bill. The criticism was well merited, because that was the course of business on that afternoon. It has been the course of business here for many years; and while the criticism is merited, yet the course of affairs in the Senate justifies the procedure taken on last Saturday at the pleasure of any Member of this body.

There is no such thing as parliamentary law in this Chamber. There is some in the House of Representatives. Parliamentary law in this Chamber is as extinct as the dodo; or, if lingering remnants are found, as dead as a mummy slumbering in the chamber in the interior of a pyramid.

At one time in a national convention a gentleman from Texas had his delegation contested by some irreverent authority from that State. Among other things, it was charged against him that he selected the delegates by riding roughshod over every parliamentary rule and ignoring every practice known to any well-established textbook on rules of order.

He denied it with great vehemence before the credentials committee and afterwards on the floor of the convention. He said it was a false charge, that they had no rules to cover the case referred to, a gross violation of the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure in the selection of delegates from Texas. He said: "Sir, we made a rule in every case right on the floor of the convention to fit everything we did"; and so we do in this Chamber. To-day we have one rule and to-morrow we have another. There is no well-established maxim of legislation in this Chamber that is not violated every day of its session and every week of its existence.

The treaty has been dragged from the grave that has opened its ponderous marble jaws to cast it up again, and is now before us—before us on the motion to reconsider of a Senator for whom I have the greatest admiration and liking, who voted with a minority. I do not know of a town meeting in a New England township, I do not know of the veriest tyro in a debating club, that has not for many, many years known that the person who is entitled to make a motion to reconsider must have voted with the prevailing side on the question when it was theretofore decided; but that cuts no particular figure in this body. I only refer to that as an illustration, because it is done here every week. So we have invited this course of affairs by our utter disregard and recklessness of all well-established rules of order. What is the use of reading and attempting to become an adept in the rules of order of this body? Everybody who has been here 30 days knows that the only rule of order that is of any binding force is made by a majority. It is a rule of legislative or parliamentary force, and in its last analysis it can be nothing else.

Again, general legislation on an appropriation bill is only forbidden in this body now by a parliamentary rule. By unanimous consent it can be set aside, or, if no one raises the point of order against it, it still can go through. General legislation can be attached to an appropriation bill by unanimous consent in spite of the rules. There is nothing in the constitutional limitations upon the legislative power of this body requiring otherwise or forbidding it. No roll call is required, unless a sufficient number demand it, upon appropriations running into the hundreds of millions of dollars. Literally we have invited through a long course of years the slipshod dissolution and fall, the departure from the text, the general debate that ranges over every known subject and invades every realm of the human imagination, by our fixed course of procedure in this body. Therefore, why should any criticism be indulged in?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. WARREN. In order to prove exactly what the Senator says, I am willing to accept his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator accepts it?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will comply with all the rules, then, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say, in that connection, that it is intended that those records shall be furnished, and I understand that it is the intention of The Adjutant General to furnish them. The difficulty, I suppose, has been that to get at the proper documents and take them out of their sequence involves some delay. It might be that mischief might occur or some expense might be brought about in that way, but I hope not. I agree with the Senator's proposition that they ought to be where Members of Congress could have them; and, as I said before, the Senator has proved to my satisfaction, and to the satisfaction of the Senate, that the Senate can, by unanimous consent, do almost everything, so I am not going to object to his amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be willing to add to the amendment that a Member of Congress applying for them shall pay for the cost of the record himself. I am not particular about that, just so we get it. I understand, however, that the Senator accepts it in that form.

Mr. WARREN. It will have to go to conference, and it may have to be re-formed there to some extent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Kendrick	Overman
Ball	Gay	King	Page
Beckham	Glass	Kirby	Phelan
Brandegee	Gore	Knox	Phipps
Capper	Gronna	McKellar	Poindexter
Chamberlain	Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Cummins	Harris	Moses	Sherman
Curtis	Harrison	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Dial	Henderson	New	Smith, Md.
Elkins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot
Fletcher	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer

Stanley	Thomas	Walsh, Mont.	Williams
Sterling	Townsend	Warren	Wolcott
Sutherland	Trammell	Watson

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to be aware of the nature of the pending amendment before the vote is taken. I have no disposition to make any protracted remarks, but shall content myself with very briefly calling to the attention of the Senate the nature and purport of the pending amendment.

The amendment is on line 2, page 17, of the pending bill. The particular paragraph amended relates to the records of the men who were drafted during the German war, and the proviso which is proposed to be inserted in the act is as follows:

Provided, That one copy of the draft record in any individual case shall be furnished to any Member of Congress in any record or papers relating to the draft in the State in which such Member resides on his application therefor.

If I correctly understand the purpose of the amendment it provides that any Member of Congress in either branch may go down to The Adjutant General's office and secure a copy of the full draft record of any individual anywhere in his district or in his State. Now, considering the rather intimate details of a very personal nature that the draft reduced to record concerning the individuals within its scope and the therefore rather sacred nature of that information gathered by the Government solely to aid in building up an army, it seems to me the Senate is going a very good ways to direct that that personal, intimate information about individuals shall be turned over to every nosing, prying Member of Congress that might see fit to go down to The Adjutant General and get it for any purpose, be it proper, improper, or what not. How many individuals would be thus exposed to outrage? Nearly 24,000,000 men, Americans who answered the draft questionnaires. This is the number of our fellow citizens whose private lives this amendment would expose to the gaze of the curious or the vicious.

I can very well fancy if this provision becomes a law that Members of Congress will soon make themselves the clearing house of scandalmongers all over the United States seeking information for improper purposes concerning the private, intimate affairs of men who were called to be soldiers and possibly fight for their country.

Mr. President, did we enact this draft legislation in order to secure information to supply to the defamers of character and destroyers of reputation?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suggest that the Senator give us some information with reference to the object of any such provision.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think, if the Senator desires me to answer frankly, that the object of the provision is to ascertain the draft record of Edsel Ford. I think that is the object of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Of whom?

Mr. WOLCOTT. One Edsel Ford, in whom I have no interest; but if that is the object, let us provide here that The Adjutant General is directed to turn over to a Member of Congress from the State of Illinois the draft record of Edsel Ford. That will accomplish the whole purpose of the amendment. Why subject every one of the selected or drafted soldiers of the United States Army to the risk of annoyance and bedevilment by those who may be prying into the information contained in their records? I sincerely hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. KELLOGG. I might suggest that it is pretty well known.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator, before he takes his seat, if he can give the Senate any estimate of the expense of the enforcement of that amendment to the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can not undertake to say what would be the expense to the United States Government. I am convinced that it will be at the expense of harried fellings and outraged rights of American citizens who were American soldiers, and that is an expense I do not care to incur.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I might suggest to the Senator from Delaware that a very easy way to get rid of it is to raise a point of order.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not know what particular matter has been objected to by the Senator from Delaware, but if it is the entire amendment as proposed from line 18 on page 16 to line 2 on page 17 of the bill, it seems to be properly guarded there. These things are only to be furnished——

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am discussing an amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and which I now hand the Senator. That is the amendment I have been discussing.

Mr. President, I make a point of order against the pending amendment, that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Delaware to raise the point of order as to the entire amendment or merely to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss it. If that can be added to the committee amendment I imagine we would have to raise a point of order to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KIRBY. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the matter from the standpoint of the proposed amendment to the amendment. I thought the matter was properly guarded in the amendment. I know the practice now is that no one outside of the soldier himself or his attorney can procure a copy of the draft record here unless it is upon a certificate of the court, if the matter is in court, that the ends of justice will be subserved by the production of a copy of the record. They guard it very carefully now, and I believe the proposed committee amendment guards it carefully, but as to the amendment to the amendment I rather think I am not for it at all myself.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let the amendment to the amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, line 2, at the end of the committee amendment, add the following:

Provided, That one copy of the draft record in any individual case shall be furnished to any Member of Congress in any record or papers relating to the draft in the State in which such Member resides on his application therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time, he said:

Mr. President, I can not close my remarks on the River Rouge and the deficiency appropriation this evening. I am informed that the chairman of the committee desires to have an executive session, and I will therefore let it go over until to-morrow with the understanding that I get the floor to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator will give way for that purpose. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, February 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that there is a thousand times more good in the heart of man than evil, a thousand times more joy than sorrow.

Evil is a negligible quantity. Good is in the ascendancy. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Law is the mark of civilization, lawlessness the mark of savagery. Dignity is law, selfishness is crime.

Faith is larger than doubt, hope than despair, love than hate. The star of love is in the ascendancy now and always, attested by the Cross of Calvary. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

WRONGFUL CONVERSION OF MONEY.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 10072.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10072) to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That any United States marshal, clerk, receiver, referee, trustee, or other officer of a United States court, or any deputy, assistant, or employee of any such marshal, clerk, receiver, referee, trustee, or other officer who shall unlawfully retain or convert to his own use or to the use of another any moneys received for or on account of costs or advance deposits to cover fees, expenses, or costs, deposits for fees or expenses in bankruptcy cases, composition funds or money of bankrupt estates, fees in naturalization matters, or any other money whatever which has come into his hands by virtue of his official relation or by the fact of his official position or employment shall be deemed guilty of embezzlement and shall, where the offense is not otherwise punishable by some statute of the United States, be fined not more than double the value of the money thus retained or converted, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both; and it shall not be a defense in such case that the accused person had an interest, contingent or otherwise, in some part of such moneys or of the fund from which they were retained or converted.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced at the request of the Attorney General. I hold in my hand a letter written by the office of the Attorney General, calling attention to the fact that under existing statutes it is believed that no officer can be prosecuted for embezzlement of funds, provided he has any contingent interest in those funds, and it is also doubted that receivers of money under the bankruptcy law can be punished at present. In view of that fact it would seem that some legislation should be passed along this line.

The bill is in line with like legislation in the various States. I know we have had in the State of Minnesota for a great many years legislation of this kind. Under the common law if a person was intrusted with funds as a trustee or agent he could not be prosecuted for larceny of such funds; it was held to be a breach of trust; not larceny.

If there are no questions in regard to the bill, I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This covers not only receiverships, trustees, and so forth, but it also covers clerks and marshals. Under the existing law are the marshal's fees and clerk's fees all required to be turned into the Treasury and they be paid a salary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think they are all turned in now, both those of the marshal and of the clerk.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Are there not some cases where the marshal receives a mileage compensation which may be paid by a party to the suit which he is not required to turn in, but which he uses to pay the actual expense of his deputy? I do not recall. I wondered how far this provision would go with reference to those officers of the court, where you provide that they shall be guilty of an offense if the money is not turned in practically, and then the fact that they have an interest in the money would be no defense. I was under the impression that there were some cases where the money belonged to them practically.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume what belonged to them would not have to be turned in, but the fact that they may have an interest in part of it would not justify them in withholding the balance.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Undoubtedly that would not justify them in withholding the balance. It may be that no one would ever be prosecuted under it, although that is never a safe assumption.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It provides that a person may not unlawfully retain it and convert it to his own use. If the money is his own, I do not see how anybody could be convicted of embezzling it. But he must not take of the property any more than he is entitled to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose, although I do not know what the fact is, that quite generally the clerks and marshals who collect fees hold them for a time, even where they were paid a salary, and then deduct the salary by direction of the Attorney General out of the fees collected. I do not know whether that is the case or whether they are paid by check or Treasury order. But where the officers, as I understand it, are paid by direction of the marshal, the marshal approves the various vouchers and the allowance is made on his order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an amendment in line 10. I want to ask unanimous consent to correct the spelling of the word "bankruptcy," in line 10. The letter "r" has been omitted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 1, line 10, correct the spelling of the word "bankruptcy."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I did not get the benefit of the gentleman's colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but I will proceed in accordance with my own ideas with respect to the provisions of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield the floor?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not yield the floor. I understood the gentleman was going to ask a question.

Mr. GARD. When the gentleman is through I want to speak in opposition to the bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GARD. I want to speak in my own time.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is opposed to the bill he is entitled to one hour after the gentleman from Minnesota yields the floor.

Mr. GARD. After the gentleman yields the floor I will take my own time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is customary on bills of this kind to move the previous question. That is the only way it can be brought to a vote.

Mr. GARD. I have some observations to make on the bill. If the gentleman wants to move the previous question it is in the power of the majority on the other side, and I presume they would sustain him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably they would. But the gentleman from Minnesota offered to yield time.

Mr. GARD. I thought the gentleman yielded the floor.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I did not yield the floor.

Mr. GARD. How long does the gentleman intend to debate the matter? I did not get the benefit of what the gentleman said to the gentleman from Illinois. Therefore, I was desirous of asking some questions.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. GARD. Ten minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield the time.

The SPEAKER The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the matter to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee is in connection with the use of the word "employee" in so far as it relates to receivers, referees, and trustees. The law to which the bill proposed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is supplemental follows sections 97, 98, and 99 of the Code of the United States. Section 97 refers to any officer connected with or employed in the Internal Revenue Service of the United States. The only words associated there are—

Any officer * * * and any assistant of such officer who shall embezzle or wrongfully convert to his own use any money—

And so forth. Section 98 provides that—

Whoever, being an officer of the United States, shall knowingly contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement, to pay a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated—

And so forth.

Section 99 provides that—

Whoever, being a clerk or other officer of a court of the United States, shall fail forthwith to deposit any money belonging in the registry of the court—

And so forth.

These are the sections which have so far been held to include all those responsible under the courts. Now, the letter of the Attorney General states that section 97 of the criminal code provides for the punishment for embezzling by any officer of a United States court.

I do not find that that construction is exactly correct. Nor do I find in any of the previous statutes that there has been so far an extension of the crime of embezzlement—because that is what this is—to include an employee of a receiver, a referee, or a trustee.

It would seem to me that in the extension of laws relating to officers of the United States courts it would be entirely proper to take into consideration the marshals, the clerks, and other officers; but when we go beyond that and charge the crime of embezzlement to any employee of a receiver, referee, or trustee, it seems to me we are extending it beyond what is necessary under the existing statutes. In other words, a receiver or a referee or a trustee is an officer of the court. He is primarily responsible to the court, since his tenure of position depends upon his appointment and his report to the court.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. In just a moment, when I finish this thought. Now, a referee is a man to whom a case is referred for adjudication, I think almost entirely on points of law, and to say that any employee of a receiver or referee is guilty of embezzlement, when the embezzlement applies to the principal officer, and not to the subsidiary officer, is, it seems to me, an extension beyond what should be the proper scope of the crime. Now I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Does the gentleman think that the word "employee" is surrounded with such a halo of glory that such an employee ought not to be amenable for a criminal offense, such as the theft or embezzlement of public funds?

Mr. GARD. No, I do not; but what I make the question about is that an employee of a referee is not a man who by virtue of his employment could be guilty of such embezzlement.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Take the case of a receiver of a large railroad system. He would necessarily have a number of employees under his jurisdiction who might possibly have to do with the handling of funds. They might unlawfully convert the funds to their own use.

Mr. GARD. I will say that that is not in the contemplation of this act. The only contemplation of this act is where one embezzles money which he receives on account of costs or money advanced to cover fees or costs.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; or any other money which comes into his hands by virtue of his official relation or official position or employment.

Mr. GARD. That is the point on which I have doubt. I doubt that there would be any money coming into the hands of any employee, the direct responsibility being that of the receiver.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a corporation may be a receiver. If the employees of such corporation get possession of funds belonging to the Government and convert them to their own use or embezzle them, why should they not be liable to prosecution? Trust companies very often act in these fiduciary capacities, and they usually have a large number of employees. If they take the money, it does seem to me the Government ought to be able to punish the one who is guilty instead of simply suing the corporation to recover whatever loss there may be.

Mr. GARD. I am glad to have the words of the gentleman with reference to the matter with reference to which the subcommittee raised the question with the Attorney General as to the necessity of the legislation. That is the reason I am making the inquiry of the chairman of the committee as to the extent to which this bill goes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman will notice that this bill does not go beyond supplying a deficiency in the law. It does not apply in those cases where persons are already liable under existing law.

Mr. GARD. What is the gentleman's attitude with respect to this bill and its relation to sections 97, 98, and 99, which are laws of the same kind?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. On page 2 of this bill the gentleman will find that it only punishes in those cases where the offenses are not otherwise punishable by some existing statute. So it is only intended to supply whatever deficiency there is in existing statutes. It does not cover the cases to which the gentleman refers, because they remain just as they are.

Mr. GARD. It is not intended to amend sections 97, 98, and 99?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No.

Mr. GARD. It leaves them as they are, and provides this statute in addition?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In addition, chiefly for the purpose of preventing the defense being made that the person charged had some interest in the fund. It is to avoid the difficulty that has grown out of the old common-law doctrine that a person who has an interest in the money can not be prosecuted criminally, but is only held to have committed a breach of trust. I remember having had occasion to consider the question of whether a receiver is an officer of the court appointing him.

Mr. GARD. Whether he was an officer of the court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The question has been raised. I have just called attention to the fact that a corporation may be a receiver, and it may be somewhat doubtful whether a corporation is an officer of the court, and as such is embraced in the statutes punishing officers for embezzlement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 63, noes 7.

Accordingly the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OLIVER, for two days, on account of official business.

To Mr. NELSON of Missouri, for the day, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. KRAUS, for two days, on account of official business.

HOUSE BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that February 13 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 10746. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHERS FOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12486, authorizing the several district courts of the United States to appoint official stenographers and prescribe their duties and compensation.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12486, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That each judge of the district courts of the United States may appoint a stenographer. Such appointee shall be the official stenographer of the said court and shall hold such office during the pleasure of the court. Any official stenographer appointed under this act may, with the consent of the court, temporarily supply a competent substitute stenographer. Such stenographer and substitute stenographer shall be competent in the art of stenography, and before entering upon the duties herein provided shall make oath or affirmation before the clerk of the particular court to perform such duties with fidelity, and a copy of such oath or affirmation, signed by the affiant, shall be certified by the clerk administering the same and filed and recorded in the office of the clerk of such court.

SEC. 2. That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony in all judicial proceedings and trials, together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, to which rulings, orders, comments, or remarks either party may except as a matter of right, and such exception shall be noted by the official stenographer in his notes, together with any exception to the judge's charge, taken before the jury retires; all of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial. And it shall be the duty of such stenographer to act as secretary to such judge and to take full stenographic notes of such other matters in connection with the business of the court as the judge may from time to time direct.

SEC. 3. That such official stenographer shall receive an annual compensation to be fixed by the judge not exceeding $2,000, and to be paid in the same manner as other court officials are paid.

In addition to such salary, such official stenographer may charge for any transcript of such notes ordered by any person interested other than a judge of such court 10 cents per folio thereof and 2 cents per folio for each manifold or other copy thereof when so made that it can be made with such transcript, but he shall upon the request of the judge presiding at any trial or proceeding read his notes or make a transcript thereof for the use of such judge without charge. Upon the request of any person interested, and the payment or tender of his fees therefor, such official stenographer shall furnish a duly certified transcript of such notes or any indicated part thereof in words and figures represented by the character used in making the same.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been introduced for the purpose of providing official stenographers for the district courts of the United States. At present there is no law under which stenographers are furnished. Each person when he goes into court if he desires a record must furnish a stenographer. That is true both of the Government and the private litigant. In many instances both have stenographers in the trial of a case. If it is desired to secure a transcript to take an appeal, secure a writ of error or of certiorari, or for any other purpose of a review of the case, it is usually necessary to have a transcript of the evidence, and that can seldom be secured without a stenographic copy of the evidence.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will yield a little later.

Mr. BEE. Very well; I thought the gentleman had finished his statement.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The situation that exists in the Federal courts makes it very difficult for a poor man to secure a review of an action tried in that court. He can not afford to hire a stenographer so as to secure the necessary transcript on which to base his proceeding. It is my impression that in almost every court of any consequence in this country the States provide official stenographers. A bill was considered by the committee somewhat different from this. After consulting with a number of people on this floor in trying to find out what the general practice was in the various States, I concluded that a bill along the lines of this one would meet the situation and be in harmony with the practice in State courts. It is not believed that this would materially enhance the cost to the Government. It may even reduce the cost. Still there is a possibility that it may increase it slightly. I am not certain which way the scales would turn.

Under the present practice, when the Government has an important criminal or civil lawsuit it employs a stenographer, which I think is proper, and they pay the expenses out of the Treasury of the United States. Under this bill the Government would not be required to pay any per diem in addition to the salary. It pays a per diem now. Whatever expense would be saved in that way can, in a measure, be used to pay the salary which we have provided for. There is at present an officer called the secretary to the judge who is paid, I understand, about $1,500 a year. This officer we aim to eliminate. We provide in this bill that the salary of the official stenographer shall not exceed $2,000. Of course, we realize that we could not get a stenographer for that sum, but this pay will be largely augmented by money received by him for transcripts. If anyone wants a transcript, whether it is the Government or a private litigant, he must pay for it. He pays the rate which I think is usual—in my State it is 8 cents—but we allow 10 cents a folio, and in addition to that he may charge for making copies. I think the allowances we provide for that will be ample.

I had a conversation two or three weeks ago with a stenographer employed about the House, from which I gathered that in many of the courts a stenographer would get quite large pay under this bill. It has been suggested that there ought to be a limit, as stenographers often get more pay than the judges.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the ordinary charge per folio for transcripts of testimony? I think it is much more than is provided here.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The statute of my State provides for 8 cents a folio. I think 10 cents a folio is quite common. That will make 30 or 40 cents a page, and you will find that the amount for transcripts will run up quickly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will allow me, in Chicago they charge 50 cents, with 20 per cent rebate, making a net charge of 40 cents per folio.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think a man can do the work for the pay provided in this bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They do it in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the committee believe that one man can do all of this work—take notes all day and furnish the transcript?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They do it in my State. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's State. The hours that courts sit are much shorter in the cities than they are in the country districts.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My experience is that they do not do it. They change off, a man will stay an hour and then change.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In my State a stenographer of the circuit court, in my district, for eight years took every case that was tried, and sat in the courtroom from 9 o'clock in the morning to 5 or 6 in the afternoon, and whenever they desired a transcript they got it in time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They are remarkable people down in Texas.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. And they may be more remarkable in Chicago.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How will this bill operate in proceedings other than criminal proceedings in the district court?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This applies to both civil and criminal actions.

Mr. MILLER. Do I understand from the bill that this stenographer is compelled to take the proceedings in civil cases as well as criminal cases?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Both civil and criminal.

Mr. MILLER. And to furnish transcripts at the price stated?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He is not required to furnish any transcript unless he is paid for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is if the judge asks for it.

Mr. MILLER. At the rate provided in the bill, he is.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He has to furnish the transcript if the judge asks for it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe that the language on page 3 of this bill would authorize the payment by the Government of 10 cents per folio? The language is—

That such official stenographer may charge for any transcript of such notes ordered by any person interested, other than a judge of said court, 10 cents per folio.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the Attorney General orders a transcript, or if the district attorney orders one, I have no doubt that he would have to pay for it.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. May I not ask if the provision in the bill for the temporary appointment of a substitute stenographer contemplates that business may accumulate to such an extent, beyond the capacity of the regular stenographer, that this provision will take care of that accumulation of work?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It will take care of that in case there is any such difficulty.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask about lines 15 and 16 and 17 on page 2. It is provided there that all of the exceptions taken shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of the trial. Does the gentleman not think he is going on an excursion into a field there that will result in trouble? In other words, the judge signs and seals, when properly presented to him, a bill of exceptions upon which an appeal is taken. This seems to me to undertake to substitute a bill of exceptions prepared by the stenographer and to make it superior to one that the judge ordinarily provides. In other words, will the judge have the right to correct and straighten out the bill of exceptions about which there may be a dispute, if the bill retains the language here that the record of the stenographer shall have that effect without the judge signing it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That the exception taken at the time shall have the same effect as an exception allowed and signed at the time of trial.

Mr. STEVENSON. Exceptions taken at the time shall have the same effect as those duly written out and signed by the trial judge. Suppose the trial judge makes out one and the stenographer makes out another, and they do not agree; how are you going to settle it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The practice requires that to get a case or a bill of exceptions settled you must submit the case or bill to the judge and get his approval.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am thoroughly familiar with that, but I think this would be getting it in a fix where we will not know where we are.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not think so. The judge will have to determine just what the facts were.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it should be provided that these exceptions shall be used as the basis for the bill of exceptions the same as if they had been written out and signed by the judge.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The trouble is that courts sometimes refuse to allow exceptions, and it is to compel the courts to allow exceptions when they are made that this provision is inserted.

Mr. STEVENSON. I have never struck a court of that kind yet. There is sometimes a dispute as to what the exception was that was made, and it is very well to have the stenographer's notes for that. But to make that equivalent to the determination of the judge, I think, would confuse the practice in the Federal courts.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say that I indorse that provision as much as I do any other in this bill. I think that where you have a sworn stenographer and he makes a record a judge on the bench ought not to be allowed to change it. I have seen a good many of them, when bills of exceptions were presented, who tried to find some way to get out of a bad ruling or change or dispute it.

Mr. MILLER. To get out of a bad ruling?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes; in order to prevent a reversal, it has been suggested by some one here. If you have a sworn stenographer, a court reporter, and he takes it down, then, when you get up your bill of exceptions, you just simply have to get all of those rulings objected to and excepted to during the proceedings of the trial, and the judge could not go back on or dispute them; he would be bound by the record. If there is a dispute between the attorney and the court, there would be the record of the stenographer who took it down. I want to say that I heartily indorse that provision of the bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think that will work out all right. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman a question along this line. I see a provision in the latter part of the bill which provides that parties to litigation shall pay a certain fee in order to receive a transcript of the notes; that the judge can order the stenographer to furnish one without cost. Is that for the benefit of an impecunious defendant who is unable to otherwise procure it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. The stenographer is required under this bill to act as secretary to the judge. The judge may ask him to read certain of his notes for the purpose of aiding him in making a decision in a case, or, if he finds it necessary, he may ask him to make a transcript of the testimony of one or more witnesses.

Mr. BEE. For his own use?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. For his own use only.

Mr. BEE. Let me ask this. My experience in the Federal courts has been that there is absolutely no hope for a poor man under the existing practice either to get his witnesses there without going down into his pocket to pay for them, or to get a transcript of the testimony under which they can appeal, the costs of which are almost prohibitive. In the State courts almost universally there is a provision that where a defendant is in such poor circumstances and he makes an affidavit to that effect, the court and the clerk of the court passing upon it can require the stenographer to furnish a transcript free of charge.

Is it not possible to secure a provision to enable the poor man in the Federal court to be protected and have his day in the appellate court exactly like the well-to-do man has, and will this bill have that tendency? I favor its general principle that there ought to be a stenographer and he ought to be paid.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is a statute that allows the courts to relieve persons too poor to pay from the payment of certain expenses. But that does not, as I understand, apply to the expense of transcripts. We did not feel, though we talked about it to some extent in considering the bill, that it would be desirable to put it in this bill.

Mr. BEE. Let me ask the chairman of this great committee a question—if it is not possible for this committee to formulate a law and bring it before the Congress that will afford a defendant charged in a Federal court that leeway and opportunity in appealing from the judgment of the court and jury similar to that which is now allowed in every State in the Union, because now, as I have stated, there is practically no opportunity for a poor man to carry his case from the Federal court, no matter how unjust or erroneous he may think might be the judgment of the court and jury, and I hope the great Judiciary Committee will find some way to relieve the procedure of the odium in which it is now held by people generally because of the fact that the appellate procedure seems to be destined only for the well-to-do man and affords no relief whatever to the poor man who has no money to put up.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. MILLER. My attention is called to section 3. I see the salary is placed at $2,000 a year, which is a rather modest salary. Now, I assume that the supplies for this stenographer in doing his work will amount to quite a sum. Is it the idea of the chairman that this stenographer at the rate of $2,000 a year shall furnish his own supplies out of that salary? Would it not be a wise thing to put in the bill that the supplies shall be furnished in addition to his salary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman cares to offer an amendment of that kind, we will consider it.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Suppose the stenographer makes a mistake in the taking of the evidence. What provision is there for the correction of that error?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It differs in different States. It is a matter to be determined by the court after notice has been given the opposing party by the one presenting a case or bill of exceptions. If there is dispute the judge settles what the actual facts are.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Well, I believe there is no provision here for the service of that bill.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We did not think it was necessary to do that. We left it exactly as it is to-day as far as that is concerned. If a man now gets a transcript from some stenographer he has to get it approved by the court before he can use it as a basis of appeal.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield some time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE]?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I reserve the balance of my time. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can ask for recognition in his own right.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask for recognition in opposition to the bill, unless some member of the committee wants to be recognized in opposition to the bill.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand the chairman of the committee to yield the floor?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARD. How much time has the chairman used?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to advise the gentleman just exactly, but he is of the opinion that he used about half of his time. The Chair is now advised that he used 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it has been a long time since I practiced law. I never expect to practice again, and very likely I am not up to date in reference to the procedure in the courts, but I am quite well satisfied this bill will never furnish an adequate working force for taking testimony in trial courts. Here is a proposition to appoint a stenographer at $2,000 a year, and he is also to be the private secretary of the Federal judge in place of the secretary which he now has, and this stenographer is required, in addition to acting as secretary, to take all of the testimony in the court and all of the proceedings in the court and in the presence of the jury, and for that he receives $2,000 a year, and then, in addition, if copies of the testimony are required, he receives 10 cents a folio of 100 words for the first copy and 2 cents a folio for each copy thereafter. I do not know why the 2 cents was put in. I suppose it must have been after some investigaton, because the bill which was reported by this Committee on the Judiciary in September last provided for 5 cents a folio for each duplicate copy of the testimony. Here is the case. Take the House of Representatives. We employ six stenographers at, I believe, $6,000 a year, ordinarily sitting in the House not to exceed about five hours, and they do hard work, and we are not in session all the year.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. That is entirely different work——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not yield for a speech.

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to call attenton to the fact that it is entirely different work. A court stenographer has much more time to prepare his transcript than the stenographers here on the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not say how it is in the district of my friend from Texas, but I speak with some knowledge of the courts in Chicago.

A stenographer in a Chicago court is just as busy as a stenographer on the floor of the House of Representatives. He has just as hard work, and it is just as fast work, too, and he is supposed, in most cases, to have his transcript ready for the parties the next morning. They do not wait for a month to make out the transcript of the testimony. In an important case the lawyers want the transcript of the testimony at once, and it is furnished at once, just as the transcript is furnished here.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that there is not one in twenty cases where the testimony is transcribed, and there is not one case in twenty that is appealed, and therefore no necessity for the transcript.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I expect that that is the case in the district of my friend, where most of the cases are small cases and relate to Indians—very small criminal cases. That is not the case in the United States courts of Chicago.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit, we have the most important of cases in the eastern district of Oklahoma, involving millions of dollars, of oil litigation—more important perhaps than in any other court of the United States.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman say that they do not make a transcript of the testimony in those cases?

Mr. HASTINGS. I mean it is taken down in shorthand but not transcribed unless asked for, and there is not one case in twenty that is appealed and therefore not necessary to have the notes transcribed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not try a case involving a million dollars and try it well unless you have a transcript of the testimony from day to day, and if you do not have it in Oklahoma, I pity Oklahoma lawyers.

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not say that in those large cases they did not have a transcript. I say in the ordinary cases they take down the testimony in shorthand and it is not transcribed, as there is no necessity for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman says in one breath that most of the cases down there are unimportant and in the next breath there are more important cases tried there than in almost any other place.

Mr. HASTINGS. "The gentleman from Oklahoma" did not make that sort of a statement. I did make a statement that there was not one in twenty of the cases appealed, and then the gentleman from Illinois said they did not have any important cases, and I rose to correct that by stating that there were some very important cases in eastern Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will take the facts about Oklahoma any way the gentleman gives them.

Mr. HASTINGS. I hope the gentleman will get it right one time anyway.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is more than the gentleman from Oklahoma will ever be expected to do. Just occasionally I may be right.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am glad the gentleman admits that he occasionally makes errors. That is a great concession.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make errors so often that I wonder the gentleman wants to pattern after me all the time when I do. He should follow me sometimes when I am right. However, that is pleasantry between the gentleman and myself. Nothing could disturb our pleasant relations.

In the Senate of the United States now the rule is to pay 25 cents a folio for taking testimony. I do not know what the Committee on Accounts allows where outside stenographers are brought in to take testimony for the House. A few years ago it was 25 cents. I believe at one time it was cut down to 15 cents, and that they found they could not get the work done properly, and the 25-cent rate was restored. I think it is very important that litigants have the right to have proper copy of the evidence taken before them by competent stenographers. I am very confident that you can not secure in the large cities of the country a competent stenographer who would be required to be the secretary of the judge, required to take the testimony without extra compensation, and required to furnish a copy of the same to the judge without extra compensation if the judge desires it. You take a case that is being tried in a court anywhere and where they desire the testimony from day to day, and it requires several stenographers to do the reporting, and then they are required in the main to work at night, with a considerable office force, in order to have the testimony transcribed.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DEWALT. I judge from the gentleman's remark that his main objection to this is that the compensation is not large enough. Would the gentleman suggest what he thinks would be the remedy there, either by districts or in particular instances, to wit, in large cities like Chicago?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I could not say how much it should be. I do not know. I am very confident this will not secure competent stenographers to do the work as provided by this bill.

Mr. DEWALT. Otherwise there is no objection to the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not so stated yet.

Mr. DEWALT. All right.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know. I have asked for information as to whether under the terms of the bill, which do not apparently require the appointment of a stenographer, it would take away from the judge the secretary he now has if he does not appoint a stenographer. As I understand, Federal judges are now entitled to a secretary.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. Is the gentleman able to state, or is the chairman of the committee able to state, whether the provision of secretary to a judge is one authorized by law or is it just one of common consent? Otherwise, there might be danger of the secretary being the stenographer.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. STEELE. It is simply taken care of in the appropriation to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What I wanted to get at was this: This bill provides that the judges of the district courts may appoint a stenographer. And while "may" is frequently construed in statutes as "must," it is very likely it would not be so construed. What is the judgment of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] on that point?

Mr. STEELE. My judgment is that it makes it discretionary with the court to appoint. If the court does not wish to appoint it is not imperatively necessary to appoint, but if he does appoint then the duties of the secretary become merged with the duties of the stenographer, and there will be no authority then to appoint a secretary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Would there be any authority, if the judge did not appoint under this provision of the bill, to retain an official stenographer?

Mr. STEELE. I think there would.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is not the official stenographer.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely, he could retain his secretary.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is possible, but I doubt it. I think the purpose of this bill now—and it was a little more fully set forth in the provisions of the original bill—is to put the burden of this work upon the Federal Treasury. A great many people say that a poor man can not afford to employ a stenographer. That may be true. It may be possible that there ought to be some provision made for that. A great many poor men can not afford to employ an attorney, although very few people get into litigation in civil suits who are not able to employ an attorney. Maybe some attorneys think that they ought probably to get all the money a man has, so that he will not have any left with which to pay the stenographer. But the whole theory of this bill, as it seems to me, is to put the burden of this expense on the Federal Treasury, and if a competent stenographer can not be employed in the cities under the terms of this bill—as they can not be—we will very soon, if the bill becomes a law, have a proposition to increase the pay, to come out of the Federal Treasury.

I myself believe that the courts in the country in the main ought to be self-supporting; that if people wish to indulge in the luxury of litigation, they ought to be willing to pay the expense of the litigation.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. What becomes of the defendant who has been unjustly accused, and who believes he has his rights, and is dragged into court against his will, where, so far as he is concerned, he has to defend his liberty and his life?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A man has not to defend his liberty and his life in a civil suit at all.

Mr. BEE. I was speaking of the criminal side.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This applies to the civil side, not the criminal side of the courts. The whole theory of it is to put upon the Federal Treasury the burden practically of furnishing the stenographers when civil cases are tried.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Under the law as it now stands in our criminal cases the court provides a stenographer, and the defendant pays nothing, so far as the stenographer is concerned. Is not that correct?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know. I never tried a criminal case in my life.

Mr. RAKER. What do you pay to the reporter now in Chicago, outside of the transcript?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. When I practiced law we used to pay the reporter $10 a day——

Mr. RAKER. And 25 cents per folio for the transcript?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The uniform charge in Chicago is 50 cents a page. That amounts to 20 cents a folio, figuring two and one-half folios to the page, and 10 cents, I think, for the first copy and 5 cents for each additional copy. The per diem charge of $10 is frequently merged in the charge per folio if you get a large transcript.

Now, while I am on my feet——

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do.

Mr. DEWALT. I did not quite understand what was meant by "merged."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They waive the per diem when they furnish a very large transcript.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They make a special agreement.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Otherwise the rates as fixed by the stenographers are $10 per diem and 50 cents a page. They will give you a discount sometimes of 20 per cent on the charge per page, and sometimes they will waive the per diem in the case of a very large transcript.

Now, does the gentleman, may I ask, intend to address himself to the language of section 2? If he does not, I would like to ask a question, if I may, in regard to his interpretation as to some of the language in the beginning of section 2, if the gentleman is willing.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am willing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Section 2 reads as follows:

> That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony in all judicial proceedings and trials, together with the judge's charge, if any—

> and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, to which rulings, orders, comments, or remarks either party may except as a matter of right.

Does not that limit the duty of the stenographer to taking down such rulings, orders, comments, and remarks to which either party may except as a matter of right? In other words, it does not require him to take down those rulings, orders, comments, or remarks to which no exceptions may be taken or to which either party may not take an exception as a matter of right?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That might be technical language. It is, although I do not apprehend that to be what the stenographer would take down.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If the gentleman will permit me further, certainly this act is not intended to define what rulings, orders, comments, or remarks the party may take exception to as a matter of right?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No. I read section 2 quite carefully, and I thought it was not the way I should have drafted it myself. I was not certain whether it was because that was not clear or because I was not clearheaded on the subject. I think it undertakes, apparently, to say what exceptions can be made and to require a transcript of the testimony to be taken as true, although both counsel for the parties and the judge should agree there was an error in it and that the judge could not change that. Whether it does away with the bill of exceptions signed by the judge I do not know, although apparently it does.

But I take it that that could not be the case, because where a motion for a new trial should be made and denied by the court, that would not be taken down by the stenographer, because it is not in the presence of the jury.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WELTY. But the stenographer is required to take only such matters, rulings, and orders of the court as are made in the presence of the jury, for the purpose of protecting the defendant in the case or any parties to the suit.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no. There is nothing in here about protecting the defendant in the case. It is all cases.

Mr. WELTY. Yes; criminal and civil cases. I understood the gentleman a while ago to say that it did not apply to criminal cases.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; I did not say it did not apply to criminal cases.

Mr. WELTY. And if the gentleman will permit, is not the language itself so clear as to permit the construction that the stenographer is required to take all judicial proceedings and trials, and all rulings and orders, and any comments of the court, and that either party to the suit, the plaintiff or the defendant, may take exception to any of the rulings and orders made at the time?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was the matter that was discussed by my colleague. I do not think it is clear, but I have no doubt about what would be done—that the stenographer would take the proceedings.

Mr. WELTY. The coordinate conjunction "and" would cover that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It says—

That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony in all judicial proceedings and trials, together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, to which rulings, orders, comments, or remarks either party may except as a matter of right.

Mr. WELTY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, nobody could know whether he was going to except until after the comments had been made, so they would have to be taken down.

Mr. WELTY. He could not tell before the comments and rulings were made, because the parties would not know what they were.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; not very conveniently in court, although it is frequently the case in this House.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. The language on page 2, in lines 10, 11, and 12, seems to be restrictive, in that the orders and rulings must be made in the presence of the jury. Now, supposing the jury are asked to retire, and the court takes up a long proceeding for the purpose of hearing testimony and makes, practically, rulings on it before the jury return. According to this, such a proceeding would not have to be taken down, although it may be just as important as the proceedings before the jury. In criminal cases the jury are frequently requested to retire, and matters are taken up out of the hearing of the jury which counsel would not have out of the record for anything.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Frankly, I do not think that the provision in the bill requiring the comments to which exception shall be made to be taken down will exclude the stenographer from taking down the proceedings in court in the absence of the jury. I take it that the trial judge would have jurisdiction over the stenographer and that the stenographer would endeavor to take the testimony, the same as it is now taken in court. But here is the objection that I make there. You can not employ competent stenographers for the compensation provided in this bill. You say a party may protect himself by employing competent stenographers. Very well; but the bill of exceptions, the trial proceedings certified to, have to be taken from the transcript of the official stenographer, who, in our city, I think, under this bill will certainly be incompetent at the compensation here fixed.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield again? The first section of the bill provides that substitute stenographers may be appointed. The official stenographer can appoint as many substitute stenographers as the parties to the case desire, and the plaintiff and defendant must pay for the stenographer's transcript. This simply requires him to go into court and take the testimony, and then if they want a transcript they will have to pay for it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was going to ask how many substitute stenographers could be employed. If this means more than one, then the language is unfortunate. It says the official stenographer may temporarily supply a competent substitute stenographer. That would not, under the language, authorize the employment of more than one substitute stenographer. But they can not employ a competent stenographer in New York or Chicago or Philadelphia, or any other large city, for no pay and 10 cents a folio if somebody orders a transcript. If they can not pay him, how can they employ him?

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that they are forming a bad habit of not asking recognition from the Chair when they desire to interrupt one another.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope the Chair will not require the consumption of the extra amount of time when I have expressed my willingness to yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to regulate that matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course. I am simply asking the Chair not to, when I have expressed a willingness to yield.

Mr. WELTY. I understand the gentleman objects to this bill because competent stenographers can not be procured in Chicago and New York and some other congested centers for the compensation named in this bill. Will a defendant or plaintiff be precluded from hiring and paying for substitutes under this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Suppose they hire a competent stenographer and he makes a fair transcript of the testimony, what good is it going to do?

Mr. O'CONNOR. None.

Mr. WELTY. Why not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can not use it in court. If the incompetent stenographer says that so and so took place, or if there is a hiatus in his transcript, and the record made by the competent stenographer shows that so and so took place differently from what is shown in the transcript of the incompetent stenographer, you have got to take the testimony of the incompetent official stenographer although everybody knows he has made a mistake.

Mr. WELTY. They will have to take the transcript made by the stenographers as they took the testimony, but these substitutes can be appointed by the official stenographer provided for in the bill, and paid for by either plaintiff or defendant.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. How do they correct such a situation as that in Chicago?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not an infrequent thing that there is a contest as to what has taken place, notwithstanding the stenographer's notes. Counsel sometimes appear before the court and present their recollection of the matter and the court determines in the end.

Mr. DEWALT. Is not that so in every instance, that the record is always under the supervision of the court?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not under this bill, because this expressly provides that the sworn statement of the stenographer must be taken and the judge can not change it. There is no question about that.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is the difficulty I was raising a while ago. Does not line 15, page 2, make the stenographer's transcript superior to the judge's ruling on that matter?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Absolutely. It does not give the judge a chance to correct it at all.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is beyond the control of the judge entirely.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This says—

All of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial.

That is the transcript prepared by the sworn official, and it has to be taken. I do not say that the parties by consent might not actually change it, but they could not legally change it.

Mr. WELTY. Would a judge be required to sign a transcript which was not correct?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under this provision he is not required to sign it.

Mr. WELTY. He would have to sign a transcript before you could prosecute a writ of error.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. "All of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of the trial." That is all the judge does when he signs the bill of exceptions. He certifies to that over his signature and seal. This says that the transcript made by the stenographer shall have the same effect as though the judge had signed and sealed it. I do not know where the judge would get authority to change it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. As a matter of fact, where we are making up a bill of exceptions the judge and attorneys almost always condense the statement of facts surrounding each exception, and therefore you have only to print that part which relates to the exceptions. If this prevails, the whole thing will have to be printed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know whether they would have to print the whole, but it would all have to go up as part of the record.

Mr. STEVENSON. If it all went up as a bill of exceptions, it would have to be printed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The language here is very unfortunate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Under the common law you sign the exception at the time, and for the purpose of avoiding that it is entered on the record of the stenographer in this case; and then later on when you come to make up the bill of exceptions the judge passes on what actually took place. It is only for the purpose of avoiding the necessity of having the old common-law form complied with.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have practiced under the common law, which I doubt if my friend from Minnesota ever did. I never saw a judge sign exceptions at the time the exceptions were taken, and I doubt if anybody else ever did.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. RAKER. If a bill of exceptions is signed by the judge during the trial, it becomes a part of the record and part of the judgment roll, and after it is once signed by the judge there is no power except by proper proceedings in the Supreme Court to annul it. This provision does away with the judge's consideration of it and does away with the right of the parties to be heard as to whether the facts are true, and does away with the judge's signature and does away with the judgment roll.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not suppose that that was the design of the author of the bill, and probably he would say that that is not what it means; but that is the language of the bill. The gentleman asked us to assume that because they want to accomplish a certain thing they have accomplished it, although they say something else.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The point the drafter had in mind in the preparation of the bill was to save the ruling of the trial judge in the admission of testimony where objections were interposed from time to time; that these objections might be entered in the transcript so that this question, which has confronted every lawyer, whether or not independent rulings as to questions and answers in the evidence itself should be made the subject of a separate and distinct bill of exceptions and therefore encumbering the record, or whether or not when it was in the transcript the court might take notice of the fact.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have an idea that what the provision was put in the bill for was to prevent a party in a lawsuit from employing a competent stenographer and then using that transcript taken in the trial of a case for the purpose of settling the bill of exceptions. They endeavored to make the transcript of the official stenographer absolutely controlling, so that you could not go behind it by showing that a more competent stenographer had taken the testimony differently. They want to put a cinch on the official stenographer's transcript.

I am opposed to this bill because I do not think it is the duty of the Government to pay out of the Federal Treasury the cost of trying civil suits in the Federal courts. Let the parties pay for their own litigation.

Second, I am opposed to it because it provides practically for the employment of incompetent stenographers and makes their transcript the controlling one. Everybody knows that you can not get good stenographers for the compensation named in this bill.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BEE. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not think the Judiciary Committee ought to perfect some character of legislation that will curtail the trial of civil cases in the Federal courts and let them go to the State courts?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I fully agree with the gentleman from Texas. Ever since I have been a Member of the House I have resisted the constant enlargement of the powers of the Federal judiciary to try ordinary cases which ought to be tried in the State courts.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WALSH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 14, 1920:

H. R. 2950. An act to authorize a preference right of entry by certain Carey Act entrymen, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11368. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

On February 17, 1920:

H. R. 683. An act for the relief of William E. Johnson;

H. R. 396. An act to authorize the payment of certain amounts for damages sustained by prairie fire on the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in South Dakota; and

H. R. 10746. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Wrangell, Alaska, to issue bonds for the construction, enlargement, and equipment of schools, the acquisition and construction of a water-supply system, the construction of a sewer system, the construction of a city dock and floating dock, and to levy and collect a special tax therefor.

On February 18, 1920:

H. R. 5665. An act for the relief of Carlow Avellina.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHERS FOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me three minutes?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Texas three minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the duties of the stenographers in this House are entirely different from the duty of a court reporter. The reason we have five or six reporters on our reportorial staff here is due to the fact that the various speeches made here and the various proceedings of the House must be transcribed immediately in order that the transcripts may be passed upon and corrected shortly after adjournment, so that the RECORD may be printed during the night and be ready for the next morning. There is no such necessity in court proceedings. Why, there are very few Federal judges in the whole United States who hold court more than about a third of the time. Name me some. Name me some Federal judges who hold court more than about a third of the time during the year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, the gentleman knows that in Chicago and New York, and in most of the large districts, the Federal judges hold court nearly all of the year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is the best posted man, I guess, in the United States on most all of the subjects that come up here in Congress, admits that he has not been around courthouses for years. Some of us have been around the courthouses a little more frequently and recently than he has been, possibly when he has been otherwise busy studying the various plant growths in his garden——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And I would much rather be in the garden than in court. However, the gentleman from Texas is mistaken. The Federal judges in these large cities hold court all of the year with the exception of a short summer vacation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman must not get the idea that the Federal judges at Chicago are any different from the Federal judges everywhere else in the United States; and he must not get the idea that all of the court business in this Nation is transacted in Chicago, because, as was stated by my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS], there are important cases tried in Oklahoma and in Texas—cases involving millions of dollars and involving the life and liberty of citizens. The Federal court always meets in the morning not earlier than 10 o'clock. The judge hears the evidence, transacts business, and does it swiftly and expeditiously for about an hour and a half or two hours and then adjourns for noon for about a two-hour recess. He comes back in the afternoon, and if he is feeling badly he holds court only a short time and then adjourns until the next morning. That is about the ordinary process, even in the trial of important cases, if you please.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to kindly give me one minute more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Most of the stenographers will not be overworked. During all of these various and numerous recesses and adjournments the stenographers have sometimes 30 days in which to get up important transcripts for the attorneys. Of course they have assistants to help them get up statements of the evidence from day to day where the attorneys are trying important cases and want same for use during the trial, but I want to say to my friend that they have plenty of time out of the 24 hours in a day to get up these transcripts, and I do not think the gentleman should become alarmed, because some of the best stenographers I have ever known in my life have carried on the business in very active courts and have reported the proceedings day after day and month after month and year after year, preparing their transcripts on time, and have never complained. As one of such faithful, efficient court reporters, serving in a State court for more than eight years continuously, I mention Mr. W. H. Graham, now a practicing attorney of Dallas, Tex.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of the gentleman from Texas remind me of something I wanted to say. First, the gentleman is in error about the United States courts. Most of the judges are working most of the time, and it is claimed that in some of the districts there is a shortage of judges. I think that is practically true. I referred to Chicago not, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, because I thought that Chicago is the place where the most important court business is transacted, but merely because when I refer to a matter I like to refer to something I know something about. I know nothing about how much business is transacted in Texas at the present time, although a few years ago I helped to create a new judgeship down there because they claimed they were very short of judges in transacting the business of that State.

This is what I wanted to say about stenographers. I am one of very few Members of this House who have ever been in the House since the proceedings were reported stenographically who never corrects his remarks. I never see a transcript of any statement which I make on the floor of the House. I sometimes have seen the transcripts of the statements made by other Members of the House after the transcript has been submitted to those Members. We have as good a force of stenographers to report the proceedings of the House as exists anywhere in the world, and yet I have an idea that if my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or my friend from some other place should exhibit the transcript of their statements made on the floor of the House after they have corrected them, one would be led to think that the transcript had been left in a chicken yard with chickens tracking over it with inked feet. The only authority that Members have is to correctly put on paper what they have said, and there is no Member here who corrects his remarks who does not thereby say that there has been a slight error on the part of the stenographer in reporting what he said, and while that would not always be correct, it sometimes happens; but under this bill you propose to fix it so that after the court stenographer provided for in the bill makes a mistake nobody can correct it.

I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS].

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the bill and I am heartily in favor of section 2. I have not had very extensive practice before the Federal courts, but I have had some. The Federal courts that I practiced before were legislative Federal courts, and we had a good many czars on the bench. Whenever a member of the bar tried to get the record corrected as against the czar on the bench, the contest was very unequal.

This bill practically follows the law in the State of Oklahoma, with reference to State courts now. We have a stenographer who takes down the proceedings. They take down the testimony, they take down the rulings, and in the event that a transcript is required the notes of the stenographer are transcribed. What I attempted to say when my good friend was impatient and had the floor a few moments ago was this, that not one in twenty of the cases tried either in a State court or a Federal court is appealed, so that in not one in twenty cases tried is it necessary to transcribe the record. Everyone who has practiced before either a State or Federal court knows that is correct.

My good friend from Illinois injects the remarks that we do not have any important cases tried in Oklahoma. I venture to say that there are more important lawsuits in the Federal courts in the eastern district of Oklahoma than in any other Federal court in the United States. I would state furthermore that that court is always busy and usually one or two outside judges, sent from other districts, are there to assist the judge for the eastern judicial district. What I want to emphasize is this, that cases may be tried day in and day out, and the stenographer is there, and he makes notes of the proceedings, the rulings, and so forth, and yet the proceedings are not transcribed and the rulings are not transcribed unless it becomes necessary for an appeal or a bill of exceptions is to be prepared for the judge to certify.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. I will ask the gentleman to yield me two minutes more.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to make one more observation, and that is this: This stenographer is to be appointed by the judge. The judge himself can change the stenographer whenever he wants to, and he is dead certain to appoint a competent man; but if he makes a mistake and appoints an incompetent man, under the terms of this bill he can change him any day.

The eminent trial judge may be mistaken the next day as to what transpired. The lawyer may be mistaken. Who could better be relied upon than the stenographer himself to say what actually did take place if it is disputed by the judge and is disputed by the lawyer? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in section 2 the whole matter could be covered, and I say this in all earnestness, because I know the committee wants to get the right provision.

That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony and proceedings in all judicial proceedings and trials.

Now, you could stop right there. That means everything from the time the case opens until the court discharged the jury, every word that every attorney utters in court in regard to the trial or statement that the judge makes from the time the trial begins until the end, every declaration he makes to the jury, every criticism he makes of counsel, every exception made by counsel to the rulings of the judge, and then the charge to the jury. Now, to make it specific and avoid all question you could add "together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial," and stop right there. That makes this bill certain, so there will be no question about it. It ought to be that way. Many of the States have it and it protects counsel. There must be a stenographic report of the trial of cases. There ought to be. Now, there are three methods in our State and some other States in preparing an appeal. A bill of exceptions, with which everyone is familiar; a statement of the case, which is a little more voluminous and which makes more specific the matters involved because it makes specific wherein the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings of the court or the verdict of the jury, and that must be specified in the specification of exceptions. Then there is the newer procedure in operation in California for the last 12 years, something similar to an appeal in an equity case in some States, especially Oregon, and it has worked admirably. It ought to be in force in the Federal courts. In the State of Oregon, if you try an equity case, the stenographer takes all of the testimony and proceedings, and then the court, after counsel has been given notice, goes over the record and then certifies it, and that record goes to the supreme court, without being printed, counsel being required to present an abstract. Now, by this new system the stenographer takes all of the testimony and proceedings. Counsel are notified. If they desire to be heard, the court conducts the hearing in a short time, and all this surplus matter is stricken out. The record is short; there is no printing of the record. Only the record certified by the court goes to the supreme court. Counsel have printed an abstract. Take, for instance the supreme court; go look at the supreme court printed records, and you will find volume after volume of records of proceedings anywhere from 1 up to 28 or 30 that have been printed. You save that expense. You save expense on appeal, and you prevent the litigant from being bankrupted by the reporter as well as by the printing of testimony. The gentleman from Illinois is clearly correct, and we ought not to overlook what he says with reference to lines 15, 16, and 17, where it says:

All of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial.

Now, if that means anything it means what it says, namely, that you have complied with all the formal procedure, notice to adverse counsel, all proceedings of the court to determine whether or not the testimony and exceptions concerning the facts in the record are true. The judge then passes on it, and you have an opportunity to be heard before the judge and get the facts in the bill of exceptions and——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. May I have time to finish this sentence.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. But you place upon the statute book a new provision giving this power to the reporter to transcribe and file with the clerk this record which disposes of all the preliminaries, and then this record goes and there is no way to obviate it unless by special proceedings before the judge, and if he denies it, then by application to correct the record in the Supreme Court. You know that is most difficult to do. The other provision in the bill as to employing an official reporter and then pay for the transcript is valuable and ought to be enacted. I trust the committee will look to the suggestion just made, first as to the testimony and proceedings in the trial of the case, and second as to these bills of exceptions, because you clearly do away with the opportunity to either party to be heard on a settlement as to the bill of exceptions before the judge before he signs it, and the bill of exceptions once signed it may be a month or two or three months until the case is finally acted upon and final judgment rendered. It then becomes part of the judgment roll and upon appeal the Supreme Court considers it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON].

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good bill and ought to be enacted into law. I never could understand why it was that during all of these years, while the State courts had their stenographers to take down their proceedings, the Federal courts either in a criminal or a civil case had no stenographers and unless your client was able to hire a stenographer, when the trial was finished, no matter how many errors had been committed or how much injustice done, you had no record from which to appeal, and hence no adequate relief.

Our State courts in Missouri for years have been provided with official stenographers. They pay the stenographers a salary of $1,800 per year, and then they are allowed 45 cents per page for transcripts for the original copy and 15 cents per page for carbon copies. Under that provision we get the best stenographers obtainable in all our State courts. Such stenographers take down all the proceedings. Every word that is uttered in the trial of a case becomes a part of the record. After the trial has been finished, if either litigant desires to appeal, he can pay for having the transcript written up, and when the case is decided it is taxed as costs in the case. If there is any controversy as to the accuracy of the testimony which has been taken, as it appears in the stenographer's transcript, it is a matter for the trial court to make the correction, and when he signs the transcript of the testimony that becomes the record of the case.

Now, what is the case in the Federal courts? I have gone into the Federal court as a district attorney to try criminal cases. I have gone into the Federal court in our State as a representative of litigants in civil cases. I have seen so many instances of injustice resulting from the lack of a proper person to keep the record of a trial that I have always wondered why it was that some provision was not made in the Federal courts at least as good as that to-day in the State courts for keeping a record of what transpired in the trial of cases. I remember one instance in the progress of a criminal case, where the Government had no stenographer. We presented our testimony. The trial lasted for a number of days. The defendant had provided himself with a stenographer at his own expense, and during the trial of the case there was much testimony developed which was of great importance to one of the departments of this Government, and when the trial had been finished the defendant's attorney destroyed the transcript and the Government's attorney was unable to procure a copy of such testimony. Such a thing could not have happened if this bill had been a law at that time.

Take it in criminal cases. Many defendants are unable to hire their own stenographers when they go into court. The court may sometimes make comments which result in great prejudice to him during the trial of a case. He may make those comments in ruling upon the testimony or in giving his oral instructions, which sometimes amounts to an argument, and yet without a stenographer no record is preserved. I have always had the feeling that a judge will be more careful in the comments he makes if he knows there is an official reporter taking down all the testimony which is being presented and all the remarks and rulings made by him. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

Mr. GARD. Mr Chairman, although the bill may more properly be spoken of by the very able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE], I want to say that I am in favor of the basic idea of it, which provides for an official court stenographer, and I think the reasons just given by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NEWTON] should be convincing to every man who has had to do with the trial of cases in courts, whether Federal or State courts. At the same time, I think we are indebted to the observations of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], whose keenness of judgment upon matters as written in bills we always concede. And I desire to call certain matters to the attention of the proponents of the bill, the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] with respect to the possibility of certain amendments.

In section 2 of the bill, on page 2, line 8, after the word "trials," it would be my suggestion that the words "when requested by any party or the court" should be included in the bill, because there are very many cases where stenographic reports are unnecessary. The ordinary work of a court, the little things that come up from day to day, are not necessary, but where a case is of importance, and either party desires or the court desires it, the official stenographer should be compelled to do that work.

Now, I have another suggestion about the complaint which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made of lines 15, 16, and 17. It is the contention of the gentleman that the language of the bill would arbitrarily close all further action and prohibit any amendment by the court. I do not think that is the intention of the bill, but I think it could probably be expressed a little bit better if we were to strike out the word "all" as it appears on line 15 and insert the words "the notation," so that it would appear:

The notation of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of the trial.

There can be no intent in the minds of those who favor the bill that the power of the judge to determine what the exceptions are when he signs the transcript shall be foreclosed by any stenographic report. It is only that the exceptions taken in this form, by making an exception by verbal motion, shall have the same effect as where it was written out.

I also desire to call attention to the fact that probably in section 3 we should have a provision that this compensation of $2,000 shall be in lieu of compensation now paid as secretary under existing law. I would also suggest, too, that, on page 1 of the bill, the court may have the power to appoint a stenographer or stenographers. And I would rather impose that power in a court to appoint two stenographers in a case of a congested condition of a docket in a great city than I would to permit a stenographer to appoint, with the approval of the court, a substitute stenographer. I believe, with the power to appoint a stenographer or stenographers at this specified compensation, with proper compensation for transcribing and with the safeguarding provisions of the bill, that a great and necessary reform will be worked out to the benefit of litigants in Federal courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has so fully explained the provisions of this bill that very little remains to be said except by way of repetition.

I wish to say, however, that this bill had its origin among the members of the Judiciary Committee itself—not the committee of the present House, but the committee of the last House. At a meeting of the subcommittee of that committee, having charge of legislation of this kind, it was suggested by Mr. REAVIS, Mr. GARD, and one or two other gentlemen, and myself, that there should be legislation bearing upon this question; that our Federal courts were behind the State courts and lacked the modernizing influence of a stenographer in court to take down their official records.

Within the last 30 years a stenographer has been part of the essential equipment not only of every court but of the office of every professional man, and, you may say, in every accounting room in the land. The Government has recognized the appointment of stenographers in aid of its executive business by supplying a clerical force of this kind in nearly all the executive departments of the Government. It is now part of the civil-service examination of the Government, and, therefore, it seems that the court, one of the coordinate branches of the Government, is the last part of the official business of the Government to be provided with this necessity. In that respect it is very much behind our State courts. I can say within my own State for 35 years the courts have been provided with official stenographers at the expense of the county. They were paid a compensation at that time of not more than $2,000 per annum, as provided in this bill. Now the limit has been increased, as I recollect it, to $3,000 or $3,500, and the cost of the copy was practically what was stated in the original bill. Now, the work of a stenographer will very much facilitate and dispatch all the business of the court. The old method of taking down notes of testimony by longhand, by judges and lawyers, very much hindered the progress of a trial. But with a stenographer there are no such delays, and he will practically, in my judgment, save his cost in the facility with which the business of the courts will be dispatched.

About seven years ago a commission appointed to revise the civil code made a recommendation to Congress upon this subject, and that recommendation was as follows:

The value of shorthand notes of testimony and other proceedings in expediting trials and in securing accuracy in bills of exception and transcripts on appeal is abundantly established by experience. It is believed to be desirable that this duty shall be performed by sworn officers of the court, with such provision as will secure the preservation of the notes. The laws of nearly all the States provide for court stenographers, and there are abundant considerations of convenience and economy which dictate that the laws of the United States should no longer fail to do so.

Now, after the necessity for this legislation was made apparent the question came up with reference to the expense of it upon the Federal Government. In the bill which I reported in the last Congress provision was made for the payment of the expense out of the Federal Treasury, as it is in this bill, and also provision was made in that bill for the payment of an enlarged cost per folio of the notes taken by the stenographer.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir.

Mr. BEE. Is there any provision of existing law that pays traveling expenses for the stenographers or secretaries of the judges?

Mr. STEELE. There is no provision in the existing law for the payment of stenographers or even of secretaries.

Mr. BEE. Therefore no traveling expense is provided?

Mr. STEELE. No, sir.

Now, the question of expense confronted the committee, and they sincerely desired to have a measure prepared so that the courts could be relieved and at the same time that no additional burden would be placed upon the Federal Treasury. It was ascertained from the Department of Justice that out of the appropriation made to that department nearly every Federal district judge is now provided with a secretary at an expense of $1,500 per annum, so that it was thought that instead of allowing $1,500 to be expended for a private secretary to the judge, that money should be used in providing a court stenographer, which would relieve litigants of the inconvenience and expense of providing their own stenographers in the trial of cases, and which became a very heavy burden upon the poor litigant, inasmuch as the poor litigant was at a great disadvantage in comparison with the wealthy litigant, who could always provide his own stenographer. We therefore concluded that in this bill we would provide that the official stenographer should perform the service now performed by a secretary, for which there is no provision in the law outside of the appropriation bill for the Department of Justice, and that by so doing there would practically be no additional expense to the Government.

In addition to this the Government now pays for stenographic work in the trial of Government cases something like $35,000 per annum, of which amount it will be practically relieved, except possibly the cost of the transcript at the minimum price provided in this bill; so that from the standpoint of economy, it seems to me, this bill meets the question and provides the court with a stenographer and the litigant with that great assistance without any great additional expense practically upon the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman refers to the "minimum price." Will not the Government under this bill still be required to pay for the copy that it receives?

Mr. STEELE. That is what I stated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. At a maximum price?

Mr. STEELE. It is both a maximum and a minimum. It is the price. I say it is a "minimum price," because at 2 cents per folio copy I can not imagine anybody receiving that service at any less cost than that. I think the gentleman will agree to that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How do you get at 2 cents a copy?

Mr. STEELE. Just the same as any litigant under the terms of the bill has the right to require it, and it is the duty of the stenographer to furnish it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. First, somebody must order it at 10 cents a folio. How can the Government get the additional copy?

Mr. STEELE. Upon request; upon the payment of that price.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think that the Government will order it first in every case?

Mr. STEELE. No. I have just stated that the stenographic work now costs the Government, in Government cases alone, $35,000 a year, and a large amount of that will be saved under the terms of this bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I can not see how it will be saved under this bill.

Mr. STEELE. It will be saved because the Government will not be required to supply its own stenographer in order to take the notes.

Now, various criticisms have been made, some with respect to special provisions of this bill. In the main it seems to me the criticisms are largely theoretical and do not have any substantial merit.

Now, with reference to the appointment, in the first section, of substitute stenographers, that is simply intended to meet a temporary condition that arises in all courts and in all offices, and that is a stenographer may be ill at some time; it may be necessary for him to be absent; and during that temporary condition the court can temporarily appoint some one to take his place.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Certainly.

Mr. WELTY. Under that section 1 would the court or the stenographer be permitted to appoint more than one?

Mr. STEELE. I do not think so. I think the court is limited to appointing one stenographer, and I think at all times the provisions of the bill limit one stenographer to each judge or practically each court.

Mr. WELTY. Suppose both the plaintiff and defendant required a daily transcript. It would be physically impossible for two stenographers to furnish that every day, would it not?

Mr. STEELE. That depends a good deal upon the skill of the stenographers. If they have copies every day, there would have to be assistants to the stenographers. There would have to be clerks, possibly, appointed who could read the stenographic notes outside of the stenographer.

Mr. WELTY. This bill gives no authority for that.

Mr. STEELE. This bill makes no provision for that. They can provide that themselves during the progress of the trial.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. As to the question of compensation, would not the gentleman think there would be difficulty in securing efficient stenographers for the compensation provided for by the bill?

In our State we pay the official stenographers of the courts $3,600 a year. In addition to that, we pay them mileage at the rate of 10 cents a mile going and coming to and from home, and we pay them all their necessary expenses while in attendance on the court, including their stationery. In addition to that they are paid for transcripts of the testimony, and if a daily transcript is required they are paid an increased amount for that. It seems to me that when we take into consideration the scarcity of good stenographers and the salaries in demand, the compensation fixed by this bill is rather small.

Mr. STEELE. I will say to my colleague on the committee that what he has stated to be the compensation in his State, and the practice with reference to furnishing supplies and paying for transcripts, is also the practice in my own State. Down to this time we have had no difficulty in getting competent stenographers. At the present time, with the present high cost of living, it may be that the compensation fixed in this bill is too low. Personally I would prefer to see it higher. My colleagues upon the committee felt that this was adequate and that competent stenographers could be secured at the compensation fixed in the bill. I yielded to their superior judgment in this regard.

Criticism has also been made with reference to a provision in section 2 of the bill, providing that—

Such exception shall be noted by the official stenographer in his notes, together with any exception to the judge's charge, taken before the jury retires; all of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial.

I wish to say, with reference to that provision, that we have had practically that identical language in our Pennsylvania statute for the last 20 or 30 years. It is not so rigid as to exclude the trial judge from any control over his record after the trial has taken place. The trial judge always has control of his record, and when an exception is asked for, when the counsel sitting at the table says to the stenographer, "I ask for an exception to that ruling," the stenographer notes that upon his record. Then, if the judge wishes to say anything further or do anything further, he has his opportunity then and there, just the same as the counsel has, and in the final make-up of the record, if the case goes to the appellate court, it is always within the control of the court to go over the record and certify as to any errors that may be contained therein. The practice of th court can be regulated by a rule of court just as well as it could be by a fixed statutory provision here. After the record is made up, if there is any conflict of opinion as to the accuracy of the record, the court can always fix the time when objections will be heard and the matter will be determined by the court, and whatever is determined by the court at that time stands a the official record. But in the absence of anything of that kind, all that counsel has to do—and it is a great labor-saving device in the preparation of an appeal—is to go over the record, and, where an exception is noted by the stenographer, assign that as error, include that part of the record, and it answers all the purposes of a bill of exceptions signed and sealed by the trial judge. But that does not eliminate the power of the judge to control his record at any time if any error is committed by the stenographer with reference to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question in that connection?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman think the language employed in the bill here, technically construed, carries out the interpretation stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely. It is shown by the experience of 30 years in our State, and I have no doubt whatever of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The language of that particular section is:

All of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial.

Mr. STEELE. Yes; "shall have the effect of exceptions"; but the record is always within the control of the court notwithstanding that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was only fearful that this language might make it possible to put a different construction upon it.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely not.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. On page 3 the following language appears:

In addition to such salary, such official stenographer may charge for any transcript of such notes ordered by any person interested other than a judge of such court 10 cents per folio thereof.

I should like to inquire if this language authorizes the judge of the court to require a copy of the transcript?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. And if so, for whose benefit?

Mr. STEELE. For his own benefit in expediting the trial or hearing and argument of the case, or on a motion for a new trial, or a judgment non obstante veredicto, or for any other matter of rehearing he may order it for his own use.

Mr. RHODES. Then why should not that language be qualified by the words "for his own use"? Because so much has been said in regard to poor litigants being unable to obtain transcripts, might it not be possible that the judge in a certain case might be moved to request a copy of such transcripts for the benefit of such litigants?

Mr. STEELE. I would not assume that any judge would abuse his power to that extent.

Mr. RHODES. That might be a fair assumption, but would it not be possible for such a thing to be done?

Mr. STEELE. I would not conceive it.

Mr. CLASSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. CLASSON. The language is "for the use of such judge."

Mr. RHODES. I was calling attention to the language in line 3, page 3, and I submit that the qualifying words to which the gentleman refers are not there.

Mr. DEWALT. Yes; but that refers to the language in lines 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. RHODES. If that is intended, then that language should be there.

Mr. DEWALT. It is in lines 6, 7, and 8 of the same paragraph.

Mr. STEELE. My own judgment is that the passage of this bill will not add any burden to the Federal Treasury; that it will expedite the trial of cases in Federal courts; that it will modernize Federal court procedure so that it will be abreast of the State courts in the facility with which the Federal courts can do business, and will expedite the dispatch of the public business. It is a bill that is desirable from every point of view, and I hope the House will give it favorable consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I think it would be an attempt at a superabundance of argument even to try to reinforce what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] and others who have advocated this bill.

Let us lay aside for a moment the necessity of the bill, the advisability of it, and the cost thereof, and consider, if you please, some of the exceptions that have been made to the bill itself. While I am for the bill, my opinion is not of such a character that I should not advocate the passage of the bill if there were reasonable amendments proposed thereto. I do think, with all due deference to my colleague from Pennsylvania, that there is considerable merit in the criticism that has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and also the suggestions by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I think that they are very easy of correction and amendment, and I suggest to the chairman of the committee and the gentleman having charge of the bill [Mr. STEELE] that they consider the advisability of inserting, on page 2, line 11, after the word "jury," these words: "or in the course of the trial or proceedings in regard thereto."

That would certainly include all dictum made by the court in any argument other than in the presence of the jury. It would include all rulings made by the court in applications for a new trial, or all proceedings had before the court in banc if the court sat in banc without a jury.

The criticism made by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and also in part by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I think is well taken, that these rulings, orders, and comments, to which exception could be taken as the bill is now framed, would be confined to those made in the presence of the jury. Therefore I think the insertion of the words would cure that, and I refer them to the respectful consideration of the committee.

Now, as to the other point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which was that this stenographic copy as vouched for by the stenographer and sworn to by him—as he is a sworn officer of the court—become of the same effect as the exceptions duly written out and signed by the judge himself. I grant you that a fair and technical construction of the bill as now written might admit of that construction. I think that can be easily cured if, in line 17, after the word "trial," the gentleman in charge of the bill will insert these words: "if certified by the court," so that the reading would be:

All of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial if certified by the court.

In that way you would obviate the difficulty.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in his suggestion that the only justification for this bill is upon the theory that the public has an interest in civil litigation. If it has that interest, and in my judgment it has an interest in all civil litigation, if only from the standpoint that it is interested in seeing the poor man secure his rights when opposed by one who has sufficient means to pay for the vindication of his rights, this bill ought to carry a mandate or direction to the stenographer to make a transcript of every case which he takes and make it a part of the record of the court.

In order for him to do this he must be a competent stenographer. Down in Louisiana, where we have the civil law, our code of practice requires that all cases must come up on the law and the evidence, necessitating a transcript in each and every case that comes to the court of appeals or the supreme court. We know the necessity of having good stenographers. I notice that a great many assume that all stenographers are equally good, for some peculiar reason which I have not been able to understand. As a matter of fact, all stenographers are not equally good. There are good stenographers and bad stenographers, just as there are good blacksmiths and bad blacksmiths, good carpenters and bad carpenters, good slaters and mediocre slaters. There is a maxim in the shorthand world—and years ago I was of that splendid profession, and I might say, poetically, that I, too, was born in Arcadia—there is a maxim among stenographers that a poor stenographer with a good memory is a better stenographer than the good stenographer with a bad memory. For, after all, it is a fundamental of every process of writing which from a lack of vocalization causes it to depend largely upon catch signs to assist the memory that a thoroughly educated person with a splendid memory should be the writer in order to make a desirable transcript of any record that comes under his observation and pencil. Therefore I believe it would be necessary, in the first instance, to secure a desirable stenographer. Where it is necessary from day to day to transcribe the notes the stenographer has to employ an amanuensis, and the amount provided for in this bill would not allow him anything after the payment of the amanuensis—not more than to pay his rent and put a pair of shoes on his feet.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will yield.

Mr. BEE. I want to say to the gentleman that I have an amendment increasing the compensation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think it is absolutely essential because, say what you will, these modern influences to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred will go on, and what to-day may be deemed unnecessary will certainly be necessary in a few years to come.

I remember the time down in New Orleans when our criminal courts did not have stenographers. Then questions went up purely upon matters of law, because our criminal process is, after all, bottomed on the English common law. Louisiana, as you doubtless know, is the only State in the Union where the record goes up on the facts in civil cases as well as the law, and they have for a long time been considering in inner or esoteric circles abandoning that old and long established practice down there. After the criminal courts were provided with stenographers the most astute criminal lawyers recognized at once that they could get a case up to the supreme court not only upon the law but upon the facts by making the facts in each and every case where they took a bill of exception a part of the bill of exceptions. In consequence, every judge in the supreme court knows a criminal case as well as if he had heard it as a juror. I am not saying that is not in the interest of justice, but I do say that a true and correct transcript should be made by a competent stenographer, able to secure and make a full report.

The remuneration offered in this bill is not sufficient to bring into the field the best services required, and you do undoubtedly require the highest and best talent obtainable if you are going to embark in this new channel in the direction of securing the ends of justice through the civil courts, aided and assisted by this modernizing influence which has come into the field of journalism, law, commerce, and legislation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman not think that this compensation which the stenographers will receive for making typewritten transcripts of their records would be a considerable addition to the compensation provided here.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know, for the reason that while a stenographer in a court in Chicago may be able to secure a sufficient sum in that way to pay a desirable amanuensis, the man in New Orleans might not be able to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, criticism has been made of this bill, chiefly criticism of its language, but so far as I can gather no real opposition to the plan or purpose of the measure has been manifested. I think we generally recognize that it is high time that we tried to modernize the district courts so as to get them somewhat in line with the practice that is common all over the country, a practice that has been found not only desirable but necessary, particularly in view of the fact that there is now much complaint that the poor are not getting a fair deal. We certainly ought to be willing to grant this particular relief, which would be of especial value to those who can not afford to pay expensive stenographers in courts to protect their interests. This is necessary to enable them to have their cases properly reviewed by the courts.

The question of fees seems to agitate a great many of the Members. It is no doubt true that in some of the large cities the stenographers earn a great deal more money than this bill may give them. A few days ago I was told by one of the stenographers who was doing work about the Capitol that two men of his firm were making $50,000 a year, $25,000 each. They are getting 25 cents per folio, and they are not getting any salary at all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; I have not the time. In cities like St. Louis they are getting, as we are informed, practically the fees that we are providing in this bill. In my own State, in the large cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, cities that have a great deal of important litigation, they are getting a salary of not to exceed $2,000, with substantially the same fees for transcripts. I do not believe that there is going to be any hardship imposed upon these stenographers and I do not believe there is any necessity for increasing these allowances. There is no doubt that these stenographers will get a great deal out of the transcripts, much more than the salary. I am told that several of the men who are now serving as secretaries to the judges are acting as stenographers. That is, they are able now to get men at $1,500 a year to act as secretaries who add to their salary by serving as stenographers. I do not think there is going to be any serious difficulty about the matter at all. I am willing to submit the question to this House. I feel an interest in the bill, because I believe the time has come when we ought to deal fairly with this matter and put these courts on something like the same plane as the State courts. The Federal courts certainly should not be behind the times.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony in all judicial proceedings and trials, together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, to which rulings, orders, comments, or remarks either party may except as a matter of right, and such exception shall be noted by the official stenographer in his notes, together with any exception to the judge's charge, taken before the jury retires; all of which exceptions shall have the effect of exceptions duly written out, signed, and sealed by the trial judge at the time of trial. And it shall be the duty of such stenographer to act as secretary to such judge and to take full stenographic notes of such other matters in connection with the business of the court as the judge may from time to time direct.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "shall," insert "when requested by either party or the court."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to take care of the numerous cases where stenographic reports are entirely unnecessary. As everyone knows who has observed affairs of this kind, there are many instances in all courts in the ordinary practice of the day where there is no necessity to transcribe the statement of counsel or the presentation of matters in purely ex parte proceedings. Section 2, as I read it, provides that the stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of testimony in all judicial proceedings. This is a matter which should be under the control of the court and the litigants, and if the litigants request it they should have the right to have the testimony taken by the stenographer, and if the court directs it the testimony should be so taken.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman mean by that amendment that the stenographic notes shall only be taken where directed by the court or requested by one of the parties?

Mr. GARD. Yes; when requested by the parties or directed by the court.

Mr. STEELE. The stenographer is supposed to receive an annual compensation, and the annual compensation is to cover the work in taking the stenographic notes. I would quite agree with the gentleman that there should be no transcribing of the notes, but I think he should take the notes.

Mr. GARD. There is no necessity for it always.

Mr. STEELE. Because sometimes parties themselves make up their minds to appeal a case after the trial has actually taken place. In a situation such as might arise under the gentleman's amendment, there would be in that case no way of obtaining the stenographic notes. Whether the notes should be transcribed or not may well depend upon the action of the parties or the courts. I think the stenographer ought to perform the duties for which he is paid an annual compensation by taking the notes.

Mr. GARD. I think if you have a stenographer to take down every word that is said in the progress of all judicial proceedings and trials, you will accumulate such a mass of shorthand notes that you will have to have not only one but many stenographers to do the work.

The parties know what they want, the court knows what he wants, and it seems to me it would safeguard both the interests of the litigants and the interest of the court.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think the better way to provide for that would be to have the language read "that such official stenographer shall, unless excused by the presiding justice and with the consent of the parties," and so forth?

Mr. GARD. Well, that is simply the alternative; it is stating the negative side of it.

Mr. WALSH. That would require the assent of the parties to the stenographer being excused. The other would leave it up to the presiding judge.

Mr. GARD. It has the same effect. I think either result is obtained by the parties or either party requesting the stenographer to take the evidence down, and if the court requests him to take it down then the interests of both in the case are well safeguarded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to read, after the word "shall," in line 6, page 2, "unless excused by the presiding judge with the consent of the parties."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may we have the original amendment again reported?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, before the amendment is reported I desire to change the word "either," in the amendment reported by me, to the word "any."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as stated. Is there objection? The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 6, after the word "shall," insert "when requested by any party or the court."

The CHAIRMAN. Now the Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 6, after the word "shall," insert "unless excused by the presiding judge with the consent of the parties."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. The fact is universal, and experience teaches us that that which you give away people take. This bill proposes to give without charge the expense of a stenographer. Why should the parties waive it? The parties to a lawsuit do not waive things unless they think they gain something by it. As long as we offer to give them the use of a stenographer they will take the use of the stenographer. Either one of these amendments if enacted will amount to the same thing, because it will never be exercised in any case.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is it not a fact that the stenographer on a salary will be present in the court anyway, and his time might as well be employed taking these notes? It does not have to be a lawsuit, because lawsuits terminate suddenly and unexpectedly, and although he might be excused in one case he would have to be present and ready for the next one. Why should not he take these stenographic notes as long as he has an annual salary and gets paid for taking them?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, as far as that is concerned that is not the question involved here in this amendment. As far as that is concerned this stenographer is to occupy a very important position otherwise. He will be required to be the secretary of the judge in place of the secretary the judge now has. Let me say to the gentleman from New York neither he nor I, I suppose, am a stenographer. Stenographic work is hard work, and no man or woman lives, in my judgment, who can take stenographic work six hours a day every day in the year and keep it up. The strain is too much. The gentleman has a secretary who can take stenographic work, but after a while his secretary changes off, writes out his work. But here is a proposition which requires a stenographer all the time that the court is in session, every day, to be on hand taking testimony, and then when this stenographer is to write it out I do not know, but I assume at night.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The way they do that kind of work is the stenographer has always attached to his staff——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But there is no staff here.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I know, but a staff is here in this sense, that they make a great deal more money by transcribing than by taking——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not under this bill they do not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the substitute by adding at the end of the substitute "in a civil proceeding."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the substitute offered by Mr. WALSH by adding at the end of the substitute "in a civil proceeding."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend that further by saying, "in a civil proceeding or action."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by adding——

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I do not think the gentleman would desire to offer that amendment and then say, in the very next line, "in all judicial proceedings and trials."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, if this provision should obtain at all, it should certainly be confined to civil proceedings; otherwise you create a situation where you deprive the defendant in a criminal suit of the advantages which he would have if he were more intelligent or better informed as to the proceedings in court and which he would lose by reason of his lack of information or by reason of his lack of counsel being present to help him. Certainly if we are going to provide official stenographers for the courts those stenographers should be available in criminal proceedings for the benefit of men who are charged with the commission of crime.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. There are a great many convictions on pleas of guilty. The gentleman would not want to have the stenographer take down the testimony in a case of that kind?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would. I will say to the gentleman the plea of guilty might have been inadvertently entered, or some other reason might exist why there should be a record of the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] to withdraw his request?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I think the original language is sufficient, namely, "in a civil proceeding," but I asked to add the words "or action."

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman want that amendment inserted, and then in the very next line find the language "in all judicial proceedings and trials"?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The question applies to the gentleman's own substitute as well as to my suggestion.

Mr. WALSH. You are putting in language, I think I may say to the gentleman, that is inconsistent with the language in lines 2 and 3. The amendment and the substitute apply to language in lines 2 and 3, but your modification would only make it apply to civil proceedings, when in the language following it says "all judicial proceedings and trials."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I ask that the substitute be read as amended, so that the exact language will be clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then understands the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] to withdraw his request to modify his amendment?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I will not withdraw the request. I prefer the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the substitute as proposed to be changed by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the substitute insert: "in a civil proceeding or action," so that the substitute offered by Mr. WALSH will read: "unless excused by the presiding judge with the consent of the parties in a civil proceeding or action."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose all amendments that have been offered. The text of the bill as it is printed is sufficient within itself. If the parties want to waive any requirement there provided, they have that power under general law, according to ordinary usage and practice. If the parties want to say to the judge, "We agree that it is not necessary to have the reporter take down this evidence," there is nothing in law that would not allow this to be done. So that the proposed alterations in the text seem to me superfluous, and we are only wasting time in quibbling over such minute details.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now arises on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts for the original amendment.

The question was taken, and the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEVENSON and Mr. GARD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 2, line 15, after the word "retires," strike out the semicolon, insert a period, and strike out the balance of the language in lines 15, 16, and 17, up to and including the word "trial."

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because of the criticism which has been made as to what the language may mean. I think that the language refers merely to the notation of the exceptions and not to the foreclosure of any judicial action after the notation is made. For the purpose of making it entirely clear, it seems to me this language may well be eliminated, since it may have a tendency to confuse; and I think the entire matter is cared for by the language in lines 11, 12, and 13, where it provides that the exceptions shall be noted by the official stenographer, together with any exception to the judge's charge taken before the jury retires.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I will.

Mr. BLACK. By striking that language out, would the defendant in the case have to make up his bills of exception in a separate instrument and have them signed by the judge? I understand the purpose of this section is to give the record the effect of a bill of exceptions; and if you strike that out would it not destroy the meaning of the section?

Mr. GARD. I think not. I think the meaning of the section would be preserved by the language. The exception provides for the making of the exception. It says that the exception shall be noted by the official stenographer in his notes, together with any exception to the judge's charge. So the bill of exceptions is presented upon the notation of an objection to testimony introduced and any exception to the judge's charge taken before the retirement of the jury.

Mr. BLACK. Under the present rules of the court, do not those things have to go up by means of regular bills of exception prepared after the case is tried?

Mr. GARD. They will still.

Mr. BLACK. In our State, for instance, they do not necessarily have to go up in that way. The stenographer's records will show that the exception was made, and if that record goes up to the court, that of itself is a bill of exception, without the necessity of making out a separate bill.

Mr. GARD. I think the practice is general that assignment in error must be made. The mere fact of notation is sufficient to establish the fact that the assignment of error is made upon a certain question, but the assignment must be set out in a petition in error. I think this notation will be sufficient to give the basis for saying what the exception was.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is not this provision you seek to strike out intended to expedite trial? In States, for instance, like Oklahoma the notation of an exception by the stenographer is not considered an exception to the court in a charge to a jury. A mere exception noted by the stenographer is not sufficient to save that exception on the record on appeal. Is not the purpose of this language you strike out to give the court a chance to expedite the trial by letting the stenographer take the exceptions that are dictated by the counsel at the time the charge is given? Is not that the purpose of this language?

Mr. GARD. I think that is the purpose; but there is some confusion of ideas as to whether that purpose is limited in the language in which the gentleman expressed himself, or whether it precluded the judge from acting on the exceptions after they were made. In other words, there was some considerable discussion to the effect that if this language were allowed to remain in the bill, the mere fact that the stenographer's notes showed a notation was sufficient to make that a part of the bill of exceptions, although in fact the notations may have been erroneous.

Mr. McKEOWN. In my State the exception noted by the stenographer is not deemed a sufficient exception on appeal and trial, and the custom is not to allow the attorney to dictate his exceptions at the time the charge is made.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that there is an amendment already pending.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I desire to perfect the amendment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] desires to strike out certain language. I desire to perfect that language before the motion is voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a preferential amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. On line 17, page 2, after the word "trial," insert "when the notes whereof are found by the court to conform to the facts."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would suggest to the gentleman to phrase it in this way, "subject to the authority of the court to make the notes conform to the facts." That no doubt is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This will give the court the power to determine that this was the actual transaction as it took place, so as to avoid the question that has been raised here, of writing into this bill a provision that would allow the stenographer alone to determine what is and what is not an exception.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understood the purpose, but I thought perhaps it could be better expressed in the language I suggested. Otherwise it might be said, if an error was found, that the section which allows this was defective, so far as this particular matter is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, line 17, after the word "trial" insert "when the notes whereof are found by the court to conform to the facts."

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I suggest vesting the court with authority to make the notes conform to the facts, and that would involve a correction only to that extent.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman suggest an amendment?

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. When I had the floor a few moments ago I suggested that you insert after the word "trial" the words "if certified by the judge." That would meet all your purpose, and it would be much more emphatic, explicit, and to the point, and would cover everything intended by your phraseology.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The judge does not certify those things, does he?

Mr. WALSH. The judge certifies in this way: He takes the record, looks over the exceptions thereto, and signs his name beneath the exceptions and the objections, and that is a certification upon the record.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The method I have been accustomed to involved the idea that the court would make a finding to the effect that it corresponded with the facts. That is the reason why I suggest that we adopt that form. Other courts might hold differently.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman pardon me again?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. The certification of the court would be simply this: "I, John Jones, presiding judge of the court of common pleas, do certify that the record is correct." That is the end of it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield a moment, I suggest that the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] would not leave the court any room to do anything except to refuse to certify or to certify, whereas the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] would give him the authority to certify and would also give him the authority to correct. I think the language of the gentleman from Virginia fully covers it. I suggest that the motion now before the House and the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] have left to the courts only the right to certify or to refuse, while the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] covers all that and allows the court to correct it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota give attention to the Chair for a moment? The Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota to the fact that when he first stated his amendment it read "conform to the facts." The Clerk says the writing before him reads, "conform with the facts." The Chair is in doubt whether that is what the gentleman wanted.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I would never get into a controversy with my friend from Minnesota on a point of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire recognition?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes. The chairman of the committee has just indicated that he will accept the language I suggested in lieu of what he has offered.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman desires to amend the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to amend the preferential motion of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Let it be a substitute, Mr. Chairman, for the preferential amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers a substitute amendment for the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. Will the gentleman from Virginia please provide the Clerk with the substitute?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Virginia as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD:

Page 2, line 17, insert after the word "trial" the words "subject to the authority of the court to correct the notes, so that they shall conform to the facts."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia wish to be heard on the substitute?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I accept that amendment.

Mr. GARD. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Virginia make his amendment absolutely correct by striking out the period after the word "trial," so that it would continue in sense.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as the Clerk will now report it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, does not the amendment say after the word "trial"?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then that is before the period.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York is correct, and, without objection, the amendment will stand as originally offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE]. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] to the preferential amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the preferential amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly. The Chair was about to put that.

Mr. GARD. The amendment I have offered is disposed of by the perfection of the text, because my amendment does not apply to the text as it now appears.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of form the Chair thinks it will have to be submitted unless the gentleman withdraws it.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be withdrawn.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 2, the words "made in the presence of the jury."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, lines 10 and 11, after the word "trial," where it occurs the second time, strike out the words "made in the presence of the jury."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If that language is stricken out it leaves the requirement to take all the proceedings stenographically, as I understand it. Suppose a motion for a new trial is being argued before the judge, and he makes an inquiry about a point of law. Is that required to be taken down? I think it would be, the way the language reads.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think so, but it is a very common custom in statutes of this kind to require all the proceedings in court to be taken down, and, of course, some discretion is allowed in regard to the taking down of immaterial matter.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, if it should not be taken down, an exception could be assigned because it was not taken down.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. An exception might be taken, but the party would get no benefit of it. It would have to be shown that it had some relation to the case.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The argument of counsel probably would not have to be taken down. I do not know. But the remarks of the trial judge, I take it, would have to be taken down. Of course if that is what the gentleman wants, all right. It would be rather hard to require the stenographer to be present every time a motion for a new trial is being argued for the purpose of taking down an inquiry made by the judge about the law.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we had better leave this language in the bill. I conceive the purpose of it to be this: Occasionally a judge makes remarks in the presence of the jury that are conceived to be detrimental to one side or the other. A good many cases in my State have been reversed on account of remarks made by the trial judge while discussing positions taken by counsel, remarks made in the presence of the jury, on the ground that they tended to prejudice the case. I take it this is for the purpose of reaching cases of that kind. Somebody asks a question. The judge rules, and in ruling he decides a question of fact which is entirely for the jury. He does it for the benefit of the ruling, but the jury get it, because he decides it there in their presence, and they carry that into the jury room with them and it can not be eradicated from their minds. A good many cases have been reversed on that ground. I take it this bill was drawn for the purpose of providing protection against that and not for the purpose of providing that everything in the world that the judge might say when the jury were not present should be taken down. I think the language is eminently proper, and that it should stay in the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will my friend from South Carolina yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not my friend think that if it were not for the requirement that everything said in this House shall be taken down, there would be far fewer and much better speeches made than are usually made now?

Mr. STEVENSON. There is no question about that. [Laughter.] I do not speak very much here, but still possibly I speak a little more than I would if my remarks were not taken down.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am not referring to the gentleman's speeches. I think probably the practice of having a verbatim report of all the remarks of Members published will never be abandoned, but I believe that practice causes more delay in the business of Congress than any other one thing.

Mr. McKEOWN. If this language were stricken out, what would happen where the jury come in and ask the court for further instruction? Would the stenographer be permitted to take down those remarks?

Mr. STEVENSON. The stenographer would have to take down all the remarks made whether the jury were in or out. Now, the idea of the bill is that whatever the judge says that reaches the mind of the jury, or that may be conceived to be prejudicial to one side or the other, must be taken down. That is the bill as it stands. Now, the proposition to take out the words which limit it to what is said in the presence of the jury means that the stenographer has got to take down all that is said in the presence of the jury and all that is said at any other time in the course of the trial, and therefore I think the language is better the way it is. I think the bill is a very good one as it stands in that shape.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I may be wrong in my construction of this phraseology, but it appears to me that the words clearly import that the rulings, orders, comments, or remarks referred to apply only to such rulings, orders, comments, and remarks as are made in the presence of the jury. Now, why do I say that? Because the phraseology in lines 8, 9, and 10 of page 2 is this:

Together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, to which rulings, orders, comments, or remarks either party may except as a matter of right.

Where? In the presence of the jury. Then follows this:

To which rulings, orders, comments—

What rulings, orders, and comments? Why, the rulings, orders, and comments just above referred to; that is, the rulings, orders, and comments made in the presence of the jury.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman understand the amendment that is pending to strike out the language "in the presence of the jury"?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes. Now, I am in favor of striking out those words, but the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] is opposed to that amendment, and that is why I am saying that I do not think the words should be permitted to remain in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In many cases the jury is withdrawn, and sometimes there is a half day or day's discussion on the law of the case. During the discussion the court makes a great many remarks which it would be utterly useless to take down, which would only encumber the record. Does the gentleman think that all of these remarks that the judge might make in the discussion of a law question should be taken down and make the party pay for the transcript at the rate of 15 cents 100 words?

Mr. DEWALT. My answer is no. Therefore I prepared an amendment, which I submitted to the consideration of the gentleman from Illinois and to the chairman of the committee, in these words: After the word "jury," in line 11, insert the words "or in the course of the trial or proceedings in regard thereto which are relevant."

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is there such a contingency in the Federal court as the withdrawal of the jury while a discussion of a question of law or the admissibility of evidence is going on?

Mr. DEWALT. Surely.

Mr. BEE. Would not that be a proper part of the transcript?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. BEE. If this language remained in the bill, it would not be.

Mr. STEVENSON. Can I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. DEWALT. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is not the difficulty that the gentleman makes the language "made in the presence of the jury" refer to the judge's charge and all rulings and orders, whereas it is intended only to refer to the words "any comments and remarks of the judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury"?

Mr. DEWALT. No; I do not think that is a fair construction; there is no comma. It says that all rulings and orders and any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial. Made where? Made in the presence of the jury.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. Does not the gentleman think it would obviate the objection by the insertion of the words "also of," after the word "and," where it appears the second time in the line, in line 9, and before the word "any," so that it would read "of all rulings and orders and also of any comment or remark by the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury"?

Mr. DEWALT. That would cure it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following preferential amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time in the line and before the word "any," insert the words "also of."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not a preferential amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, now I offer my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUSTED: Page 2, line 9, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time in the line, insert the words "also of."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Let us have that read as it will read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the language as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That such official stenographer shall take full stenographic notes of the testimony in all judicial proceedings and trials, together with the judge's charge, if any, and of all rulings and orders and also of any comment or remark of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury, etc.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to confine the remarks and comments to be taken down by the stenographer to the remarks and comments of the trial judge relating to the case on trial made in the presence of the jury. The object is, of course, to have taken down any comments or remarks made in the presence of the jury which tend to influence the decision of the jury, but it would be superfluous and unnecessary to take down comments and remarks not made in the presence of the jury. As the bill reads without the amendment it would not be necessary to take down rulings and orders which were not made in the presence of the jury. Of course, there are many rulings and orders which are not made in the presence of the jury which should be taken down. As the bill reads, the stenographer would have to take down those rulings and orders only which were made in the presence of the jury, but under my amendment the rulings and orders would have to be taken down, whether made in the presence of the jury or not, and only such comments and remarks by the trial judge would have to be taken down as were made in the presence of the jury. It seems to me that these are the only remarks that should be taken down, because the purpose is to enable the parties to get a record on which to set aside a verdict on the ground that the jury was unduly influenced.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I see what the gentleman has in mind, but does not he think that if he puts this amendment in it would still leave it in doubt as to precisely what the sentence will mean? Does he think that the judge in construing the language will give the meaning which the gentleman has just given? It seems to me that it would be doubtful whether it would necessarily carry the meaning which the gentleman has stated.

Mr. HUSTED. I do not see why, if the bill is amended as I propose, it would not require the stenographer to take down those comments only and remarks of the trial judge relating to the case on trial which were made in the presence of the jury.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; but my point is that even with that amendment the words "or rulings and orders," in line 9, would also be related to the words "made in the presence of the jury."

Mr. HUSTED. It does not seem to me that that would be a proper construction.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would not this make it absolutely clear: Instead of inserting the amendment where the gentleman does, insert, after the word "trial," in line 10, where it occurs the second time, the words "when such comment or remark is made in the presence of the jury"?

Mr. HUSTED. That would make it absolutely clear. I think my amendment accomplishes the purpose, but that would certainly put it beyond any question of doubt.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York, that, on page 2, in line 10, after the word "trial," where it occurs the second time, the words "when such comment or remark is" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "trial," where it occurs the second time in the line, insert the words "when such comment or remark is."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What has become of the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED]?

Mr. JONES of Texas. This is a substitute for that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But it does not come in the same place in the bill at all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then I ask that mine be considered as pending, if that is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not made any ruling upon it, because no point of order has been directly made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it is necessary to make a point of order to say that an amendment is not in order when another amendment is pending.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that I consider the form of this amendment better than the form of the amendment that I have offered, as it puts it beyond any peradventure of doubt, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I now offer the amendment which I heretofore offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas renews his offer of the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This morning I received a letter from Hon. Fred W. Davis, commissioner of agriculture in the State of Texas. Other Members of Congress received a copy of that letter. As it is a matter of importance, I ask unanimous consent, in my time, to read, out of order, a reply which I sent to that letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to read, in his time, a letter, out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to insert the letter from the agricultural commissioner of the State of Texas along with his statement?

Mr. BLANTON. I will be very glad to do that if the gentleman would like to have it done. I will ask that it be printed, so that we may not take up the time to read it.

Mr. NOLAN. Under those circumstances I would have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter of Mr. Davis is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, February 14, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: According to press reports, four leading farmers' organizations have memorialized Congress to take all necessary steps to prevent strikes. As a member of the executive board of one of the four organizations, will say that I had no idea any action was even contemplated concerning the fight now raging between organized labor and organized capital. Had I been consulted my protest would certainly have been registered.

Many times the statement has been made that Gompers was trying to get the farmers to pull the chestnuts of organized labor out of the fire, and farmers have been warned to keep hands off; which was good advice. Then why should the farmers pull the chestnuts of organized capital out of the fire? Certainly our farmers are more closely identified with labor than capital.

I hold no brief for either capital or labor, but the memorial deals with an abstract principle of human rights wherein it contends that labor has not the right to strike. It further contends that farmers have no right to strike because the public's interests are paramount. If one class is going to be compelled to work for the benefit of another, or all other classes, who is to be the slave, and who the master? For this is the only state of existence under such a policy. A collection of individuals have the same collective right as each individual has. Must an individual get permission of an officer of the law before he can quit working for another individual? Such a monstrous condition would be worse than Prussianism. Must an organization get permission from an officer of the law before its members can stop working for a corporation? If this doctrine becomes established, not only will industrial workers be immediately enslaved, but farmers will soon fall victims to the same doctrine. They will soon be compelled to sell the fruits of their toil, which represents their wages, at the price which the other fellow offers. Refusal to sell because prices are not satisfactory will run counter to the need and wishes of the public. It will not stop there, for they will be denied the right to quit and move to town after the public's needs have pauperized them, for the public will still sorely need the fruits of their unrequited toil and the town will have no particular use for them. A tenant farmer may be dissatisfied with the price he is receiving for his produce, the terms his landlord exacts, the educational conditions for his children, besides many other grievances, but what difference will that make when the public will starve if the farmers cease to produce. Here again the man who is working the land will be held up, while the man who owns it, but is probably living in town, will escape.

We should not forget that the governor of Kansas, who proposed more than anyone else to force the industrial laborers to continue to work, asked the United States Department of Justice to prosecute southern cotton growers for declaring they would reduce their cotton acreage in order to sell what they had already produced for the cost of production. He argued that the public would suffer if cotton production was curtailed.

The memorial sets up this very argument. It claims that if industrial workers, railroad men, for example, strike, the public will suffer, and the public has rights which the classes must respect. What classes, pray? The public did not charter our railroads to firemen, or engineers, or any other class of laborers. If lives are lost because of wrecks or otherwise, people do not sue the engineers for damages. These workers were not given the right of eminent domain, land grants, money bonuses, freedom from taxation, etc., for the purpose of developing the country and serving the public. Then when the public becomes concerned, why should the laborers who have no charter rights be held responsible and the owners of the roads escape?

It is claimed that the owners are paying all they can afford to pay. But who knows what would be the condition if the water was all squeezed out and excessive salaries which the public pays the officials for managing their own private business, and all their attorneys and lobbyists, were reduced to what these people could command in a competitive field? But this doesn't change the principle. The responsibility to keep the trains running rests upon the owners, not the laborers, and laborers individually and collectively have the right to work for nothing, or refuse a salary which would beggar a prince.

We know if salaries which strikers are getting are high enough, others will be attracted to them. If there is just argument in the contention that the salaries are high, the Government can put a stop to strikes by protecting those who take the places of those who quit. This, in the interest of both the individuals and public, the Government has a right to do. The Government has a right to prevent lawlessness among strikers. It has a right to take people individually and collectively who become a burden upon society because of idleness and put such to doing public work if they are unwilling to do private work, but it has no more right to make a section hand work for wages he doesn't consider fair, and when he doesn't wish to work, so long as the section hand does not become a burden upon the public, than it has to take the millionaire's son and make him work for wages which he would consider not sufficient for cigarette money. The Republic will write its doom when it undertakes to make one class work for another class.

If Congress should act favorably upon the memorial sent them by these four organizations, the farmers will regret it bitterly because its only goal is tyranny.

Yours, respectfully, FRED W. DAVIS,
Commissioner.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to say that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR], and others tell me that they received a similar letter, and I take it that other Members of Congress received copies of the letter. The letter which I sent in reply reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 18, 1920.

Hon. FRED W. DAVIS,
Commissioner of Agriculture, Austin, Tex.

MY DEAR SIR: Your three-page letter of 14th received, wherein you oppose the farmers' memorial asking Congress to prevent strikes, and you defend strikes by organized labor, and you specially defend the position taken by railroad employees, who have threatened a nation-wide tie-up unless their wage demands are granted, and you conclude by stating that if Congress should act favorably on the memorial sent by the farmers' four organizations regret would follow.

You sent this propaganda letter not only to my Texas colleagues, but Congressman MCARTHUR, of Oregon, and others tell me they likewise received one; hence I take it that you mailed one to each Congressman and Senator.

Not a single posted farmer in Texas will approve of your action. Does the State of Texas pay you a salary to thus waste your time and its stationery and postage in sending such Gompers propaganda to Senators and Congressmen? Have you let the farmers of Texas know the contents of your letter? Don't you know that the farmers bear more heavily than anyone else the burden of all labor strikes? Don't you know that the farmers of Texas favor proper arbitration of all industrial disputes to prevent strikes? Are you trying to hedge on Mr. Gompers's recent pronunciamento by thus assuring him that you are a dependable friend and want to be reelected?

I had hoped that the department of agriculture in my State was administered in the interests of Texas farmers and had other use for its time and money than wasting it in vicious propaganda. I know the farmers of Texas. Every posted, intelligent one of them will condemn your action.

Very sincerely, yours, THOMAS L. BLANTON.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That such official stenographer shall receive an annual compensation to be fixed by the judge not exceeding $2,000, and to be paid in the same manner as other court officials are paid.

In addition to such salary, such official stenographer may charge for any transcript of such notes ordered by any person interested other than a judge of such court 10 cents per folio thereof and 2 cents per folio for each manifold or other copy thereof when so made that it can be made with such transcript, but he shall upon the request of the judge presiding at any trial or proceeding read his notes or make a transcript thereof for the use of such judge without charge. Upon the request of any person interested, and the payment or tender of his fees therefor, such official stenographer shall furnish a duly certified transcript of such notes or any indicated part thereof in words and figures represented by the characters used in making the same.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I believe that in certain parts of the country the compensation provided for in this bill is inadequate to secure the services of trained experts. I know that in the State which I have the honor in part to represent, outside of the city of New York and the county of Kings, all of the stenographers are paid $3,000 per year. In addition to that they get mileage at the rate of 10 cents a mile, and they get their expenses while in attendance upon court, including their stationery. In the first and second districts the compensation is fixed by the courts, but I understand that in those districts the compensation is even higher.

In order to provide competent stenographers for the courts of the United States I think we will have to increase the compensation fixed in this bill. We want men who can take down the testimony correctly and transcribe it correctly, and I do not believe that we can get men to do that for the compensation provided in the bill, either in the city of New York or in the county in which I reside or in the city of Chicago or in any of the large centers of the country. I realize that this increases the amount of money authorized by the bill, and I regret that fact, but I offer the amendment because I believe it is absolutely necessary. These stenographers have to be highly trained experts. You can not use second-class men for this purpose. You must use the best, and the demand for those men is so great and they are so few in number that you have to pay good salaries in order to get them. I would say, further, that in the State of New York, in addition to the compensation which I have stated, we also give them 10 cents a folio for transcripts of the record.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word simply for the purpose of indorsing and reiterating what the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] has said, particularly as it related to the city of New York. I do not believe it is possible to procure in the city of New York a competent stenographer to take the position on the $2,000 basis. Therefore I am heartily in favor of the amendment and believe it is in the line of economy that the compensation be increased to $3,000 as suggested.

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONOVAN. I will.

Mr. WELTY. Could not that be cured by raising the fees of the stenographers in preparing the transcript?

Mr. DONOVAN. No; I do not think that would, because they get now over $4,000 salary and 10 cents for transcript.

Mr. WELTY. Suppose we make it 5 cents for manifolding instead of 2 cents?

Mr. DONOVAN. In the city of New York the State courts pay, if I recall correctly, $4,500, and it is difficult to get them at that, because the high-grade men generally run their own departments and make vast sums, as has been indicated here. If this bill is to become the law, we ought to have a salary of sufficient size to attract men who can do the work competently.

Mr. BLACK. Did the gentleman state what official stenographers in the district courts in New York City got—how much?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I think it is $4,500.

Mr. BLACK. And fees?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Yes; besides.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, we can not measure the salaries of court reporters throughout the United States by the standard of pay for court reporters in New York City any more than we can measure lawyers' fees and judges' salaries and compensation to others by the high standard of value obtaining in New York. The ordinary country lawyer may earn $50 a day in the trial of an action, whereas a lawyer in the city of New York, whose abilities are no more eminent, may command $250 per day. This Congress can not afford to vote a measure into law which will devolve a great lot of salaries upon the American people at this time, and better had this bill be defeated than that we put upon the backs of the people any more burdens of taxation. Now, I concede that the $1,500 salary that is being paid under existing law to the secretary of the Federal judge, which office is being practically abolished by this bill, will not materially increase the expenses of running the Government when we consider the increased facility with which court matters will be dispatched; therefore this measure is really in the interest of economy. But if you are to add an additional $1,000 for each court reporter for each of the 98 Federal district judges in the country, then we are going to impose upon the American people $98,000 more than this bill authorizes. Now, I was elected by a set of people who expected me to come to Washington and vote for economy. When I went back home during the holidays I was met by the taunt that we were not accomplishing what was expected of us, because many of the members of the boards and commissions that formerly infested and swarmed about Washington are still there and the boards and commissions have not been abolished or eliminated——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Evidently the gentleman has not been here and heard the report of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], his leader, on the wonderful accomplishments in the way of economy.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. MONDELL justly set forth the large measure of good which we have accomplished in that direction, but I am here to tell you the work ought to be carried 50, 60, or 100 per cent further, and if the pruning knife is severely applied, as it should be, 40,000 or 50,000 employees, "deserving Democrats," will be taken out of harness—I should say office, for they are not working—and sent back to the farms where they belong. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry with reference to this compensation matter. In many districts court is held in a number of different places. We provide for the traveling expenses of the judge going from his home to the different places for holding court. What compensation would the stenographer get for his traveling expenses, board bills, and so forth? Under this bill, will not he be required to pay all those expenses out of his salary?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not prepared to say whether or not he will. I was assured at one time there was a provision to cover it, but I did not take the pains to look it up.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Plainly there is no provision in reference to the payment of official stenographers in this respect.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They become officers of the court. Whether the statute covering the others is broad enough, I do not know.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I know that will not add to the ease with which to get competent stenographers if they have to pay these expenses.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, just a word, if I may be permitted. I do not think we ought to increase these salaries simply because New York or some other large city may find some difficulty or imagine it will find some difficulty in securing stenographers. Personally it is my impression that they will earn not only $2,000 but earn more than twice that much. That has been the experience as far as I know in our State courts. Let us concede for the sake of the argument there ought to be an increase in New York City. We ought not to extend that all over the country. There is a very simple way of making an amendment that will cover these large cities if we see fit and not spread this expense all over the whole country. I am satisfied that it is absolutely unnecessary. It can not cost any more in the Federal courts than it does in our State courts. It is a well-known fact that in many States the fees provided for in the bill are considered large enough. In my State the amount they receive for transcript is less although we have two cities, Minneapolis and St. Paul, where we have a great deal of litigation. In St. Louis the stenographer only gets $1,800 a year, and he practically gets the same pay for transcripts. Now, if there is any real necessity for any change it ought to be changed so as only to apply to large cities and not cover the whole country. The exceptional cases should not be made use of to increase generally the amount that will have to be borne by the Government under this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the chairman whether he considers in the provision carried in the bill for the fixing of a salary by the judge of not exceeding $2,000 that discretion would be abused in every case by the judges. Does the gentleman think the judges would make the maximum the salary in every case?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I imagine it will be $2,000 in every case where it may be necessary.

Mr. HUSTED. Or whether in districts where $2,000 was adequate $2,000 would not be fixed, and in districts where $2,000 is wholly inadequate a larger salary would be fixed?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman is making a speech instead of asking me a question.

Mr. HUSTED. Well, it was in the form of a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUSTED. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BEE and Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE].

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a couple of amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed past the five minutes, so that I can discuss the two amendments. They are correlated.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

First amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 3, line 8, after the word "charge," insert "and when it shall be made to appear to the judge, either by affidavit or otherwise, that a defendant convicted in a criminal cause before said court is too poor to pay for a transcript of the testimony or record, and desires to appeal from the judgment of said court, the said judge shall enter an order directing the said official stenographer to furnish to the said defendant without cost the said transcript aforesaid for the purpose of perfecting his appeal."

Second amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 3, line 3, after the word "court," strike out the words and figures "10 cents" and insert the words and figures "15 cents."

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, there has been a good deal of controversy during the course of these proceedings with reference to Federal courts. I want to take advantage of this opportunity to state that, although my experience has been limited in a degree, I have always found the Federal judges to be excellent men and excellent judges and lawyers. I never have joined in the condemnation of Federal judges that has been prevalent over this land. That, however, does not preclude me from saying that I am opposed on principle to the further extension of the powers of the Federal courts. [Applause.] I recall, for instance, in my State, and I suppose it is the same elsewhere, that you can not bring a suit except under a certain amount against the Western Union Telegraph Co. or the Southwestern Telephone Co. without having the cause transferred to the Federal court, even though they hold a permit to do business from the State court. I think the law ought to be amended, and the Supreme Court, I hope, some day will so decide, that whenever a foreign corporation holding a permit to do business in a State moves to transfer that cause from the State courts into the Federal court it instantly forfeits the permit to do business in the State. Now, having discussed that briefly, I get to my reasons for these amendments.

One of the things that has operated to the unpopularity of the Federal courts is the prohibition against the poor man asserting his rights in such courts. Such a thing as an appeal is almost unheard of, for the reason they are not able to pay the multifarious fees that have accumulated during the course of the trial and that are essential for them to perfect their judgment to the court of appeals. This bill is a step in the right direction. It provides that which ought to have been provided long ago—an official stenographer, whose duty it shall be to take down everything that occurs in the court. But when that is done any man who is unable to pay the cost of the transcript ought not by reason thereof be precluded from asserting his rights in the appellate court. I have not made a careful estimate of the cost of appeal in Federal cases, but I venture this offhand prediction that you can not appeal an ordinary felony case from the Federal court anywhere in this country to a circuit court of appeals under at least $250 to $300, excluding the attorney's fees. In fact, a defendant in the Federal court is confronted with costs and charges at every turn of his proceedings to his absolute discouragement. And it may be that he is guilty. But the fact that he is guilty does not preclude under our form of law and our fundamental Government the right to his day in court, but it is prohibitive under the present statutes. These amendments I have proposed, and to which I direct the attention of the committee, follow the general practice in nearly every State court, that where a defendant makes affidavit or otherwise satisfies the court that he is too poor to pay for the transcript, it shall be the duty of the court, satisfied of that fact, to compel the official stenographer to make that transcript out for him without cost in order that he may perfect his appeal, because without that he will be precluded from his appeal.

The stenographer—and I have no desire to curtail him—is receiving a salary of $2,000 a year. For what? For his attendance on the court. But there is no limitation on the amount that the stenographer can make outside of the $2,000. If the volume of business is heavy enough, and the appeals are of sufficient number, he can make $10,000 a year. In other words, it sometimes happens in the Federal courts that a case will take a month to try, with daily and hourly transcripts of testimony. The stenographer making that transcript oftentimes has the right, and it will be advantageous to him, to hire some one to whom he can dictate his notes through the dictaphone and have them transcribed upon the typewriter. The $2,000 is for the purpose of paying for his attendance in order that he may do that very thing.

Now, I stated at the beginning that the two amendments were correlated. I do not believe that 10 cents a folio is enough, because this bill does not make provision for the traveling expenses of the court reporter. The district judge and the marshal and the district attorney have their traveling expenses provided for and met, but the reporter must pay his own traveling expenses. In the State of Texas, for example, we pay 15 cents a folio. I understand in the State of Illinois they do the same thing, as I am informed, and I do not know how many other States in the Union pay that rate. That 15 cents a folio does not come out of the Government. The Government is only out the $2,000 for the salary to the reporter. The 15 cents a folio, or 10 cents, as the case may be, comes from the litigant, and in the event a defendant has satisfied the court that he is too poor to pay the expense it is borne without cost.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. In how many places in the gentleman's district does the United States court hold terms of court?

Mr. BEE. We have four in the western district of Texas, and they are widely separated. In the district represented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] they go from Houston to Brownsville and Galveston, all about, and it is a considerable expense.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman's amendment applies only to defendants in criminal cases?

Mr. BEE. Yes; it applies only to defendants in criminal cases.

Now, there is a question with reference to civil litigation, and I understand my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES] will refer to that. I wish I had it in my power to write the law of this land and take these people out of the Federal courts and have them spend their time in the State courts, where they belong. It is said, "It must needs be that offenses come, but woe to him by whom the offense cometh," and I suppose there is no remedy for that and we can not help ourselves in that direction.

Let me make this suggestion: Raise this compensation to 15 cents a folio, and you will enable the court reporters to do two things. The additional 5 cents per folio will go toward paying their traveling expenses, which are not now provided for, and at the same time it will compensate them for the free work that they have to do for the unfortunate defendants who are not able to pay their fee. If you keep it at 10 cents and put this amendment on, it might work a hardship.

It is far from my purpose to bring any hardship upon the court reporter. I consider that one of the marvels, almost miracles, of our time is found in the efficiency and the skill and the scientific and literary qualifications of stenographic reporters. When I see them in this House every day, with the variety and kinds of speeches, and the variety of manners in the delivery of them, and I pick up the RECORD the next morning, I marvel at their efficiency; and when I, with my limited experience in the courts, have noticed how accurately they have reported the efforts of lawyers before courts and juries, I marvel more at their efficiency, and I am in favor of such compensation to them as will bring to the court reporters and stenographers in the courts, Federal and otherwise, such a measure of compensation as will reward them for the skill and trouble and study they have devoted to their profession. Mr. Chairman, I ask the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Which one of these two amendments is before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the one first read will be the first voted on.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is in relation to codefendants?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise temporarily.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12486) authorizing the several district courts of the United States to appoint official reporters and prescribing their duties and compensation, had come to no resolution thereon.

RETURN OF THE RAILROADS.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I file the report of the committee of conference on the bill H. R. 10453, the railroad bill, with the exception of the statement.

Mr. GARD. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 10453) to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order on the conference report.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until 10 o'clock to-night to file the statement accompanying the conference report. The conferees did not finish their labors until 12 o'clock, and it will not be possible to complete the statement, perhaps, until midnight to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent between now and 10 o'clock to-night to file the statement accompanying the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what we may expect as to consideration and debate on this conference report, and when it will probably be taken up?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to submit, if I desire to do so, at any time until 12 o'clock to-night my reasons for failing to sign the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to be permitted to file before midnight to-night a statement of his reasons for failing to sign the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, under what rule is the gentleman authorized to file an individual statement on the conference report?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is not any rule on the subject. I am asking unanimous consent. The conference report is not a unanimous report. In view of my inability to agree to the report I thought it was fair to myself and to the membership that I should have opportunity to file my reasons. I do not know that I shall do it, but I want the privilege of doing so if I wish to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware that that has ever been done. The Chair thinks it could be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I doubt whether it is wise to establish the precedent of filing minority views on conference reports. Can not the gentleman accomplish the same result by extending his remarks in to-day's RECORD?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is what this would amount to, except that if I am given permission to file minority views the two would go together, and what I have to say will appear in the RECORD at the place where the conference report and statement are printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, of course, the statement of the conferees usually does not attempt to argue the merits of the proposition. It usually states only what is done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suppose the gentleman from Kentucky, if he files his minority views, will make what he says a matter of argument as to what ought to be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will not refer to the statement at all. It will simply refer to the conference report, which is composed of a bill that is a substitute for the bills passed by the two Houses.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It will be an argument, will it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether it will or not.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the gentleman will ask to extend his remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. It will be merely a statement in explanation of my disagreement to the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving further the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman will ask to extend his remarks in the RECORD by way of explanation, rather than to file a statement of his views. I do not think we ought to establish such a precedent, and while this is being asked by unanimous consent I feel that it might in the future lead to a great many requests of a similar nature, and I think the gentleman should ask to extend his remarks in the RECORD, explaining his failure to join in signing the report. If he does that he will be at liberty to set forth his views in an argumentative way.

Mr. BARKLEY. An extension of remarks of that kind would go in the back part of the RECORD, where nobody would see it. My object was to have it accompany the report, where it would be read.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can ask to have it extended immediately following the statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing, to accompany the report, a brief statement of my reasons for not signing it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing, following the statement of the conferees, a discussion of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table on Saturday morning next, the conference report on the railroad bill be taken up, that there be four hours of debate thereon, the time to be equally divided between those in favor of the conference report and those against it, the time of those opposed to the bill to be in control of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and the time in favor of the conference report to be under the control of myself, and that at the expiration of that time the previous question be considered as ordered upon the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next, immediately after the business on the Speaker's table is disposed of, the conference report on the railroad bill be taken up for consideration; that there be not exceeding four hours of debate, half to be controlled by himself in favor and half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] against; and that upon the conclusion of the debate the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if this agreement is entered into, ordering the previous question at the conclusion of the debate, would it preclude the offering of a motion to recommit the report to the conference committee with or without instructions?

Mr. ESCH. I understand that one motion to recommit would be allowable under the rules, on a conference report as well as upon any other proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. Further reserving the right to object, this is perhaps the most important legislation that will be considered at this session of Congress or any other session. With the exception of the title of the bill, which governs the issuance of railroad securities, there are many provisions in this conference report that were not in the bill as it passed the House. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he does not think we ought to have at least five hours' debate on this report, in order that Members may be given every opportunity to understand what is contained in it?

Mr. ESCH. As the gentleman very well knows, under the rule only one hour is allowed on a conference report; and I had thought that, by liberalizing the rule and extending the time to four hours, that might be sufficient. I realize that there is a great demand for time, and that those who open the debate on either side may occupy a considerable portion of the time in explanation, leaving very little time, possibly, for other Members to debate the conference report.

Mr. BARKLEY. As the gentleman says, I realize that under the rule only one hour is allowed for consideration of a conference report; but certainly nobody on either side would care to limit the debate on a great conference report of this sort to one hour. If it is limited to four hours, that will mean two hours on a side, which will practically limit the debate to the members of the conference committee. I have an idea that there are many Members of the House who would like to say something one way or the other about this report, and we could very well devote more than four hours to the discussion of it.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request to this extent, that there shall be five hours of general debate, half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] and half by myself, and that when the House adjourns on Friday night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning, of course with the understanding that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the expiration of the five hours' debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies his request, increasing the time to five hours, with the addition that when the House adjourns on Friday it be to meet at 11 o'clock on Saturday morning. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does this unanimous consent preclude a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will pass on that question when it arises.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think we are entitled to know what the attitude of the Chair will be on that question before we consent to this request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would tell the gentleman if he was certain about it himself; but the Chair admits that he is not at this moment certain about the motion to recommit. Of course, the unanimous-consent agreement would make no difference as to that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The precedents clearly are that a motion to recommit to the conference committee, where the Senate has not acted, is in order after the previous question has been ordered. Speaker CLARK on a number of occasions held that a motion to recommit was in order although the previous question was operating.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to suggest to the gentleman who has charge of the bill that this is a matter upon which I take it every Member in this House wants to go on record. I do not speak so much for myself, because my position on the bill from the beginning to the end is well known both here and in my district, and by reason of such fact I have agreed to pair with another Member. But practically all of our colleagues want to go on record, and they will not have a chance to speak within the agreed five hours' debate, because, I take it, as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky, that most of the time will be taken by members of the committee, who always come first, and this will leave other Members very little time to put themselves on record. They therefore can go on record only by their votes. Why have such an important matter and such an important vote on Saturday when the gentleman knows that a great many Members are then away from the city?

Mr. BEGG. They will be here next Saturday.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; some of them are always unavoidably (?) absent.

Mr. ESCH. Let me say to the gentleman that there is no day which could be set where there would not be some unavoidable absences.

Mr. BLANTON. But Saturday is the worst day you could select.

Mr. ESCH. No; I think not. I wish to state that it is our hope that the bill may be acted upon Saturday. If it is passed by the House, it can not be messaged over to the Senate until Monday morning. That may mean that no action will be possible in the Senate before Tuesday, and on the 1st of March, by proclamation of the President, the roads are to be returned. We can not and we ought not to delay this matter beyond Saturday.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, would not the gentleman agree to have the vote on Monday? Many Members usually return then.

Mr. ESCH. No; I do not think anything would be gained by that.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, as has been suggested, under a custom of the House members of the committee have the primary right to speak. I am afraid in a matter like this that they may take up the greater part of the time. Members of the committee have talked about it already, and I hope the gentleman in charge of the time may be able to assure us to-day that those of us who are not members of the committee shall have the opportunity in behalf of our constituents to state our position on the matter.

Mr. ESCH. I shall try and use my best endeavors to permit as many Members to give expression to their views as is possible. I hope that I may not be compelled to use all of the time on our side in explanation of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question. The agreement to divide the time, to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee on this side and the gentleman from Wisconsin on that side, as I understand, there is on our side——

Mr. ESCH. That is not the way I made the request. It was to divide the time between those in favor of the conference report and those who are opposed.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; but I take it that the gentleman in control of the time on this side will feel that he should yield only to those who are opposed to the conference report. I think we will probably have a good many on our side of the House who will be in favor of the conference report. I would like to know if we are to have some division of the time.

Mr. ESCH. I will state that if there is time left I would be glad to give them some recognition.

Mr. BLACK. That is not satisfactory, Mr. Speaker—"if any time is left."

Mr. ESCH. I hope to be liberal, as I stated to the gentleman from Kansas, and yield to as many as I can who are in favor of the report.

Mr. BLACK. If we can have some understanding that we will have an equitable division of time, I have no further objection.

Mr. ESCH. I will try and do that to the best of my ability.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

OFFICIAL STENOGRAPHERS FOR THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12486, providing for official stenographers in the United States district courts.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. GREEN of Iowa in the chair.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the first Bee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "cause," in the fourth line, add "or the defendant or plaintiff in a civil case, and after the word "defendant, in the last line, insert the words "or plaintiff."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the attitude of the committee will be in reference to the Bee amendment, but the purpose of the amendment I offer is to make the Bee amendment apply to both civil and criminal cases, whereas the original amendment applies only to criminal cases. I think it is wise to adopt both these amendments, because there are cases both civil and criminal in which a man, to say the least, ought to have the right of appeal, and yet in which by virtue of his depleted financial condition he is unable to pay the necessary expenses. If I have interpreted both amendments correctly, it makes it within the discretion of the trial court to order a transcript made in the event that the conditions justify such an order.

There are cases, particularly where employees are injured and suits for damages are filed, and in other cases where the heirs are suing for the recovery of certain properties, in which an adverse decision leaves practically no chance to have an appellate court pass on the decision of the trial court, because of the inability of the litigant who happens to lose in the lower court to pay the costs and expenses of an appeal.

I have heard a great deal of criticism of the Federal courts along this particular line. In fact, practically the only criticism that I have heard of Federal courts is the accusation that they are a rich man's court, that a poor man has no chance in these courts. I believe the adoption of these amendments will practically eliminate that accusation by making it possible, when the judge who decides the case feels that the facts justify it, through the filing of an affidavit to permit an appeal without the payment of the costs. I do not believe there is a State in the Union in which the State practice does not so provide. I know that in our State and in one or two of the adjoining States the trial judge may, in his discretion, upon the filing of the necessary affidavits permit an appeal on the part of the party losing, where it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that the particular litigant is unable to pay the expense of such an appeal. There are many cases where the issues of law are nebulous and very close, where a ruling of the court upon a point of law will settle the case in one way, whereas a decision on the same point of law the other way would settle the case in favor of the other litigant. It depends on the particular viewpoint of the judge who tries the case. In the character of case that I have mentioned, it seems to me wise that the litigant should have the right to an appeal, which he does not now have, in view of the expense necessarily attending such appeals in the Federal court. For that reason I think the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the word "indigent" in place of the word "poor."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the word "indigent" would cover the case. I think the word "poor" is better, and for that reason I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], as also to the amendment to the amendment offered by the other gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. The general statutory law of the United States makes ample provision for officers' service to poor persons. Any litigant may file his affidavit and proceed in forma pauperis, and this very measure which we are now proposing to enact into law makes the stenographer a court official, and as such he will, if the bill becomes a law, for the first time in the history of the country become subject to the operation of the general law.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It has been my experience that they will not order a transcript made, and a man can not appeal in forma pauperis. He may have a trial of the case, and if you make the amendment apply to criminal cases I think, by process of reasoning, civil cases clearly would be excluded.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The action of the judges of the Federal courts in refusing to order a transcript for one of the parties is undoubtedly due to the fact that the judges have no jurisdiction over the stenographers. This bill will make the stenographer the official reporter of the court, and with the enactment of such a measure into law the reporter will be subject to the general law of the country, as much so as the clerk of the court or the marshal, and be required to serve poor persons free of charge.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. After all, the principal reason for the organization of government is to fix it so that two men can go into a court and have a fair trial of their difficulties instead of fighting it out outside. Anything that conduces to that end is beneficial. I think one of the amendments of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] and the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] are along that line. Unless a poor man has the same chance as the rich man to have a fair trial and appeal, then you have not accomplished the very purpose of the organization of government. If your law is of such a nature that one man has a better chance than the other in the court, then you have not accomplished the purpose of government. The object of government in that respect is to afford a tribunal so that men may have an opportunity there to settle their difficulties and have nothing left to quarrel about. Everyone here knows, who has ever had a case in the Federal courts, who has had to pay the expenses of such an appeal, that that expense is simply outrageous. After you get the stenographer paid you can hardly afford to have the record printed. There is no reason or excuse for that. It may be that this will cost the State a little, but that is what your Government is organized for. There is no better way in the world to spend your money than to use it in seeing to it that one man has as good a chance in court as the other. There is no tax that can be used more sensibly than in an endeavor to give a man a square deal in court.

I believe this law should be passed, so that a poor man can appeal from a civil or a criminal case. I do not believe it should be left to the volition of the judge, who may think that he has decided the case and that it ought to stop there. I think this amendment should be so amended that every man can get an appeal.

As to this addition of 5 cents a folio, I do not believe it is the right thing to do. I think the committee should have adopted an amendment making the salary $3,000, and then it would have gone against the State instead of the various people. I do not know why a man who loses a lawsuit should pay 5 cents extra. I think the stenographer should be paid a reasonable salary, so that the State would pay it and it would be evenly distributed. I do think that amendments should be adopted so that hereafter one man has as good a chance as another in court.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. BEE. My idea of the 15 cents was to compensate the stenographer for the free work that he would have to do for those who are unable to pay, because it is very difficult to get a stenographer for the $2,000.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think the rich people ought to pay for suits that they are not interested in. Let the State pay that by giving a bigger salary. That is what your Government is for.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if I can have some agreement in relation to time on these amendments. Can we close, say, in 10 minutes? [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on these amendments close in five minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANKFORD rose.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I intend to use some of this time myself, because there has not been anything said in opposition to these amendments. I do not think we ought to adopt either of these amendments. The amendment in line 8 might be a very proper amendment if it was added to the existing law relative to that subject, but I do not believe we should put it into this bill. We have a statute on the subject, and perhaps that statute ought to be amended to cover this sort of a case. Nor do I believe we should raise the fee from 10 cents a folio to 15 cents. I called attention on the floor to the fact that 8 cents is what court stenographers receive in my State. Ten cents, I am told, is the usual fee in many States. We certainly ought not to raise it for the purpose of making the litigants who are able pay the expense of those who are unable to pay, as has been suggested. If there should be a provision such as is offered in the second amendment, the costs of the free service to the poor should be paid by the Government. That is what we require under the existing statute and that is the requirement in State laws wherever provisions are made for poor litigants. It seems to me we ought not to adopt either one of these amendments. We do not want this bill to carry any additional expense over what we pay now for court business.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. BEE. I do not understand that these amendments would carry any additional appropriation. You have not raised the $2,000, and this comes out of the fee of the litigants. How are you adding anything? But you are giving the poor man a chance.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. A good many poor people will have to pay 15 cents instead of 10 cents for a transcript under this amendment. There would be only a few people who would get this exemption you speak of, while persons ordering a transcript would pay 50 per cent more for it.

Mr. BEE. But it is better that ninety-nine go than that one innocent be punished.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But you punish a good many people who are just as innocent perhaps as those who are poor.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The amendment in reference to raising the pay is not in anyway connected with the first pay amendment which the other gentleman from Texas offered. The question of the relation of the pay is an entirely different matter.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But it has been argued that they are related. The contention is that 15 cents ought to be paid so as to get enough money for the stenographer to pay for those who are unable to pay.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But the second amendment may or may not be adopted.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any provision in the law by which the defendant may get the benefit of a record on appeal, who is too poor to pay for same?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I doubt that. There is the statute authorizing the Government to pay certain expenses of poor persons, but I can not say that it would apply to the payment for a transcript.

Mr. PARRISH. Does not the gentleman think that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE], especially as to criminal cases, ought to be adopted and a further provision adopted providing that the expenses be paid by the Government?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It ought to be paid by the Government.

Mr. PARRISH. I agree with the chairman that the increase of the price from 10 to 15 cents puts that additonal burden on the litigants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEE] as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BEE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment which has just been adopted.

Mr. STEVENSON. You can not do that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Can I not offer an amendment, this being the same paragraph, to this particular amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean to the amendment just adopted?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment in this way: The original amendment says, "when it is made to appear to the court by affidavit or otherwise." I wanted to strike out "by affidavit or otherwise" and insert "when it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court." I think that would be better.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be read as it is now, with the suggested amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as adopted will first be read.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now inquire of the gentleman from Texas what his unanimous-consent request is?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I was simply trying to make it more in the discretion of the court. I suggested they strike out "the judge by affidavit or otherwise" and insert "to the satisfaction of the court," so that it would be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas to the amendment just adopted: Strike out the words "to the judge, either by affidavit or otherwise," and insert in lieu thereof "to the satisfaction of the court," so that the amendment will read:

"When it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that a defendant convicted in a criminal cause"—

And so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BEE. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that there is another amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BEE: Page 3, line 3, after the word "court," strike out the words and figures "10 cents" and insert the words and figures "15 cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. VOLSTEAD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 19.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER: Page 3, line 13, after the word "same," strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the following:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall prohibit counsel of record in proceedings other than criminal to agree upon and employ a stenographer of their own selection, who shall be sworn in all cases in the same manner as the official stenographer."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill gives a monopoly of all court reporting in the Federal court to the official court reporter.

Every member of the committee who has had extensive practice in the Federal courts knows that there are all kinds of stenographers, all kinds of court reporters, and many of them have reporters of their own, that are available for such work. I know of many attorneys in my town that have agreements with firms doing stenographic work, reporting these cases in the Federal court.

I am one of those who do not believe in giving a monopoly to anybody. You take large centers, where there is heavy practice in the Federal courts, and those men will get all the practice, civil and criminal, and no reporter under this bill, other than the official reporter, can report any case in the United States courts.

Now, it occurs to me that that is a bad practice. We all ought to be privileged, when we make an agreement with counsel of record on the other side, to have the selection of a reporter of our own appointment, and we may be able to get him much cheaper than the official one. It seems to me that the amendment speaks for itself and the salutary purpose it will serve. I know in my own town the United States court meets every day in the year. Under our condition if this act becomes a law nobody can report a case except this official reporter, and it will be impossible to get a record cheaper than the rate we lay down in this bill, whereas if counsel of record had the right to agree upon and employ their own reporter, they may do it much cheaper. Court reporting now is a business, and it being a business, we ought to be permitted to purchase the services of anyone we see fit, just so he is agreeable to the counsel in the case and the court. Every one in this business will be driven out except the man who has this monopoly.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER] has well said that "the amendment speaks for itself." It would in my opinion practically destroy the object and purposes of this bill. You can not have half a dozen official stenographers for each Federal court, as the particular stenographer may be the pet of a particular law firm.

The object of this provision in the bill is to provide an official for the court who shall be known as the official stenographer, whose duties shall be prescribed, who shall be paid from the Federal Treasury.

This is not establishing a monopoly any more than because we select one particular judge to be the judge of a court we are setting up a monopoly, or that when we take one particular man for the clerk of the court we are establishing a monopoly, or that when we pick out one particular attorney to be United States attorney for that district we establish a monopoly. We are providing an extra official for this court, an official stenographer, an institution which has been set up in pretty nearly every State in the Union that has a court system of records, and under the modern practice we employ the stenographer and make him one of the officials of the judicial system. It seems to me it would tend to uniformity and reliability if we had one man, with authority in cases of emergency to provide a substitute, who should be known as the official stenographer.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman how long he thinks the official stenographer would want to hold the munificent position at a salary of $2,000 if the best part of his business, that of making transcripts in large cases, were taken away from him by private stenographers?

Mr. WALSH. Not long, I submit, if he is a competent man and you are going to deprive him of the compensation which is provided for in this bill by way of furnishing transcripts. It would seem to me that the provision of the bill is fairly liberal, and that nobody need have any fears that we are establishing any great destructive monopoly that is going to crush out and destroy the liberties of the human race.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MILLER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 24.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Page 3, subjoin a new section, to be known as section 4, and reading as follows:

"SEC. 4. In event a party to a judicial proceeding shall desire to take an appeal or apply for a writ of error or certiorari from a judgment, order, or decree, as the case may be, entered therein, and shall procure for use in that connection a transcript of the evidence, he may require the stenographer to incorporate in the certificate a statement of the amount paid therefor, and in event the judgment, order, or decree complained of is reversed, the amount so paid shall be taxed as part of the costs recovered thereon."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is not in order now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I simply call the attention of my friend from West Virginia to the fact that his amendment would cut off any further amendments to the pending section, because he is offering a new section. If we allow the pending section to be passed by, and take up a new one, that would cut off any further amendment to the section so passed by.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I have no desire to effectuate any such result as that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That would be the parliamentary situation. The gentleman's amendment is a new section.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I withhold my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman's amendment will be temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee what is meant by the words in line 5, page 3? This section provides for compensation for the transcript, 10 cents per folio thereof, and 2 cents per folio for each manifold or other copy thereof "when so made that it can be made with such transcript."

What do those words mean? I can not figure out that they mean anything, and I have not found anybody else who has been able to explain to me their meaning.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It means simply a manifold or carbon copy made at the same time with the original.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But this says "when so made that it can be made with such transcript."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is copied from an old statute.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Whether the language is old or new, I am trying to find out what it means. If a copy can not be made, there is no use to make any provision about it, and when you have provided that there shall be compensation for copies, of course that provision carries with it the implication that the copies can be made.

I move to strike out that language, "when so made that it can be made with such transcript," because I do not believe that they convey any meaning. I think some words have been left out in that connection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Nothing has been left out.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What do the words mean, "when so made that it can be made"?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is intended to cover this situation: The stenographer might refuse to make a manifold or carbon copy, and insist on getting 10 cents a folio for each transcript. Now, if the second copy is requested at the same time that the original is ordered, so that the manifold can be made at the same time, then 2 cents is all that the stenographer will get for the carbon copy.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is not the way the section reads. The section provides that the fee shall be 10 cents per folio for the transcript, and 2 cents per folio for each manifold, or other copy. That language provides the fee for all copies that may be made. It does not make any difference how the copies are made. The fee is 2 cents for each copy. I have conferred with a good many of my brethren, and I have not found anybody who could explain the meaning of the words quoted.

Mr. WALSH. It simply means 2 cents a folio for carbon copies.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It means 2 cents a folio for carbon copies made at the same time as the original.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What do the words mean, "when so made that it can be made with such transcript"? A copy may be made from the transcript by the use of carbon or some other device, but the copy is not made, so that it can be made.

I move to strike out the words in line 5, "when so made that it can be made with such transcript."

I am heartily in favor of this measure, but these words should be stricken as meaningless, and therefore a blot on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: On page 3, line 5, after the word "thereof" strike out the words "when so made that it can be made with such transcript."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I offer an amendment to that, to strike out the words, in line 5, "so made that." Then it will read:

And 2 cents per folio for each manifold or other copy thereof when it can be made with such transcript.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow an interrogatory there? Suppose it can not be made with the transcript. Then what is the stenographer to get?

The Clerk read as follows?

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD to the amendment offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 3, line 5, strike out the words "so made that."

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Suppose that it could not be made with the transcript. Then what is the stenographer to receive?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. He will get 10 cents for the transcript. But when it can be made at the same time he will only get 2 cents. That is for the purpose of avoiding a duplicate charge.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That raises another difficulty. You do not make copies with transcripts; you make copies from transcripts.

Mr. DEWALT. May I interrupt? It seems to me that what the gentleman desires is that if the copies can be made at the same time as a duplicate of the original, then the stenographer shall receive 2 cents.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; and 10 cents for the other.

Mr. DEWALT. But if he can not make the copies at the same time he gets 10 cents?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Ordinarily the transcript means the first original copy that is made by the typewriter machine. The most copies that any stenographer can make for practical purposes are four additional carbon copies.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Those are made from the transcript.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. No; they are made at the same time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They are made by carbon paper put into the machine.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. Yes. Let us assume that there is a case of where there are 10 defendants. You have one transcript and need nine additional copies. If this amendment prevails you will have the first defendant who gets the original transcript paying 10 cents. The next four will be 2 cents and the additional five will be compelled to pay 10 cents for each carbon copy. That is manifestly unfair.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That would be unfair. The proper thing to do is to strike out the language that I have moved to strike out. Then every time a transcript is made it would be paid for at the prescribed rate, and for the copies that could be made the stenographer would be paid 2 cents.

Mr. JOHNSTON of New York. If you strike out the language you suggest you are making each manifold copy 2 cents, no matter when it is made.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Every time the stenographer made a transcript he would charge 10 cents, but for every carbon or other copy he would get 2 cents.

Mr. MACCRATE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MACCRATE. Subsequent to the first set of carbons, if new orders for transcripts were given, if you strike out these words, the stenographer will only get 2 cents.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not at all. He would get 10 cents per folio for the transcript and 2 cents for the carbon or other copy.

Mr. MACCRATE. It will be an original.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then, as I have stated, he will get 10 cents.

Mr. MACCRATE. But it will be a copy of the old work.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; it would be another transcript of the stenographic notes. He would need the transcript to make the copy or copies.

Mr. MACCRATE. I suggest that the language in the bill as it is carries out the intention.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If anyone can explain that language in the bill, to wit, "so made that it can be made," I would like to hear that explanation. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language suggested in my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia) there were 21 ayes and 8 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the period at the end of the Bee amendment and insert the following: "And the cost of such transcript of testimony or record shall be paid by the Government."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate do now close——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, on page 3, line 9——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist upon his motion.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I move to close debate in five minutes on all amendments to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to close debate on this amendment and all amendments to the bill in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 9, strike out the word "interested."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to remark that I think this word ought to be eliminated, because this restricts anyone from going into the public record and getting a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the proviso of the Bee amendment insert: "Provided, That the official stenographer shall, within 10 days after taking said notes, file with the clerk of the court his official shorthand notes of the trial, testimony, and proceedings so taken by him, and when said notes are so filed they shall become a public record."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say one word on this. The first amendment just offered by me and rejected is unfortunate. This will help to correct it. There is no court proceedings in any civilized country, at least in America, where anyone is prohibited from getting a transcript of the testimony and proceedings in the case or copy of the record. Let us pass that, however. This amendment now makes the official stenographer's shorthand notes a public record, and in all of the States they are required to file them within so many days after the completion of the taking of the notes, so that anyone may go and look at the notes. They are a public record, and a change of them is just like a change of any other public record. There should be some restriction, some safeguard put around those notes, and some one should have charge of them except the reporter. In every court you will find the notes after being taken are required under penalty to be filed with the clerk and to remain a public record.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were—ayes 12, noes 24.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment which was withheld, and I would like to have it acted upon now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from West Virginia, having withheld his amendment with the understanding that he would be permitted to return to it, has the right to offer that amendment now.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I offer the amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman has the right to offer an amendment. So long as any member of the committee wishes to offer an amendment to the pending bill, the committee can not rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODYKOONTZ: Page 3, subjoin a new section to be known as section 4, and reading thus:

"SEC. 4. In event a party to a judicial proceeding shall desire to take an appeal or apply for a writ of error or certiorari from a judgment, order, or decree, as the case may be, entered therein, and shall procure for use in that connection a transcript of the evidence, he may require the stenographer to incorporate in the certificate a statement of the amount paid therefor, and in event the judgment, order, or decree complained of is reversed the amount so paid shall be taxed as part of the cost recovered thereon."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that debate on the preceding section having been closed that therefore debate upon this new section is now closed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Before the Chair finally makes that ruling I would like to make a suggestion to the Chair that the closing of debate on one section of a bill can not possibly operate to close debate on a new section that is not offered by virtue of its relationship to the preceding section, but as an independent section. That is the present situation. This is an entirely new section, not offered as being germane to the preceding section, but as an independent section germane to the bill. There was an intimation made from the Chair some time by another Chairman that when debate had been closed on a section and amendments thereto that this would operate to forbid debate on an amendment to the bill offered as a new section; but that ruling has never been formally made. I would ask the Chair before making his ruling to consider for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be very much inclined to agree with the gentleman's argument in the first instance, but the Chair thinks he has been foreclosed by a previous decision.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Not a well-considered previous decision. I noticed a few days ago that a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole found no difficulty in overruling a former Speaker of the House, Mr. CLARK, in respect to whether a motion to strike out was always in order. Mr. CLARK held time and again that a motion to strike out was always in order and that the question of germaneness did not apply to it. Yet a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole—I think it was Mr. HICKS—overruled Mr. CLARK very positively, so that all antecedent decisions are not by any means being followed.

By what sort of reasoning can the fact that debate has closed upon one section of a bill, operate to foreclose debate on a new section which is not offered as an amendment by reason of any relationship to the preceding section? Upon what principle would such a ruling rest? It is perfectly competent to foreclose debate on a section, and all amendments thereto. That is frequently done. But the very statement of the motion shows that it does not apply to a situation in which an amendment is offered, not by virtue of the fact it pertains to that particular section, on which debate is closed, or any other section of the bill, but by virtue of the fact that it is germane to the bill as a whole and is therefore offered as an independent section. It will be perfectly competent to make this motion to close debate as to this new section after debate proceeds for a while with respect to the same, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this proposed section is not related to the antecedent section in anywise. It is therefore not an amendment that depends upon that section, and hence the motion to close debate on that section by its own terms of limitation does not apply to the new section which is now offered simply as an amendment to the bill generally and not to any particular section of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the rulings had better be harmonious.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Permit me to make this suggestion. Suppose this amendment had not been offered immediately following this particular section on which debate had been closed but two or three sections had been read and it was then offered as an amendment as a separate and independent section? Would the fact that at some time in the consideration of the bill, debate had been closed on some antecedent section, preclude debate upon the section offered as a new and independent section? That would seem to be the necessary consequence of this ruling, since this section now offered is just as independent of the antecedent section, as it would be if offered after two or three sections had been read. It is in nowise related to the antecedent section, and its parliamentary status is not affected by the motion which has been made in relation to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter will be passed upon by the Chair when it arises.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to speak for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered simply gives the right to the prevailing party in the appellate court to have the cost of the transcript taxed as part of his recovery in the appellate court.

Mr. RAKER. Is not that the law now?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. No; it is not the law. The chairman of the committee and myself examined the general statutes and we were unable to find any specific authority for the taxing of the cost of the transcript. A condition like this is generally taken care of in the statutory law of the States, although in my own State, West Virginia, the cost of the transcript can not be recovered, according to an opinion of the supreme court of appeals of that State. The question has been ruled on by that court, and an effort has been made to secure the passage of an act through the State legislature to remedy the situation.

Mr. WALSH. As I caught the reading of the amendment, it provides for taxing of costs. That is not, certainly, germane in a bill authorizing several district courts to appoint official stenographers and prescribing their duties. That is a matter for the judicial code. This is a bill to authorize the appointment of official stenographers and to prescribe their duties. Now, the amendment goes into what shall be taxed as costs under certain conditions. I do not think it ought to be affixed to this bill. If it is necessary in proceedings in Federal courts to revise the authority for taxation of costs, that ought to be done in the proper and regular way—should not be injected into a measure prescribing for official stenographers. I make the point of order it is not germane.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, this bill goes further than that. It provides for the appointment of a court reporter, and it provides for payment of compensation to him for these transcripts and imposes a liability upon litigants, and it can at the same time make provision for the recovery of the amount that the litigant is required to disburse in the way of costs. It is a new provision of law that the bill carries, and it can very well take care of the incidental matter that I have mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill, as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ] states, does provide for the appointment of a stenographer and for his compensation, but it nowhere makes provision with reference to the action of the court or any directions as to how the court shall proceed. The last part of the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia would require the court to tax a certain amount as costs and therefore applies to the action of the court. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not in order.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12486) authorizing the several district courts of the United States to appoint official stenographers, and prescribing their duties and compensation, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VOLSTEAD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

CONFERENCE REPORT—ZONING COMMISSION.

Mr. MAPES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, presented a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia, and creating a zoning commission, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD under the rules.

ADDITIONAL PRINT OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I present a unanimous-consent request that 1,500 additional copies of the conference report on the railroad bill be ordered printed for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3202. An act granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes; and

S. 3722. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1920.

Hon. F. H. GILLETT,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I desire to tender my resignation as the sitting Member from the fifth Virginia district, this resignation to be effective on February 29, 1920.

Sincerely, yours,

E. W. SAUNDERS.

LEGISLATION FOR THE FARMER.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, it is so easy for us to get our minds off of the real issue, and among the mass of bills pending here we are apt to lose sight of the all-important task before us. I refer to the task of legislating first, last, and all the time for the producer, and especially for the farmer. If we do this, we can never go wrong. All our success as a Nation springs from the success of the farmer.

How are we to solve the problem of the high cost of living, which, like Banquo's ghost, will not down? The answer is by a greater production. Where must it come from? The answer is from the farmer. I repeat, How are we to solve the question of the high cost of living? The answer is help the farmer and he will solve it.

Every bill here can be determined a good bill or a bad one by answering in our hearts the question, Will it help the farmer?

Let us see if I am right about this. What about universal military training. Will it help the farmers or hurt them for their boys to be forced into a military camp at an immense expense to the taxpayers? I think it will hurt the farmer and thus hurt our Nation, and I am opposed to it for this and other reasons.

What about the thousands of undesirable people that are flocking to our country? Are they helping the laboring man and the farmer? I say no. So I am opposed to filling this country up with people who do not love our Nation, who do not respect our flag, and who are opposed to everything for which our forefathers fought.

What about the railroad bill now in conference? How are we to vote on it? I will tell you: Read it carefully and prayerfully, and as you read search your heart as to each provision with the burning question, What is best for the great mass of common folk, for the laboring man, and for the farmer? Then vote as your conscience leads you and you will not go wrong.

Let us apply the test to one idea in the bill as an example. What about the short-line railroads? Do they help the farmers? Yes; for in many sections they carry the means of transportation to his very door, and in all instances they are the feeders for the big lines and help to perfect our great railroad system which, when properly controlled, means so much to our farming interests.

Then I am in favor of legislation for the short lines, for when I help legislate for the short lines I help legislate for the producer and the farmer.

Legislation for the producer is legislation for the consumer. It is legislation for everybody.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the solution of every problem here is found in the answer to the question, Will it hurt the farmer?

A canal has been proposed across a part of my district in Georgia. Am I in favor of it? The answer to this question is found in the answer to the question, Will the canal help the farmers of my district or hurt them? I am first, last, and all the time in favor of a sea-level canal through the low, flat lands near the Okefenokee Swamp, because such a canal would be very valuable not only to our Nation but also would be very valuable to many people of my district for drainage purposes.

But when there is a suggestion to not drain the Okefenokee Swamp, but to dam it and hold water in it and flood and water-soak all the low, flat lands for miles and miles around the swamp, in order to get a lock canal built through the Okefenokee, then I am opposed to the canal.

My very being shudders at the idea of causing hundreds of people in Clinch, Charlton, Ware, Atkinson, Echolls, and other counties to have to give up their homes on account of water being backed up in streams that flow into the Okefenokee.

Mr. Speaker, the people of my district need drainage in several counties adjoining the Okefenokee Swamp. I favor with my whole heart a sea-level canal which would be in furtherance of a general drainage scheme.

I find myself rebelling against any system of locks and dams to hold water for canal purposes. We do not need something to lock the water in the Okefenokee; we need a key to let the water out of the Okefenokee and surrounding territory. I find myself favoring a canal that will help the people of my district; not one to hurt them. Will it help the farmer or hurt him? Answer that question and you will know how I will vote. I voted against the so-called daylight-saving law because it was an injustice to the farmer.

I prepared and secured an amendment to the prohibition bill so as to protect innocent holders of liens and so as to maintain our credit system for the common folks and for the farmers.

I blocked, had stricken from the calendar, and prevented the passage of a bill by Mr. DYER, of Missouri, to try to find a substitute for wooden crossties, because I saw it was an effort to injure the people of my section who own pine timber. I believe that no substitute can be found for wood ties. The price would be run down and yet wood ties used.

Mr. Speaker, when an effort was made last fall to tax potash and run the price of guano up and cost the farmers of Georgia about $20,000 per county per year extra, I fought the measure by speeches on this floor and in every way I could. I am glad that by the help of others the bill has never passed.

When a bill was up to educate cripples, crippled in factories, I tried to amend it by providing that boys crippled on the farm should also be helped by the Government. My amendment lost by only a few votes.

I am now studying day and night on a bill which I intend to introduce to cut out so much profit of the middle man and bring the producer and consumer closer together and help the farmer get more for his products and help the consumer get better food more cheaply. I hope to offer a bill along this line soon.

Mr. Speaker, we must legislate for the farmer if we want to legislate for our people and for our homes and for our great Nation.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, February 19, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1920.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, February 18, 1920.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	Knox	Pomerene
Ball	Gore	Lenroot	Ransdell
Beckham	Gronna	Lodge	Sheppard
Brandegee	Hale	McKellar	Sherman
Capper	Harris	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Harrison	McNary	Smith, Md.
Colt	Henderson	Moses	Smoot
Culberson	Hitchcock	Nelson	Spencer
Cummins	Johnson, Calif.	New	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas

Elkins	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kenyon	Phelan	Warren
Fletcher	Keyes	Phipps	Williams
France	King	Pittman	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Poindexter

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness. I ask that this notice may continue during the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, due to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is detained by illness in his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is detained at home by illness.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senate resumes the consideration of House bill 12046, the deficiency appropriation bill, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a moment until I present a matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as the committee was about to close its labors upon the pending deficiency appropriation bill, and after we had agreed to a proposed appropriation of $1,000,000 placed in the bill by the House to guard the 59,000,000 gallons and more of whisky that are held in the possession of the manufacturers, and we had also added a new item of $1,000,000 for the Customs Service, to protect the borders of our country, against incoming whisky, there came an estimate with a proposed amendment from the Secretary of the Treasury which, while it covered the appropriation of $1,000,000 already included in the bill, was not a real estimate for an item of appropriation, but a matter of legislation covering a large number of pages. It starts in and provides for the handling and disposition of the whisky. It provides for the buying of land and the building of storehouses. It provides for guarding the present storehouses where the whisky is held in bond. It provides for the collection of the customs when the whisky is taken out for sale. It provides how it shall be sold and it carries penalties up to 5 or 10 years' imprisonment, and so forth. It provides for bottling plants at the various places so that it can be bottled and sold.

So the committee did not insert the matter in the pending appropriation bill, but I have put it in the form of a bill for regular legislation, leaving out the appropriation feature. I now introduce the bill and ask that it may go to the Committee on Finance, which has handled all matters of internal revenue with relation to whisky. I ask that committee and the members present that the bill may have early attention.

The bill (S. 3937) for the enforcement of the national prohibition act by establishing and maintaining Government warehouses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. KING. I inquire of the Senator from Wyoming, in view of the first statement which he made as to the character of this proposed legislation and in view of the fact that the other legislation we have had in enforcing the prohibition constitutional amendment, war-time prohibition, and so forth, emanated from the Judiciary Committee, if this measure ought not to be referred to that committee?

Mr. WARREN. But this relates to the matter of revenue from it and for guarding it. Some of our appropriations are taken care of through the Internal Revenue Bureau. We have appropriated the money to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Mr. Roper. This simply adds to the laws and rules the working memorandum or formula.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, of course, to its going to that committee.

Mr. WARREN. If the Committee on Finance believes that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, it can be rereferred; but I am sure that when the Senator reads it he will see that it ought to go to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING. While we are talking about the appropriation for enforcing war-time prohibition, I was called from the Chamber for a moment yesterday when the Senate passed, I understand, two items, one on page 11 and the other on page 13, each item calling for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the enforcement of the national prohibition act. The first appropriation is "for the employment of additional officers, traveling and other necessary miscellaneous expenses to guard intoxicating liquors in bonded and other warehouses, and prevent violations of the national prohibition act." Then, on page 13, this language is used:

> For enforcing the laws governing the importation and exportation of intoxicating liquors by the Customs Service, $1,000,000.

My understanding is that former bills have carried very large appropriations to enforce the prohibition act. Was it necessary to add $2,000,000 additional?

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me further to answer the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. It was so considered by the department. They have estimated accordingly, and it is only for the four months and the fraction until June 30. I understand from the notes that I saw in last evening's paper that there will be something like $12,000,000 appropriated in the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, which will be presented here in the regular course, to carry these laws into effect for the coming fiscal year, and this will be but a small part of what we shall be called upon to appropriate.

The two amounts in the pending bill are for definitely separate purposes. One is to guard the whisky, and of course the bill which I have introduced and which will be printed will show how and where it is to be carried out.

The other item, as testified to by the parties in charge of the Customs Service, is to undertake to guard the lines between this country and Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific and down on the Atlantic to Mexico, along the border of Mexico, and on to the Pacific, and thence north to Canada. Admittedly it is not sufficient, and it will hardly be made sufficient to insure us that no whisky will come across in pocket containers and in small ways, but they hope to protect it from coming in in shiploads or on trains of cars, or indeed in automobiles.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to state to my colleague that the House has reported the regular bill carrying $12,000,000, as stated by the Senator from Wyoming. The estimate for that same work from the Treasury Department was over $30,000,000.

Mr. KING. All I can say is that it will be a scandal and an outrage to make any such appropriation, and any department that makes such a demand, I think, ought to have some person there with a little more common sense, and we ought to revise their estimates.

I am afraid we are undertaking a task that is beyond the jurisdiction of the United States, and is an assumption of a system of espionage that is scarcely worthy of the Federal Government. I know that an appropriation was made heretofore for the enforcement of the act, and I can not understand the necessity of these extensive appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Two million dollars was appropriated in the original act, but when we undertake to carry out this laudable purpose and make this country a prohibition country, which I hope can be effected, it will be $50,000,000 or more a year, instead of $12,000,000, as the Senator will of course ascertain. It may not last long; we may be able to soon kill out all the seeds of this great curse, but it will take much money. The legislation has been passed; it comes before the Committee on Appropriations as a demand from the country, and we must provide for it by appropriations.

Mr. KING. The Senator will bear in mind the fact that we have the Department of Justice, with a multitude of officials who belong to that department, who are charged with the duty of enforcing the laws of the land, who are charged with the duty of enforcing this statute. They are charged with the duty of enforcing the statute relating to intoxicating liquors, as they are charged with the duty of enforcing other criminal statutes of the United States. Then we have in the Treasury Department a multitude of officials who are engaged in the collection of revenue. Many of them heretofore were employed in the collection of the tax upon intoxicating liquors. I see no reason why that vast army should not be fairly and legitimately employed in the enforcement of this statute. I can not comprehend the necessity of these very large appropriations for the enforcement of that law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish simply to add that rather than appropriate the millions that are asked to guard and protect the 59,000,000 gallons of liquor and alcohol held in bonded warehouses to-day it would be very much better for the United States to purchase it outright and have it absolutely under its control, and dispose of it under the existing law, and, if necessary——

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose the Government did buy it, would it not have to guard it just the same?

Mr. SMOOT. It could be put in one place and guarded in one place, rather than have it in bonded warehouses all over the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would take a regiment of men to guard it even then.

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily. The owners of the warehouses can not secure a cent of credit, using the warehouses as security. The Government holds a lien upon the property as long as there is any alcohol or liquor whatever in the premises.

We have got to have some kind of legislation in order to protect the men who own those bonded warehouses. It seems to me the Government of the United States could purchase the liquor or alcohol at a fair profit—it would be less than a dollar a gallon—and if it became necessary to extract the alcohol out of all the liquor—that is, only retaining the alcohol—and let it go to meet the medical demands of the people of the country under existing law, there would be no question then about the liquor that is on hand being sold in an unlawful way. But that, of course, is a question that we shall have to consider later.

Mr. KIRBY. I should like to ask a question. To whom does this liquor which is contraband and which is now in storage in the Government bonded warehouses belong and what financial interest has the Government in it?

Mr. SMOOT. It belongs to the manufacturers or purchasers. The Government has this financial interest, that before the liquor can go out of the bonded warehouses the owners must pay $6.40 a gallon tax.

Mr. KIRBY. Then the Government will only have a lien on the liquor for the tax?

Mr. SMOOT. That is, when it leaves the warehouse.

Mr. KIRBY. If it can not go out, then the Government has no interest in it?

Mr. SMOOT. The Government has only the interest in it of seeing that the liquor does not go out without the payment of the tax.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have this case in mind as to which I desire to ask the Senator a question. A gentleman owns a building in the city of Baltimore in which whisky is stored on which the Government claims the tax. Nobody can buy the property; there is no place where the whisky can be taken. The owner can not give a title to his property because the Government has a lien on the liquor. What is going to become of the property?

Mr. SMOOT. I had reference to just such a case as that referred to by the Senator from North Carolina, for the man in Baltimore is not the only person so situated. That particular case, however, has been called to my attention as well as to the attention of other Senators. The building is a bonded warehouse in which liquor is stored, and the owner can not give title to his property so long as the liquor remains there.

RANK OF ARMY OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 227).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 4th instant, certain information relative to the policy of the General Staff of the War Department with respect to the demotion of officers of the Regular Army, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10072. An act to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12486. An act authorizing the several district courts of the United States to appoint official stenographers, and prescribing their duties and compensation.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3202. An act granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes; and

S. 3722. An act to grant the consent of Congress to the Alfords Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Savannah River.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the National Press Club Post of the American Legion, indorsing, without qualification, the universal military training provisions in the Army reorganization bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Lecompton, Hutchinson, and Alta Vista, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PHELAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against the proposed sale of ships by the United States Shipping Board, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the labor council of San Francisco, Calif., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling-Graham sedition bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Reading, Pa., and a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of York, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the United States Grain Corporation to purchase and transfer to countries of central Europe and Armenia food supplies and other necessaries of life in order to avert famine, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Castle, Pa., praying for the recognition of the Irish Republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Post No. 482, American Legion, of Phoenixville, Pa., praying that each man and woman who served in the World War be granted a $50 bond for each month of service, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Mountain City Lodge, No. 545, International Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders, of Renovo, Pa., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins-Esch railroad bill and favoring a five-year extension to Government control of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Gen. George G. Meade Camp, No. 16, Division of Pennsylvania, Sons of Veterans, of Reading; of Lieut. Ezra S. Griffin Post, No. 139, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, of Scranton; and of Lieut. Josiah White Post, No. 45, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, of Phoenixville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of A. Pierson Hurd Post No. 236, American Legion, of Peckville, Pa., and a petition of Harold H. Bair Post, No. 14, American Legion, of Hanover, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called Davey sedition bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of the Federated Trades Council of Reading; of Local Union No. 17166, Cigar Factory Tobacco Strippers of America, of Reading; of Local Union No. 236, Cigarmakers' International Union of America, of Reading; of the Central Trades and Labor Council of Allentown; of the United Trades Council of Brownsville; and of Local Union No. 1134, United Mine Workers of America, of Grassflat, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Sterling sedition bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 3938) for the relief of Annie H. Martin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3939) for the relief of Milton B. Hoffman; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3940) granting a pension to Anna W. Udell (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3941) for the relief of the owners of the dredge Maryland; to the Committee on Claims.

DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

Mr. FLETCHER. I introduce a bill to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill (S. 3942) to encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the United States through Federal and State cooperation, giving preference in the matter of employment and the establishment of rural homes to those who have served with the military and naval forces, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present a synopsis of the proposed national land-reclamation settlement act to accompany the bill, which I ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present on behalf of the conferees the conference report on the so-called zoning bill. I ask that the report may be printed in the RECORD and go over until Senators who are particularly interested in the matter can be present, all of them not being now in the Chamber. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who has very largely had charge of the matter, is necessarily absent to-day.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6863) to regulate the height, area, and use of buildings in the District of Columbia and to create a zoning commission, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"There is hereby authorized for the expenses of said commission, including the employment of expert services and all incidental and contingent expenses, a sum not to exceed $5,000, payable one half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

CARL E. MAPES,
B. K. FOCHT,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 12486. An act authorizing the several district courts of the United States to appoint official stenographers, and prescribing their duties and compensation; and

H. R. 10072. An act to provide for the punishment of officers of United States courts wrongfully converting moneys coming into their possession, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Wednesday, February 18, 1920.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to be heard now on the committee amendment, which seeks to appropriate $3,500,000 for the care and custody of the draft records. In the line of economy, there is no such thing as economy in a deficiency appropriation bill——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator's thought, of course, but this is not an appropriation. It is in the line of economy, because it provides to have certain work done with money already appropriated. It is simply a different division of it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no real useful purpose in transferring any part of this $3,500,000 appropriation, if the record is to be sealed to Members of the legislative body permitting the transfer of the fund. If it is to be open to all other officials and is to be denied to Members of Congress it is a mere travesty upon the furnishing of records.

I understand—I was out at the time, but probably could not have heard it if I had been in—that it was suggested that some one was trying to have access to the draft record of Edsel Ford. I know that this gentleman is a youth who has been much coddled and protected by Executive orders, by favoritism at the White House, by exemption from military service. That I was prepared for. I know of no reason, however, why that exemption should continue to be thrown around him, shielding him by the action of the Senate from publicity as well as those officials responsible for that remarkable affair.

I am not a resident of Michigan. Under the amendment I have no right myself, nor any of my associates in the House, nor my colleague in the Senate, to ask for the record. That right belongs only to the Senators from Michigan and to its several Representatives in the House. If they wish to read that record or have a copy thereof, there is no sufficient reason why it should not be produced. The Senate, however, has otherwise acted. Therefore I protest against this $3,500,000 transfer of an appropriation heretofore made so that it may be devoted to these particular purposes provided in the amendment proposed by the committee, as follows:

> So much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized Army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.

I assume that we are not embraced in the general expression "public officials," and therefore would not be considered by the department "entitled to receive it" in the event we made application.

There are more employees in the War Department now than are required, more than any economical private employment would permit to be upon the pay roll. There is no occasion for diverting this appropriation, on the merits of it, in the first place. Ordinarily I do not like to oppose a committee amendment, especially a committee of which the present occupant of the floor chances to be a member. I made no objection to this in the consideration of the deficiency bill either in the subcommittee or in the open committee. I did offer the amendment, and it was defeated in the committee, the same amendment which I offered a moment ago and which has been defeated in the Senate.

Because the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] saw fit to introduce, as I am informed, the name of the gentleman who has been much favored, whose sire was a distinguished pacifist and the commodore of a perambulating peace ark, who himself would neither fight, being beyond the age, nor permit his own son within the military age to fight, who has been given protection by Executive orders and by departmental secrecy, who crippled preparedness by his money and protest, he has opened that subject for discussion. The father was a candidate for the United States Senate in Michigan in November, 1918. He was defeated by about 7,000 votes on the face of the returns. The exemption of the only man of military age in his family was an issue in that campaign and was a vital factor in his defeat.

It is charged that $178,000 was spent in the campaign in Michigan by the Republican candidate. Probably the truth, when known upon a hearing of the evidence, will disclose that the money was spent by the Republican State central committee of the State of Michigan. It was a legitimate expenditure. I have as much right to pass upon that question here as has Judge Sessions, who is presiding in the trial on the indictment in which the same question is involved. It is within my jurisdiction as the trial of the indictment is within his. It is strictly my right here in this Chamber to comment on the action of the Department of Justice in thrusting itself into a contest lawfully pending in this Senate to hinder and embarrass, to prejudge and predetermine the hearings here by an abuse of the powers of the Attorney General of the United States. Such interference is solely a political act. It is a Senator's duty to comment on such a brazen partisan contempt of the Senate. The immunity given a Senator in this Chamber is coeval with and as exclusive as the judicial immunity extended to Judge Sessions. Congress is within its domain as sacred from assault as other departments.

The Democratic State central committee of the State of Michigan spent as much or more money in the same campaign for Henry Ford, the sire of this distinguished military slacker, the scion and $150,000-a-year official of the Ford Motor Co. It was spent on his behalf by the State central committee, and Henry Ford knew as much about it as the Senator from Michigan who has been indicted because it is alleged and must be proven that he had guilty knowledge of the excess above that authorized by law. Mr. Ford knew as much of the activities and expenses of the Democratic State committee as Mr. NEWBERRY. Why is Ford undisturbed? This administration indicts those who do not comply with its orders. Mr. Ford likewise indicts those who do not meekly obey his wishes.

If the amendment is intended to secure to the general public knowledge of Edsel Ford's exemption and his shameless dodging of his military service, then why ought it not to be had? It was an issue in the autumn of 1918 in the Michigan campaign. Mr. Ford was defeated upon that issue and not by the unlawful use of money.

I shall expect the Committee on Privileges and Elections, specific law or no law, amendment or no amendment, in the deficiency appropriation bill, to have produced before that committee, unless the War Department flatly refuses to do so, the exemption papers in the Edsel Ford draft case. It then remains for the Senate to yield as Congress generally does to every department that ignores and derides it. The only semblance of respect ever shown Congress is when the formality of explaining departmental estimates is indulged in.

If the Senator from Delaware desires accurate information on that question, I will give it to him. I went to Adjt. Gen. P. C. Harris, in the War Department, and asked to read the record of the Edsel Ford exemption, beginning in his district in Detroit, Mich., and reaching on through the appeal board to the Executive orders made by President Wilson exempting him. It was refused. He called up Secretary Baker to know what he should do about it. Gen. Harris first made some objection because the records were in a condition where they had not been classified and indexed and were not readily accessible.

I said I had the name and the number of the draft district in Detroit, "and you know where the records of the State of Michigan are stored; you know where, in the order in which they are placed, that particular number of the draft district may be found. It will not take to exceed an hour to locate it." I offered to pay all expenses. He called up Secretary Baker by telephone—I assume he did; he was talking with some one who answered from that office—who declined and said that the record was not accessible to me.

I am not the only one. The declination might, possibly, have been on the ground that I was not a resident of Michigan and had no business to examine a public record of that character; but others have applied, with like result, and they can tell their own story when they feel like it. I shall violate no confidence reposed in me; but other public officers and Members of Congress have received like cavalier treatment at the hands of this department. Why, therefore, should there be such intense anxiety on the part of the Senate further to shield this distinguished scion of the house of Ford, the Duke of Detroit, and the chevalier of the mushroom jitney works of the world? We are tender, indeed, of his sensibilities. No doubt his distinguished sire would vote as a majority of the Senate voted. Still we are expected to hold a majority on this side and shield such a wretched dodger from military service in the defense of his country. It is no surprise Ford was beaten in Michigan.

If there had not been 30 cents spent by NEWBERRY in Michigan, Ford would have been beaten on the record of his own family in the late war. The Senator from Delaware now defends and approves the mantle of secrecy thrown over this wealthy slacker.

That is not all that the Ford family has received at the hands of Congress or of the executive department. Not very long ago a river and harbor bill appeared in the Sixty-fifth Congress. It was approved by Executive action August 8, 1917. On page 9 of the river and harbor act mentioned is the following provision:

For improvement of Rouge River, Mich., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 2063 (64th Cong., 2d sess.), and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $490,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, substitute plan B for plan A.

Those are the plans referred to in the document of the number given, making choice between either of two methods. The $490,000 was for the purpose of deepening the river referred to. The matter is alluded to in a resolution introduced by the Senator now having the floor in the following language:

Whereas an appropriation has been heretofore made for the improvement of the River Rouge, Mich.; and
Whereas it now appears that this improvement is solely for the benefit of Henry Ford and the Ford Motor Co.; and
Whereas it appears that Henry Ford is attempting to use this appropriation contrary to the intention of Congress, and is using the name and sovereign rights of the United States of America and the powers of the Secretary of War for his own private benefit; and
Whereas there are certain reports, charges, and rumors tending to show the unlawful use of influence which should be fully investigated and their truth or falsity ascertained: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to inquire into and completely investigate the whole subject matter of the River Rouge improvement, including in particular the interests and influence of Henry Ford and his agents therein, and the use of the name of the United States of America and powers of the Secretary of War in condemnation proceedings therefor.

Resolved further, That pending this investigation and the report of the committee thereon, the Secretary of War and the Attorney General of the United States be hereby requested and called upon to suspend and withhold all acts and proceedings, whether in court or elsewhere, directed toward the widening of the River Rouge or the appropriation of property therefor.

Following the introduction of the resolution, I read in part the proceedings of a public mass meeting held at Oakwood, in the State of Michigan, along in January, 1920. I might explain that Oakwood is a suburb of Detroit. It is one of a number of small manufacturing or industrial centers that gather about every large manufacturing city.

A public mass meeting was held at the council chambers in the village of Oakwood Tuesday night, January 20, 1920, for the purpose of denouncing the resolution introduced in the United States Senate by Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, to discontinue work on dredging and widening the River Rouge.

I will refer to this resolution and its contents again later on. I merely now refer to it for the purpose of identifying it for future use. There are several other resolutions, among them resolutions of the city council of Detroit, which are of about the same tenor as the one of the village of Oakwood.

The sum of $490,000 is a mere fragment of the total cost of the deepening of the River Rouge. It was for the purpose of using the eminent domain powers of the United States Government that this appropriation was made as small, comparatively, as it is, falling little short of a million dollars.

The River Rouge is a small tributary of the Detroit River. It empties into the latter stream near the southerly limits of the city of Detroit. Usually, unless there is a remarkable freshet because of rains or sudden thawing of winter snows, it is a sluggish, dirty stream, flowing between low and ill-defined banks. At its mouth it is practically a mere cat-tail marsh. In the early times it used to be a rendezvous for ducks and a favorite ground of duck hunters. The river itself has been improved somewhat at times, but it is liable to recurrent shoals and caving-in during every spring freshet. About a half dozen small industrial plants have located on its banks. None of them is of great size except two, almost at the mouth of the river.

It is largely because of the supply of soft water in the river available for steam-making purposes that factories have located there at all.

There are at present probably half a dozen small docks along the river, used by boats of light draft, scows, sand suckers that bring up the sand from below for commercial purposes.

Along the river, with the possible exception of a glue factory, every human habitation or place of business is probably located within 3 miles of the mouth of the river, scattered along. The glue factory on the bank of the river, because of its obnoxious odors and its undesirability as an appurtenance in a dwelling-house section, has practically a monopoly of a large area there. There are no human habitations within the range of the average human olfactory nerve adjacent to the glue factory.

The district engineer's report on the project contains the following paragraph:

The existing depths and widths of channel are as follows: Mouth to 800-foot point 21-foot depth—

That is one-sixth of a mile of between 3½ and 4 miles of the whole river that is embraced in this appropriation and the subject matter of the resolution to which I have referred—and 240 to 100 feet width; 800-foot point to the Solvay Process Co.'s bridge, or the 1,800-foot point, 21 and 15 feet depth and 100 feet width; 1,800-foot point to the Wabash Railroad bridge, or the 15,700-foot point, 13½ feet depth and 100 feet width; and Wabash Railroad bridge to the Maples Road, or to the head of the improved portion of the river (23,200 feet from the mouth)—

A little over 4 miles—

12½ feet depth and 75 feet width.
3. Between Maples Road—

Which is a well-known point there—and the mouth of the Rouge (the portion intended to be improved)—

This item in the rivers and harbors bill affects—nine bridges built over the Rouge River, five of them railway bridges (or railway and highway bridges). Five railroads cross these bridges, including the Michigan Central, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Wabash, and Detroit, Toledo & Ironton, in addition to the interurban line from Detroit to Toledo. These railroads are the sole means of land transportation between Detroit and Toledo, through which point Detroit receives practically its entire supply of coal and oil and its iron and steel. Fully 65 per cent of all the freight transportation originating or terminating at Detroit passes over these railroads, and must pass over the River Rouge by means of these bridges. For the past five or ten years the all-important transportation problem in Detroit has been how to get more and quicker freight service over these railroads through what is known as the "Toledo gateway."

Mr. Ford appeared before the congressional committee through his attorney, Mr. Lucking, and had inserted in the river and harbor bill of 1917 an item which escaped public attention; no one knew of its ultimate purposes; and it is only recently that the ulterior motive concealed in the $490,000 appropriation has appeared. It is another case, Mr. President, of favortism and perversion and abuse of power for the benefit of Henry Ford.

When the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] suggested that the amendment offered to the deficiency bill was for the purpose of obtaining the draft record of Edsel Ford, he opened the gateway to an exposé of the abuses, the gross favoritism, and the prostitution of governmental power in the hands of the Ford family. I thank the Senator for so doing. He made it material in this discussion, even if the resolution of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], to amend standing Rule XXII of the Senate so as to confine discussion to the matter before the Senate and make it strictly pertinent to that matter, should be adopted. So long as this is alleged to be the purpose of my amendment, I shall assume that it is a proper subject to be discussed. I shall assume further that under the wording of my amendment I have no right to go to the department to search or demand a view of these records, because that privilege would be confined to Senators and Representatives from the State of Michigan. If they ask for the record, I know of no reason why they ought not to have it, unless it be because of sensitive souls and slacker sympathizers within this Chamber.

We on this side of the Chamber are either headed to lose one vote or we must stand together a great deal better than we have been doing. The Newberry contest here and his indictment by the attorney are political moves. Senator NEWBERRY has done no more than many others in this Chamber, including the horrified pharisees now beating their protuberant bosoms and loudly advertising their superior brand of sanctity. They are undisturbed. Some of them hold their seats by virtue of unceasing activities of Federal officeholders and war contracts to contributing constituents, all paid out of public taxes.

I somewhat resent the superior virtue implied by voting on all matters with the minority. I can do some of that myself; I have already done so a time or two as a timely warning, and I will do a good deal more of it before my term expires unless there is a change of behavior on this side of the Chamber. I have dwelt within party lines since 1880—40 years last November—and I think I can not fairly be accused of being too liberal in matters of partisan conduct; but if the Senator now on trial in this body before the Committee on Privileges and Elections shall be unseated, one more vote will turn the majority in this Chamber to the other side of the aisle, and I have that one vote. Unless Mr. NEWBERRY is saved in this political assault, the vote in this Chamber will be for awhile, until the governor of Michigan shall act, a tie, in the event a single Republican votes with the minority. This mock heroic virtue must cease, Mr. President. I serve timely notice upon Senators on this side of the Chamber that they must be Republican on this thinly veiled political attack on Senator NEWBERRY or there will be divers Senators here who will refuse to do anything.

[At this point Mr. SHERMAN yielded the floor for the day.]

Thursday, February 19, 1920.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I resume where I concluded on yesterday evening on the Rouge River matter. I do so because it is directly connected with the amendment which was offered by myself on the floor and defeated, and is material to the amendment on pages 16 and 17 of the pending bill, covering the preparation of draft records. There has been a degree of solicitude as well as perversion of government in behalf of the members of the Ford family, which I think has risen to the point where it demands some public consideration in this Chamber, and accordingly I give it.

On the subject particularly of the Rouge River and making it material to the amendment, I now continue to describe the environments of this proposed improvement. There never has been any demand for the improvement from anybody except persons who are locally interested. It had its origin entirely in Mr. Ford and his representatives appearing before the congressional committees. There has been some demand for dredging the river and removing shoals in order to deepen it slightly in some places. The few small industries along the river have carried on their business satisfactorily, as a large number of them merely use it, as indicated yesterday evening, for the purpose of obtaining water for steam purposes.

The demand for the River Rouge improvement, involving the widening of the river to 300 feet and its deepening to 21 feet for a distance of about 4⅔ miles from its mouth came from one person. In the winter of 1914–15, and especially the spring of 1915, Henry Ford's representative quietly and secretly took options on approximately 1,000 acres of farm land adjoining or near the River Rouge and 4 miles or more from its mouth where it empties into the Detroit River. Henry Ford made the following announcement in a special 10 p. m. extra of the Detroit Journal of June 16, 1915. I now quote from this self-serving publicity report:

> The new Ford plant on the Rouge River to give work to 20,000 men.
> Blast furnaces and farm tractor shop on 1,000-acre tract. * * * Already Mr. Ford has options on about 1,000 acres of land north of the village of Oakwood and southeast of the village of Dearborn. The tract lies on both sides of the River Rouge, it is said.

In the issue of the Detroit Journal of June 18, 1915, he further elaborated on the former press report as follows:

> Henry Ford announced to the Detroit Journal Friday that it is his desire to have the new Ford blast furnaces and factories on the River Rouge in operation in two or three years. To accomplish this he intends to have work started this summer on the great tract of 1,800 acres just acquired northwest of Oakwood and southeast of Dearborn.
> "The blast furnaces," Mr. Ford said, "will have ore delivered to them at their docks on the River Rouge by boats from the Upper Peninsula. The iron produced by the furnaces will be converted into motors at the factories near by. The motors will be sent to the various Ford assembling plants in all parts of the world and used in Ford automobiles and Ford farm tractors. We expect, in time, to ship the motors direct by boat from our dock on the Rouge to all parts of the world," said Mr. Ford. "This means using the Welland Canal for boats to reach the Atlantic Ocean. It means making Detroit a port of clearance for all portions of the globe."

Henry's imagination is in nearly as good working order as when he played the angel to Rosa Schwimer and started to end the war before Christmas.

I might parenthetically remark here that I regard the Ford automobile as a national and international pest. It destroys more useful material in metal, in brass, in engine equipment, in tires, and rubber supplies than any other single sink hole in the world.

The cheapening of the motor to the general public has been a detriment equal at least to the benefit derived. There is no salvage value on a $400 or $500 machine; after a few years it is a total loss, and, outside of the comparatively few that are used legitimately for transportation and errand purposes, the remainder constitute a mere consumption of gasoline and mechanical contrivances for running about and joy riding, involving a waste of time and material.

This project was to be accomplished as indicated in the news reports to which I have referred.

How it was to be accomplished, however, that the big ore vessels and ocean-going freighters could dock in a portion of the stream 75 feet wide, with a 12½-foot depth of channel, Mr. Ford continues to explain in the same article:

> The widening of the Rouge River should be done, I believe, by the Government. The Rouge will have to be widened and deepened and a basin built for the vessels to turn in.

All of the land acquired by Mr. Ford, as I have already said, is located more than 4 miles from the mouth of the Rouge River. The plant is being constructed practically at the Maples Road, as it is called, at the head of the proposed improvement and 4.4 miles from the mouth of the river.

Just what Mr. Ford paid for this land it is impossible to state with accuracy. It is as impossible to find what Mr. Ford's option on the 2,000 acres of farm land cost as it is to extract from the War Department accurate information on the draft dodging of his notorious son, Edsel. Both of them are buried in the profound recesses of Ford the father's knowledge.

That portion of the property secured before the public announcement in the press reports, from credible figures furnished me upon application, did not at least cost more than $1,000 an acre. That would be the maximum price, and very probably it is closer to the truth to say that half that amount was the average price paid; in fact, in the Wayne County circuit court, in Michigan, the court refused to permit the sale of a minor child's land at the price agreed upon with Henry Ford upon the ground that the price paid was entirely inadequate. This was the only place where any of the options secured by Henry Ford have come to the surface, namely, in the appeal by a guardian to a court of competent jurisdiction to sell the land at the price agreed upon by Mr. Ford and the guardian or next friend. Before the option was allowed to be executed the court doubled the price offered, and even then the price fell short of $1,000 an acre. Ford is a lovely philanthropist when dealing with infants.

The result of all this was that in the Sixty-fourth Congress, in the rivers and harbors bill, passed on or about July 27, 1916, among the funds appropriated was one item for the examination and survey of the Rouge River. That item is found in Public Document No. 168, Sixty-fourth Congress, on page 21.

House Document No. 2063, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, contains the survey, the indorsements, and recommendations. The following information is all taken from it. The preliminary survey was made by Maj. Burgess, the district engineer. I shall quote from his report such parts as I think are material:

> The present investigation has been conducted by the district engineer officer and Mr. Ramlet Kent, junior engineer. A public hearing was held by the district officer at the building of the board of commerce in Detroit on November 16, 1916, after due advertisement, for the purpose of obtaining the views of riparian owners and others interested in the improvement of the Rouge River. Stenographic record was made for this meeting, a copy of which is attached to this report. Letters of inquiry were addressed to all riparian owners and to all others who were thought to be interested in the question of greater depths and widths of channel than now exist. A copy of the letter of inquiry and copies of the more important replies are attached to this report.

The engineer continues:

> The result of the inquiries has been to develop the fact that the demand for further improvement of the Rouge River is due primarily to the location of a large industrial plant by the Ford Motor Co. near the head of the present improved portion of the river. The construction of this plant has already been started and when completed will occupy a frontage on the Rouge of about 3,000 feet immediately below Maples Road, and will give employment to about 15,000 people. There will be two blast furnaces, requiring for full operation a supply of iron ore at the rate of about 6,000 tons per day during the navigation season, and having an output of about 1,000 tons of metal per day. It is contemplated to provide two more furnaces whenever they become necessary.

On page 12 of the report the engineer says:

> It is believed that the improvement should not be undertaken until local interests have donated the necessary land and have assumed the burden of ascertaining and settling all claims for damages, both direct and indirect, to be caused by the improvement.

Again, on page 14, it is stated:

> As previously stated, an improvement sufficient for the demands of commerce would practically convert the river into an artificial slip, following the general alignment of the natural river bed. My conclusion is that the general and the private benefits are so intermingled that the cost of the improvement ought to be divided between the United States and the locality and that the proper basis for dividing the cost will be for the United States to undertake the actual work of the improvement and for the local interests to donate the necessary land and to assume the burden of ascertaining and settling claims for damages as well as the cost for making alterations in bridges when these can not be required to be made at the expense of the owners.

Again, on page 15, it is stated:

> I do not believe there is much doubt that the project should not be considered one worthy of being undertaken by the General Government if the entire cost of the work is to be borne by the United States; but, with the assumed distribution of cost as mentioned above, there seems to be sufficient reason for considering the improvement to be worthy to the extent of authorizing the preparation of an estimate of cost.

Which was done accordingly.

The preliminary examination was sent through military channels to the division engineer at Buffalo, Col. J. G. Warren, who made the following indorsement:

> The work of improvement of the Rouge River, Mich., under the present project stated in paragraph 8 of the district engineer's report, and maintenance work to secure its present condition, stated in paragraph 9, shows that they have been up to the present time principally in the interest of industries located, with one exception, * * * below the Wabash Railroad bridge, 15,700 feet from the river month; and it is understood that the commercial statistics given in paragraph 23 pertain to that part of the river; the remaining 7,500 feet of the channel, improved to 13-foot depth, being used only to a very limited extent. * * *

Widening, straightening, and deepening of the river as desired by local interests would, as stated in paragraph 27 of the district officer's report, practically convert the river into an artificial slip, and obviously would be, as shown on the map, primarily in the interests of the Ford Motor Co.

Here is an appropriation of $490,000 made in the river and harbor bill. After Henry Ford has secured the options on 2,000 acres of farm land, this comparatively small appropriation for an item such as often haunts river and harbor bills is desired solely to carry with it the power of eminent domain. If Mr. Ford desired to improve at his own expense the frontage where he is building his factory for the purpose of promoting it, it probably would cost him more. He therefore, through Mr. Lucking, his attorney, appears in Washington at the last moment, goes before the committee, and has introduced into the river and harbor bill this item for $490,000. He thereby borrows the power of the Government to enhance his private fortune. The benefits will be reflected in due time in the dividends of the Ford family.

Primarily, it is desired for the purpose of carrying with it the power of eminent domain, to be used by Henry Ford, his attorneys, and agents in condemning land to enhance the value of the 2,000 acres on which he held his low-priced option. It is an unhallowed and iniquitous partnership of the Government with private interests. It is an expenditure of nearly a half million dollars for the purpose of improving land, private in character, for Ford's benefit.

Mr. Ford is not necessarily an object of public charity. He probably would resent the imputation. However, he is as frugal as when he first founded the Ford Motor Co. of $150,000 capital. It now runs into some millions. His dividends range all the way from 25 to 200 per cent. If an industry that is under the surveillance of the Government, or has become a target for the attacks of the Federal Trade Commission, earned one-tenth or one-twentieth of the profits Mr. Ford earns, it would be assailed as a most iniquitous trust and monopoly. Mr. Ford, however, is a professional philanthropist. He it is, all the time, who is relieving suffering humanity and at the same time profiting Mr. Ford. He needs, therefore, a half million from the Government. He needs, coupled with it, the right of eminent domain, to be exercised by the officers of the Government and by the War Department jointly, in order further to enhance the fortunes of the Ford family. The Government is at best but a philanthropic institution for Mr. Ford. It is engaged continually in promoting Ford, either financially or politically.

The indictments now under trial in Michigan, with 123 defendants, including a Member of this body, are a further instance of the philanthropic activities of the Government for the benefit of Mr. Ford.

Mr. Ford is one of those gentlemen who instantaneously know everything from birth. No historical knowledge is valued by him. No mechanical problem staggers him. No financial problem is of any consequence. Experience is useless and to him unnecessary. He knows how to do everything except improve his own land at his own expense. He only requires assistance when he approaches the Government to borrow its powers in order to oppress his neighbors and condemn their property for his own use.

Mr. Ford treats everything with the lightest unconcern. With a mere wave of his hand he dismisses problems that have staggered civil engineers for a generation. He dwarfs Edison's inventions. He knows more of mechanical forces, of electricity, of the mechanical problems involved in reducing the crude iron ore to forms of finished iron and steel, than all of the great ironmasters of the world. He proposes to relieve the human family entirely from hard labor. The curse invoked by the sin of our original parents in the Garden is to be nullified by Mr. Ford and his mechanical contrivances.

Among other things, he has secured these options; and, as suggested, the only place where there is an inkling of the price of the option is where he approached a court in Wayne County, Mich., to obtain the consent of the court, applying for the owner of the property, through the guardian or next friend, to execute the option. It was a tract of land where it would be inconvenient to have it cut out and a nick made in the general body of the 2,000 acres. In that situation the court heard the evidence and, acting for the minor child, compelled Mr. Ford to double the price in the original option presented to the court, and then it fell short of a thousand dollars per acre.

So the philanthropy is one that does not manifest itself in dealing with minors or infant children in Wayne County, Mich. The helpless never do appeal to Mr. Ford. His brutality of financial power and the might of his great industrial organization make it the moloch of the industrial world.

To-day the whole State of Michigan is swarming with Mr. Ford's secret agents. There is hardy a reputable detective agency having an office in the city of Chicago that has not been approached by Mr. Ford's agents and its services sought to be hired to hold under inspection the trial of the Government under these indictments now on hearing in Michigan. The power of the Government ordinarily is supposed to be sufficient. Its prosecuting officers, beginning with the Department of Justice in this city, the district attorney, Mr. Dailey, detailed from Indiana for such prosecutions, special counsel from the Department of Justice, the Attorney General's office, are all grouped at the trial table, and in addition to that there is a constant surveillance by literally hundreds of the paid agents of Mr. Ford surrounding every nook and corner many hundreds of miles from the scene of the trial. Mr. Ford will spend a million dollars, and still he will be the great, sanctified, eternal, holy, suwed-off joss, a pattern of every known image of counterfeit civic virtue heard of by all the blatant professional uplifters of a great country. He reminds me much of the idol in an oriental temple. He sits mute, inactive, mysterious, unapproachable, and omniscient. He does nothing, apparently, in front of his immobile face, but underneath he is using all of his vast mysterious powers borrowed from the Government to crush those who have the temerity to differ from him.

This appropriation in the river and harbor bill was secured for no other purpose than to utilize for him the power to condemn land, save him money, and to compel the taking of their property from all the riparian proprietors who stood in the way of the improvement of his private property.

To such base ends are we come that the Federal Government is merely an appendage and a contributing partner of Mr. Ford in his various successful enterprises.

Ordinarily, about this Capitol success is regarded as a badge of rascality. It is only when such distinguished uplifters as Mr. Ford have succeeded that it becomes an emblem of sublimated virtue. If any of the rest of us had made as much money in as short a time as he has we would be looked upon with suspicion and been indicted long ago on the general principles of this administration; that alone would be enough to make us prove our innocence.

To continue, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors made some recommendations. They are always recommending something. If there is anything in an iniquitous form that has not been recommended by some board of river and harbor engineers, I have failed to discover it. If anyone will evolve anything new that has not been heretofore found in a river and harbor bill, if he will present it to some river engineer I am sure it will be adopted, and a vote of thanks will probably be tendered to the great benefactor who evolved it.

This Board of Engineers say:

For reasons stated, the board recommends a survey in order to determine the extent and advisability of the improvement along the lines suggested by the district officer and the amount and character of cooperation that may be secured in the cost of construction, as well as in the features recommended in the report.

A survey was then made by the district engineer, Col. Burgess. There are a good many of these in whom the military titles are merely brevet. It does not imply that they have fought their country's enemies. It does imply that they may have been various commissioned officers on a tugboat plying up and down the Mississippi River, pulling snags, sawyers, stumps, and removing various forms of sediment from the channel.

Of course that is a highly hazardous employment, and it warrants the conferring of military titles, because often a tugboat is sent to the bottom. It may snag itself oftener than a steamboat plying on a river, whose defense is the object of the tugboat. The risks are great. They all ought to carry policies in the War Risk Bureau for being engaged in a highly hazardous employment that might not be able to be covered by ordinary life insurance. But the colonels and the majors and once in a while a brevet general come along, and, of course, every time there is a report made, the first thing that appears in the report is the officer's title. It carries conviction. It sanctifies every mudhole, and it elevates to the dignity of a great public improvement every catfish rendezvous in the whole Mississippi Valley; and so we are prepared to read that the district engineer presented two plans. That shows a most remarkable degree of self-control—one that only presented two plans. Heavens! Some of them present 15. They are like Warren Hastings, who, when he robbed British India and was arraigned in Parliament, and was called on for his defense, said, "The only defense I have left to make is that I marvel at my own moderation. I might have stolen millions." He might have made, instead of two plans, a dozen plans, and our wits would go wool-gathering accordingly.

One is Plan A, providing for the widening, deepening, and improvement of the River Rouge from the Maples Road by way of a privately owned short-cut canal, a copy of which is in one of the published hearings. This short-cut canal extends to the Detroit River. It takes an elbow or bend out of the river, and saves time and distance. Plan B provided for an improvement starting at the same place and of the same character, which, however, followed the course of the river to its mouth. Plan A had a twofold advantage. First, the distance would be over a mile shorter. Second, it would avoid some very difficult turns in the lower part of the Rouge River. The only difference between the two was that one used the short-cut canal, and the other followed the line of the Rouge. He recommended, however, Plan A on page 18 of his report. He estimated the cost of dredging to be as follows:

Plan A, $490,000.

Plan B, $545,000.

The $490,000 estimate is the genesis of the item in the river and harbor bill to which I have referred, found stowed snugly and innocently away among a number of other items on page 9 of the act of August 8, 1917. It is sandwiched in, unostentatiously after its kind the very last one in the paragraph. A number of others are provided for, but they stand merely as a convenient blind for the real object of the paragraph. It provides, too, very thoughtfully, in view of this report, that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, substitute plan B for plan A.

After quoting from paragraph 8, which I will insert in my remarks without reading here, as I do not care to take the time, I read that the engineer's view appeared as follows:

I may add that the improvement seems almost essential for the economic operation of the furnaces to be erected by the Ford Motor Company.

The italics are mine in all quotations.

The division engineer, in his indorsement disapproving of the improvement by the United States, stated as follows:

As stated in my indorsement on the preliminary examination report, widening, straightening, and deepening of Rouge River, as desired by local interests and planned and estimated for in the district officer's survey report, would practically convert the river into an artificial slip, and obviously would be, as shown on the map, primarily in the interests of one company.

This company is wholly the private property of one person. It provides a cheaper way of opening up water communication with the Detroit River for Mr. Ford, giving access to the 2,000 acres of land on which he held an option before this appropriation and its vast powers were placed at his disposal.

Pursuant to these powers that are provided by public legislation very kindly for essentially private purposes, three suits have been instituted by the United States in the district court for the eastern district of Michigan, the southern division. These are the usual petitions for condemnation of land, and cover all of the riparian ownership on the Rouge River essential to improvement from its mouth up to and including all the frontage of the Ford property.

The original act provided that before any condemnation proceedings should be instituted an effort should be made to purchase the land from the private owners. It is found in section 9, on page 19, of the act already referred to of August 8, 1917, as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever any State, or any reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State, shall undertake to secure any land or easement therein, needed in connection with a work of river and harbor improvement duly authorized by Congress, for the purpose of conveying the same to the United States free of cost, and shall be unable for any reason to obtain the same by purchase and acquire a valid title thereto, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States for the acquirement by condemnation of said land or easement, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to institute and conduct such proceedings upon the request of the Secretary of War: Provided, That all expenses of said proceedings and any award that may be made thereunder shall be paid by such State, or reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency as aforesaid, to secure which payment the Secretary of War may require such State, or reclamation, flood control or drainage district, or other public agency as aforesaid, to execute a proper bond in such amount as he may deem necessary before said proceedings are commenced.

None of the intervening agencies were employed. Therefore, these suits invoke the power of the Government for purposes of condemnation. There was no effort made, with but a single exception that I now recall, to purchase from the private owners for instituting these suits.

It further provides in section 9 that—

Before suit shall be instituted bonds shall be given to indemnify the Government in such amount as may be deemed necessary before the proceedings are commenced.

No such bond was given. It has only been given as an afterthought. When the question was raised of the right of the Government to maintain the petition to condemn, Mr. Ford caused to be executed a bond to save the Government from the expense additional to the $490,000 made necessary by the condemnation of the land. Just where the bond is I do not know. The last-known whereabouts of the bond was in the hands of Mr. Ford's attorney.

That leads me to remark that of the attorney's appearing of record in the first one I quoted, in the matter of the petition of the United States of America for the taking and condemnation of private property for the benefit of the public, No. 6213, in the district court of the United States already referred to, appears the following on the petition:

A. Mitchell Palmer, Attorney General of the United States.

Samuel J. Graham, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Howell van Auken, 1502 Ford Building, Detroit, Mich., special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, attorneys for petitioner.

Alfred J. Murphy, Detroit, Mich., counsel for petitioner.

In another petition to condemn covering the same subject matter but other tracts appears on the petition "Thomas W. Gregory, Attorney General of the United States." That was before his resignation. Also "Samuel J. Graham, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, Washington, D. C. Howell van Auken, special assistant," the same address heretofore given.

The third from which I read has the same attorneys, including Mr. Alfred J. Murphy as counsel for the petitioner. Mr. van Auken is an attorney retained and paid by Mr. Ford. Alfred J. Murphy is the paid employed counsel, year after year, of Mr. Ford. The firm of attorneys has an office in a well-known locality in the city of Detroit. All the members of this firm are representing Mr. Ford's interests, both public and private. Some of them are special United States attorneys appointed by the Department of Justice to prosecute this petition.

I might go outside of matters strictly connected with this Rouge River improvement and state that Mr. Ford's attorneys retained by him privately are, in connection with his other activities, now engaged in moving heaven and earth assisting the Government in the prosecution of those indictments. The case itself is managed, advised, and the principal motions are made through the advice of Mr. Ford's private counsel. If they do not appear in person, their mouthpiece is visible in the flesh at the trial table, and through him or them they make their conduct and their wishes known.

So, it not only reaches to the perversion of the power of the Government to condemn property for Mr. Ford's private benefit but it extends to the extent of Mr. Ford's private hired lawyers assisting in the prosecution of a criminal case in the name of public justice. A more infamous prostitution of the powers of Government to serve private ends has not been known.

Of all the preverts of the age, of all the moral morons of those who have appeared as the beneficiaries of superfluous and putrescent wealth, Mr. Ford is a type as void of a sense of right and wrong as a beast in the jungle. Anything that opposes him is wrong. He possesses worldly infallibility, and, coupled with his enormous financial strength, he proposes to enforce that infallibility. He proposes to crush and destroy all who raise their voice against him.

Personally, I somewhat regret that he did not get his seat without the formality of a contest. It would do Mr. Ford good to sit in this body, be the season ever so brief. A greater refrigerator for his world-embracing, effervescent brain could not be invented by mortal wit. If he were seized with a divine afflatus of speech making, there is nothing to reduce the enlargement of the cerebral cavity like speaking to empty benches. It would effect even in a colossal egomaniac of his description possibly a permanent cure.

Then the Chief of Engineers again appears with a report. He says:

The Ford Motor Co. is now erecting a large plant just below this road which will give employment to about 15,000 persons—

And recommends that it be done. Plan A was finally adopted by those in favor of the improvement. They asked that the Secretary of War be given discretion to use Plan B if the right to use the short-cut canal could be obtained. Evidently it was not then proposed to obtain the right to go through the short-cut canal by eminent-domain proceedings. That was to be used only to take from the riparian owners through the agency of the Government the private rights they had. In spite of this, however, Henry Ford through the Secretary of War has caused these condemnation proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States purporting to pass upon and condemn lands along the short-cut canal.

The attorneys of record I have read. The firm of which Mr. van Auken is a member is Lucking, Murphy, Helfman, Lucking & Hanlon, who have at all times and places in recent years been Mr. Ford's attorneys, both in public and private subjects.

Alfred J. Murphy originally appeared as of counsel for the petitioner of record. On objection that he was simply a Ford attorney, too, he had himself appointed as special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States. There is no doubt that his compensation comes from Henry Ford. Mr. Murphy is not usually found performing legal services from purely charitable motives. It is only when fees commensurate with those to which he is accustomed are forthcoming that Mr. Murphy's activities are aroused. No mere paltry stipend that the Government could pay out of the Attorney General's office and tolerated by public opinion would have been satisfactory to Mr. Murphy's instinct for liberal fees. It is only private business successful as Mr. Ford's is that is able to pay to Mr. Murphy enough to enlist his services. It only adds to the general sordid complexion of the whole mercenary undertaking that private attorneys are employed and pose as assistants of the Attorney General of the United States, while private interests are to be served, private profit to be promoted, the power of the Government used, its sovereign power of eminent domain to be perverted to Henry Ford's purposes, and $490,000 gone out of the Treasury purely for the purpose of improving Mr. Ford's property. If others incidentally have some of the drippings from the altar of Mr. Ford's industrial sanctuary it will be merely incidental, not intended, but unavoidable.

There was a further condition that no funds should be expended until local interests were given satisfactory guaranties of their assumption of the cost of right of way, alteration for bridges, and incidental charges.

The three condemnation suits that I have referred to, to condemn the land and property in question, have been started in the district court in pursuance of this power. They were started, however, in June, 1919, but there was no bond or guaranty provided until October, 1919, and then it was executed through the Secretary of War in order to commence the proceedings, or, rather, to sustain them.

He was required to make a large number of certificates and there were a number of requests to appoint special assistants. Henry Ford made no effort to buy the land. There are several affidavits on file to this effect in the district court where the suits are pending. No offer to purchase was made, and no negotiations leading to that end were entered into by Henry Ford, by his assistants, or by anyone else representing Mr. Ford or the Government or any agency interested in the petition to condemn. The special attorneys, or Ford's assistants, which would be a more accurate description probably, claim that they proved ex parte to the Secretary of War that they tried to purchase land, and that the determination of the Secretary of War that they were unable to purchase it is conclusive, so that the landowners may not now go back of this determination to show that no efforts to purchase were actually made.

The special assistants, or Ford's attorneys, state that they made a certain bone fide offer, and this is the only one that they have been able to prove up to this time, so far as any evidence I have been able to ascertain shows, to purchase the Michigan Carbon Works, a considerable strip of land several hundred feet in length, on which is a water filter, which it would cost a considerable amount of money to change. This bona fide offer made by Henry Ford was the munificent sum of $1. If he had been selling it, there would have been a difference. There is a great difference between the buying price of Mr. Ford and the selling price. He thinks $178,000 spent in a Michigan election is evidence of the grossest and most abandoned corruption. That would scarcely be thought by Mr. Ford worthy of comment if it had not been spent against his sacred person.

How much the State Democratic central committee spent deponent saith not up to this time. It is hoped that it will have a sufficient investigation in the interest of public curiosity if not of justice.

It was the regular organization in each case, one pitted against the other. One hundred and seventy-eight thousand dollars in an election in a State the size of Michigan does not of itself imply any corruption. If I have read the press reports, such frugal reports as have appeared of the witnesses' testimony, there are more of the witnesses testifying for the Government who ought to be indicted than the defendants in the case. It has an entirely familiar look. All of us who have been candidates, and especially in the larger States, can sympathize with the witness who was offered $50 a week for his political services. He rejected it with loathing and scorn. He said unless $1,000 en bloc was offered him he would go back to his billiard hall and attend to his business. It sounds familiar. I would almost think that that was across the line in Illinois. Chicago is full of gentlemen whose time can not be taken from billiard halls for any such paltry sums as $50 a week. All the gentlemen who have constant visits to make to headquarters of all political parties asking for remuneration are unknown to Mr. Ford. He can have Mr. Lucking come to Washington and secure nearly half a million dollars for the improvement of his private property. He knows about that. But an organization representing the party from which he received his nomination and on whose ticket he was running can not spend a dollar and he have any knowledge of it.

He has no more idea of politics than he has of morality as applied to public affairs. Whenever money is expended by a Republican State committee against him it is the subject matter for indictment. It is an effort by this administration to terrorize and reduce to servitude and instant obedience everybody to whom orders are issued. It is similar to the effort made by the prostitution of the war powers in the hands of the administration to jail everybody who criticizes the conduct of the administration, if it is done outside of Congress. Men have been arrested by deputy marshals and secret-service agents, incarcerated in jail, and put under heavy bail for reasons that no American citizen ought for a moment to justify or attempt to justify, much less a public officer.

For instance, an employee in a Chicago department store, who had been in service overseas, who had served in the trenches under fire, had returned and casually remarked one day, when somebody brought the subject up, that he did not think very much of the behavior of the Red Cross in the sector where he was employed. He said their agents, as it appeared to him, were a parcel of grafters. The specific complaint was that cigarettes and other supplies given to the Red Cross by charitable people in this country were by the Red Cross sold to the soldier when he wanted them, and the money was taken by the Red Cross and used for other purposes. Practically it is admitted by Red Cross authorities that that was done in similar instances.

A pair of socks was bought by a soldier at a station of this organization. He opened them and found inside—unknown probably by anybody who had handled them after they left the original owner or maker—that they were donated by so-and-so, giving the name and address, which I shall forbear to give. The soldier bought them at the station at the regular price; he paid out of his small earnings of $30 a month the price for a good pair of socks. Such instances were the basis of the soldier's criticism of the Red Cross. Some sleuth heard it, arrested him under the espionage act, and took him to jail. He was out under bail the last heard from him. Some of his friends of small means pooled their resources and furnished the bond so that he could get out of jail and go back to work. He had been put in jail for criticizing the Red Cross concerning matters for which they can be convicted any day in the year before a committee of the Senate. They are, however, to be exempt from criticism.

I have lying in my office a statement from a reputable gentleman in Athens, Greece. He was stationed there or made recurrent trips to Athens, covering the territory in the line of his business. His report is not flattering to certain features of the Red Cross.

I do not offer it to discredit this organization but to suggest either a voluntary improvement of their methods or, failing, that legislation be resorted to to protect a charity-contributing public.

A certain sum of money, aggregating about $2,000,000 in nine months, was allotted for the Red Cross service in Greece. He says it is admitted by the employees paid out of this fund that when they wrote three letters a day they thought they had had a real hard day's work. One letter or answering a telegram often completed the day. The large part of their time was spent in automobile trips to various points of classical antiquity. They read Grecian history of the earlier days, and every point of interest that was presented by the author they visited. They lived well. There was no famine in that part of Europe at that time. Their supplies on the table and their lodging accommodations were of the best at high-priced hotels. They went so far as to undertake to teach the Greeks how to raise the products of that country, to restore the soil, and to double the crops, as they insisted, if their directions were followed. A mailing list of 150,000 names was used.

A gentleman whose name will come up here for confirmation before long lifts the curtain of the Red Cross a little—Dr. Van Schaick, jr. He was for two years in the Red Cross service. He refers to a particular time on election day—he remembers that occasion—and says he was then engaged in guiding a number of American visitors to various points of interest and showing them around in the area where battles had raged. In other words, he was a guide; a mere conductor of what, in common parlance, we in Washington would call a "rubberneck wagon." He was paid out of the donations to the Red Cross fund that every charitably inclined person in the country has contributed to for some years—a guide to sate the curiosity of visiting Americans, whether in Congress or otherwise does not appear.

I am prepared to accept the outside statement, until I have better proof, that out of every dollar donated in this country for Red Cross purposes 40 per cent is absorbed in salaries and traveling and other expenses of those who direct the application of the other 60 per cent.

The Red Cross is a great organization; it has done a world of good, and it will continue to do so. But, like other unregulated activities of that kind, with vast sums of money under their control, it needs inspection. There ought to be somebody to exercise the powers of visitation on the authorities in control of this charity, to see where the money goes and how it is expended. Of course, anyone who raises his voice in criticism of any act of the Red Cross is likely to be misunderstood and charged with having disavowed the faith, and be relegated to the outer limbo of eternal darkness by certain uplifters who are drawing their support from the Red Cross pay roll. Others having the good of this great charity at heart will commend my efforts.

For instance, in last Sunday's New York Sun and Herald there appeared a review of a book written by a gentleman who thinks he ought to be in the limelight all the time. His book rose to the dignity of being reviewed in the paper referred to. On the page where the review of the book is printed is the figure of the author. To all appearances the cut shows a man of the physical proportions of a Goliath. He is wearing, apparently, the uniform of the United States, for it is difficult sometimes in the haze to distinguish that uniform from the Red Cross uniform. He stands valiantly for the reading public to observe. His chest expansion would indicate a military training, he has a bosom like an ancient West Pointer; everywhere is the look and port of military genius. Held off at a distance it bears a strong resemblance to the sturdy figure of Hindenburg before his late collapse; but when I draw near and look and read, I find it is the gentleman who in private life under the shadow of our homes is known as Raymond Robins, late private self-appointed ambassador to Trotski and Lenin, representing the Red Cross charities, and in that country engaged in giving relief to the suffering proletariat.

He has written a book about it, and the Lord knows it was only due to remarkable self-restraint that he did not write it sooner. Charles Edward Russell, who went to Russia upon some commission for the purpose of investigating Russia before the tragic exit of the Czar, did not wait until he touched the marginal waters of his native land until he was emitting words at the rate of 10,000 per hour; a perfect Niagara of language poured from him, and he is continuing the cataract without ceasing. The public is disposed to let him go; he is perfectly harmless so long as he is in active eruption. It is only when confined that the "pent up Utica" explodes and great elemental disturbances occur.

Both these gentlemen are distinguished Red Cross pay rollers. The art of the photographer has many sins to answer for, and this is one of them. I never saw Raymond Robins at any time when he was such an awe-inspiring looking personage; in fact, he is quite inoffensive, and when close to him I would regard him as undersized; I would speak of him, if I were outside of this Chamber, as a physical runt. But thus it is that art can supply what nature denies.

He is a great uplifter, and so long as he is paid a salary to relieve suffering humanity he, like Mr. Ford, will go right merrily along. Mr. Ford's method of relieving suffering humanity is entirely different from that of my beloved friend Robins. Probably in his philanthropic efforts Ford has caused more suffering to humanity, intended to be relieved, by the interminable jolting of his light-weight machines than he has ever caused pleasure in the use of them. My dear friend Robins belongs to the same tribe of uplifters as Henry Ford and Charles Edward Russell, with George Creel, John B. Densmore, and Frederick C. Howe.

Time admonishes me not to call the roll further, because they are typical of all of them; they are all of a kind, and so long as they can attach themselves to the Government pay roll or to the pay roll of anybody else humanity is bound to be relieved. So the Red Cross gets them; that is to be expected; they are cheerful volunteers; but I respectfully suggest to the Red Cross and those having authority, the executive heads thereof, that some day the great contributing public will rise up and ask that they purge their expense items and give a better account of the money they are allowed to collect from that public.

The difficulty with the Red Cross is that it has on its pay roll emissaries of socialistic propaganda all over this country. Willingly or unwillingly, it is lending the charities of the country to promote vicious doctrines either in the ballot box or the more open violation by revolutionary force aimed at the traditions of our country. The Red Cross is too often found in bad company. It is not to be condemned for that reason, but it is to be purified and purged of the undesirable elements which have attached themselves to it.

The like statement can be made concerning the universities. If I had any money to give to a university, I would give with express conditions that such doctrines as those to which I have referred should not be taught within the walls of the institution. That is the cause of one half of the trouble in this country; the other half may be charged to ignorant aliens let in by a loose administration of immigration laws or by none at all in the earlier days. It takes the average university man 10 years to unlearn the utter economic imbecility that is crowded into the four or five years of university training. It is usually that long a time before he learns there is a difference between the air castles of the university professor and the actual affairs of human beings dealing with each other in this transitory and mortal life. A university training is no advantage to a person unless he has good horse sense to begin with.

Col. Ingersoll was approximately right when he said that universities were places where "pebbles were polished and diamonds were dimmed." It does not hurt if the character, the mentality, and the fiber of the man are right; but if it is soft metal when it goes in, it will be untempered metal when it comes out; there is nothing short of a miracle from the Author of our Being on high that will change it.

It is such as those who are attempting to manage the affairs of this country, to subvert constitutional government, to deride law, to make a new rule of economics, to escape the inevitable laws that have attended us and our ancestors for a thousand years. They war with immutable conditions and exhaust themselves in repealing the unchangeable.

Why did Ford not buy land down on the Detroit River? That is a pertinent inquiry. It costs more. The Detroit River on either side, in the United States or Canada, still has banks and riparian rights that are not occupied. Why did he not go down where the Government would not be called upon to use its power of eminent domain or to put in half a million dollars out of the Treasury, which is a mere beginning? It is because if he went where the land is improved, away from the farming section, he would have paid more for his options and for the purchase price for the 2,000 acres of land required for his industrial plant. At all times he is a thrifty soul. Nobody ever accused him of not looking out for the main chance. He did not propose, not for an instant, to go anywhere where his land would cost him anything compared with what it would cost if he bought it along some sparsely settled part of the Detroit River. His sole purpose was to buy it cheaply and make it dear in value when he held it benefited by the powers of the Government of eminent domain and of half a million dollars of public expenditure which is purely for private purposes.

Of course, if Mr. Ford were to go into the middle of a cornfield or a wheatfield in Minnesota and start a plant, the land around it would increase in value; it would be a public benefit, providing his machinery is a benefit to anybody, and he would be hailed as an alleged benefactor in the State wherever he went. It is supposed that that justifies the use of public funds to promote his private fortunes. So he went up nearly 4½ miles from the mouth of the Rouge River and took options, and subsequently, up to the last information I had, he has bought at least 1,000 acres of it, and conveyances have been made to him. That done, his agent, Mr. Lucking, hies him to Washington, before the committee, and obtains the legislation to which I have referred for the purpose of digging and deepening and widening the Rouge River until, as the engineers say, it makes practically a water slip from the Detroit River up to the 3,000-foot front of his plant.

There never was so plain a case of the prostitution of governmental power for private benefit. It would be possible under no other condition than the reign of terrorism that the Government has instituted in Michigan for the purpose of promoting Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford is the author in Michigan of that process of terrorism. It serves his purposes. It is like his practices to tolerate no opposition and to receive no criticism without regarding the critic as his enemy.

Since I introduced the resolution which has been sent by the Appropriations Committee to the Committee on Commerce, as having more properly jurisdiction than the Appropriations Committee, an engineer, Mr. Markham, stationed at Detroit, takes the present occupant of the floor to task for having introduced the resolution. It is similar to the resolution passed by the village council of River Rouge and the one referred to on yesterday in Oakwood, in which it is said that private malice is at the bottom of such a resolution. Those distinguished mind readers are at liberty to draw any conclusions they see fit. It is a matter of no concern to me. I have no malice against Mr. Ford, but I do have criticisms and opposition to anybody who claims such infallibility and universal knowledge as Mr. Ford or anybody else. I know that essentially at heart such a man is a pretender.

There are no such people. Whenever I run across a man who claims to be one of them I instinctively brand him as a humbug. The strength of such a type consists in that part of the American population referred to by Barnum in the days when he was a great showman, that the American people like to be humbugged, and they are getting a liberal dose of it from many, many sources. They will be gorged to repletion, judging by the supply that is forthcoming. In time they will turn upon the ones practicing the infallibility and the imposition. That time has not yet come. Indications appear here and there that there is an awakening, but the gentleman that comes along with an infallible specific to cure every human ill yet finds credence in some quarters. No man who is informed on public or private affairs believes it for a moment; but there are a number of the other kind born every second, and they are a perennial field for the exercise of the talents of the infallible ones.

So Col. Markham writes a letter which his counsel had the goodness to send me, being published in one of the Detroit papers. It is sent in an envelope on which this letterhead appears on the upper left-hand corner:

Lucking, Murphy, Helfman, Lucking & Hanlon, attorneys and counselors, Ford Building, Detroit, Mich.

I will not read it. I will insert it in the RECORD later, when I conclude my remarks; but I take care here to remark that Mr. E. M. Markham attaches, just below his signature, "Lieutenant Colonel."

It would be incomplete if he did not attach his title. I referred to the hankering for military titles that the most of these distinguished internal fresh-water architects have. It is a wonder that they do not assume naval titles. There ought to be commodores and rear admirals, so that Grayson would have more company. He is a fresh-water admiral, and why not extend it to some of these gentlemen who sail the raging main of the Mississippi? "Colonel, lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A."—they are all attached to the U. S. A.—and he takes me to task very much.

I do not care to do more than to refer to Mr. Markham. His reasons are not more convincing than those of the average river and harbor engineer, which is a libelous statement right at the beginning, and if I were outside of the Senate Chamber I ought to be sued for making it.

I ask that the envelope and the communication from "lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers, U. S. A.," dated Detroit, Mich., January 14, 1920, be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Without objection, the request is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Envelope:] Lucking, Murphy, Helfman, Lucking & Hanlon, attorneys and counselors, Ford Building, Detroit, Mich., Detroit, Mich., Jan. 15, 11 a. m., 1920. [Stamp.] Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN, Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

ENGINEER REPLIES TO ROUGE CHARGES—RIVER IMPROVEMENT REQUIREMENTS MET, SAYS COL. MARKHAM.

[From the Detroit Free Press of Jan. 15, 1920.]

To the Editor: My attention has been called to a Washington dispatch which appeared in the Free Press, captioned, "Stop River Rouge job, Senate asked," alleging certain charges by United States Senator SHERMAN to the effect that the requirements of the legislation authorizing and appropriating for the Rouge River improvement were being violated, in that Mr. Henry Ford was not "living up to his agreement" to buy the land and pay incidental damages, the Secretary of War having interposed condemnation proceedings "whereby the Government—not Ford—would acquire the land which would be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States."

In the interest of a correct understanding of the matter by the local reading public, immediate correction of obvious misinformation contained in the news item in question seems advisable.

The appropriation item authorizing the Rouge River improvement reads: "For improvement of Rouge River, Michigan, in accordance with the report submitted in House document No. 2063, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $490,000." * * *

The House document referred to contains the limitation that Federal expenditures shall be made "subject to the condition that no funds shall be expended for other than survey work until local interests shall give satisfactory guaranties of their assumption of costs of rights of way, alterations of bridges, and incidental damages." In fulfillment of the qualification just quoted, the War Department has required of Mr. Henry Ford, who has assumed the obligations of "local interests," three bonds, which are now in War Department files—one in the sum of $100,000, a second in the sum of $500,000, and a third of unlimited amount. Each of these bonds guarantees the Government harmless against any of the costs which are required by the project document cited to be assumed by "local interests."

Accordingly, following the receipt and acceptance of the bonds just described, the Federal Government is proceeding in the customary manner to the acquirement by condemnation of such lands as could not be privately acquired except at excessive prices, and anticipates that its expenditures related to the Rouge River improvement will be confined exclusively to survey work and physical excavation, and that all charges having to do with rights of way, alterations of bridges, and incidental damages, as adjudged by the proper judicial agencies, shall be met by the bonds of Mr. Henry Ford, above stated to be in hand.

E. M. MARKHAM,
Lieutenant Colonel, Corps of Engineers,
United States Army.

DETROIT, January 14, 1920.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also call attention to the resolution of the Detroit Common Council, adopted January 20, 1920, the same day, and also the resolutions of the suburban village of Oakwood, heretofore referred to, on January 20, 1920. All three dates seem to possess a sequence of time. Probably it was actually the same moment, the same hour; but one would think that all of it happening on the same evening, January 20, 1920, was a remarkable coincidence. It had its inspiration, in all probability, at the number on the left-hand corner of the envelope of this multitudinous and ever-active array of Henry Ford's attorneys. They all acted at the same time. They all denounce in the same way. There are slight changes in verbiage, it is true, because it would not do to have them read precisely the same way; but every one of those resolutions was prepared in the office of Henry Ford's counsel in the Ford Building, Detroit.

One would think that there was nobody in Detroit but Henry Ford. There are at least some other concerns in the city of Detroit that have an equal number or more men on their pay rolls, and pay equal or better wages, and whose output and market is equal to Mr. Ford's, and nobody ever hears of them except by reading a trade journal. The difference is that Mr. Ford is a philanthropist, and the others are conducting private businesses. It makes all the difference in the world. It pays to be a philanthropist. Why, Mr. Robins found that out a long time ago. He went to Russia as a philanthropist on the pay roll of the Red Cross. Mr. Ford is a philanthropist. He has made an auto that anybody can buy. He has literally exterminated the mule everywhere except in Missouri, where the Ozark knobs are not favorable to jitney navigation. He has practically invented, he says, a farm tractor. He knows a way of getting good roads. He will buy enough land in Michigan to sell to every employee a 20-acre tract where he can raise celery, cabbages, and peaches. I am quoting now from a statement of his in a magazine some months ago.

He can live off the 20 acres. He will be paid a minimum wage of $6 a day in the Ford works. He will have a machine, finally, that will only cost $125, and will cost 10 cents a day to run. He can live out on the 20-acre peach orchard and come to the factory every night and morning, with the $6 minimum wage. Mr. Ford's entire plant is well ventilated, with plenty of light, and purely philanthropic, to benefit mankind. His own welfare and benefit have nothing to do with it. He has solved the problem, and he actually says there is no reason for any man to work more than 2 hours a day!

What will we do with the rest of the time? I have dismal forebodings that there will be strange eruptions in the State when a man only has to work 2 hours a day in this blessed country of ours and has the other 22 hours to eat, sleep, and look after the affairs of his neighbors. It will be a splended way of keeping up a healthful circulation of family secrets. Of course, it is a good thing that the country went dry. Imagine the horrors of 2 hours out of 24 at work, and beer halls assailing us on every hand for the other 22 hours when we are awake! We must do something, and those of us who are not inclined to a literary life or to run for office would naturally drift into a beer hall or a church, according to our inclinations; and I am sorry to say that many of my fellow citizens, not being properly inclined, would probably be found in a beer hall. So it is fortunate that the country went dry along with this great economic reform of our friend Ford.

It is no surprise Edsel Ford was exempted. He might have had to take his chances with the average. That is not to be endured. No wonder that he was protected by an Executive order from the White House to avoid this calamity; and equally to be expected the Senator representing in part the State of Delaware rises in his seat and protests against the draft record of Edsel Ford being exposed to a carping and censorious public.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I want to set the Senator straight. The Senator from Delaware never protested against exposing the draft record of Edsel Ford. I protested against exposing the draft record of 24,000,000 American citizens. Mr. Ford happens to be only one of them; and yesterday I suggested that it would be simpler and more direct to introduce an amendemnt to accomplish the Senator's purpose which would read something like this:

The Adjutant General is directed to supply to the Senator from Illinois a copy of Edsel Ford's draft record.

This would leave the other twenty-three million nine hundred and ninety-nine-odd thousand alone. So I have never protested against the exposure of Edsel Ford's draft record.

Mr. SHERMAN. The solicitous Senator knows how many Members of Congress there are, I presume—96 here, and 435 in the House—which, according to the average system of arithmetic, makes 531 Members. Does the Senator think that 531 Members of Congress, ordinarily being somewhat occupied with the affairs of legislation and their constituents, would create such turmoil as to reach 24,000,000 registrants?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois further yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think that every one of the 24,000,000 men would have his record asked for by 531 Members of Congress; no. I do think, however, that every one of the 24,000,000 men would be subjected to the risk of having some Member of Congress seeking his record, urged thereto by some scandalmonger, some personal enemy, some one actuated by venom and malice to drag this intimate record of a private American soldier back into the community with which to damn him and slander him. Every one of the 24,000,000 would be subject and liable to that risk. It is true that they would not all be victims of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think that among the 531 Members of Congress there are any scandalmongers?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not any question in the world, Mr. President, but that there would be Members of Congress who would, for the sake of pandering to somebody of influence or consequence, or, if you please, somebody possessing one vote, allow themselves to become the vehicle by which some man back home would seek to secure information concerning the physical condition, for instance, of a draftee, or some other private information about him that the draft record disclosed, for the purpose of slandering him. I have not any doubt in the world that the Members of Congress would be sought to do that, and that some would do it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if I had the low estimate of any Member of Congress of either body or had the low estimate of their constituents or had the debased estimate of human nature in general, I could come to the same conclusion that Mark Twain did when he said that the more he saw of human beings the better he liked dogs. But, happily, I am not yet in that condition. If I had the opinion of Congress that distresses the Senator, I would decline to soil my immaculate official toga by associating with such reprobates. I would resign and escape contamination.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There are mortal men in this Congress as well as outside, and I do not have to go outside the halls of Congress to find men who are willing to slander their fellows.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator does not subscribe to Henry Ford's doctrine of all mankind being good. He must suffer acutely from such association. The beloved Henry says that all you need to do is to give them 2 hours' work—that it is all it is necessary out of 24—and the whole human problem is solved. Necessarily, if that theory of humanity is right, the fears entertained by the Senator from Delaware are wrong. I leave him to meditate upon that subject, and hope that later he may amplify or correct it.

I now place in the RECORD the resolution to which I have referred of the Oakwood Common Council, of the city of Detroit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Oakwood Outlook, Detroit, Mich., Jan. 30, 1920.]

PUBLIC MASS MEETING HELD AT OAKWOOD, DENOUNCING THE RESOLUTION OF SENATOR SHERMAN TO DISCONTINUE WORK ON RIVER ROUGE.

A public mass meeting was held at the council chambers in the village of Oakwood Tuesday night, January 20, for the purpose of denouncing the resolution introduced in the United States Senate by Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, to discontinue work on dredging and widening the River Rouge. The capacity of the council chamber was insufficient to accommodate the large crowd assembled and an overflow meeting was held in front of the council chambers. The meeting was attended by leading citizens of Detroit, River Rouge, Delray, Oakwood, and Ecorse. Indignation reigned at a high pitch during the entire evening. Among those present were the president and trustees of the village of River Rouge; president of the River Rouge Board of Commerce; the president and commissioners of the village of Oakwood; the president and treasurer of the Oakwood Board of Commerce; and the president and treasurer of the Oakwood Improvement Association. The meeting was addressed by Henry Messimer, corporate counsel for River Rouge; Albert E. Sherman, corporate counsel for Oakwood; Gen. C. W. Harrah, T. H. Welch, and Carl Storm, of Detroit, as well as by the presidents of the villages of River Rouge and Oakwood. Immediately following the addresses of these men the meeting was thrown open for general discussion, and practically all of the trustees and commissioners of the different villages denounced the Sherman resolution as narrow, selfish, and impractical, and greatly to the detriment of the great section known as southwestern Detroit. The following resolution was presented to the meeting by Dr. F. J. Clippert and unanimously adopted by rising vote:

"Resolved, That the proposed resolution of Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, to discontinue work for the improvement of the River Rouge is inimical to the best interests of the entire community of southwestern Detroit and its environs and that the passage of said resolution would be unfair and unjust to the citizens thereof and that said resolution meets with the unanimous disapproval of those present at this meeting.

"Resolved further, That our Senators and Representatives and Congressmen be, and are hereby, petitioned to use their influence to defeat the said resolution and to encourage in every way possible any and all movements toward the improvement of the said River Rouge.

"Be it further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to Representatives DOREMUS, NICHOLS, KELLY, and MICHENER, and also to Senators TOWNSEND and NEWBERRY."

Chairman of the meeting was Albert J. Charles, president of the village of Oakwood.

Resolution by Oakwood village council, passed January 20, 1920.

Whereas Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, has introduced a resolution to hold up further work on the improvement of River Rouge because of alleged private benefit thereof:

Resolved, That this work is of the utmost public importance and of the greatest value and interest to the village of Oakwood and all the neighboring villages and the city of Detroit, and that such work will be of the greatest public service and of immediate financial benefit to large numbers of our people and industries; that great sums have been paid out and incurred by municipalities, individuals, companies, and railroads on the faith of this work; and that it would be a disaster to the community to stop such work.

Resolved, That our officers communicate with our United States Senators and Members of Congress and send them a copy of this resolution, requesting them to actively oppose such resolution and in every way to aid the early completion of such work by lending their help to every effort and requirement of the Government in that behalf.

Dated at the village of Oakwood, this 20th day of January, A. D. 1920.

ALBERT J. CHARLES,
President Village of Oakwood.

[Village seal.]

EDWARD G. MORITZ,
Clerk Village of Oakwood.

Resolutions of the board of directors of the American State Bank of Oakwood, January 21, 1920.

Whereas Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, has introduced a resolution in the United States Senate calling for the discontinuance of the work now under consideration for widening and deepening the River Rouge; and

Whereas this improvement is of the greatest importance for the development of projects undertaken and to be undertaken in the district of River Rouge, in southwestern Detroit; and

Whereas it would be a public calamity and a great financial loss to firms, corporations, and individuals, as well as to the citizens of this community, should this work be retarded or interfered with in any way: It is therefore

Resolved, That we notify Senators TOWNSEND and NEWBERRY and Congressmen NICHOLS, DOREMUS, MICHENER, and KELLEY that we are opposed to the passage of said resolution introduced by Senator SHERMAN, and we urge our Senators and Congressmen to do all in their power to prevent its passage, and urge them to lend their support to the early and complete development of said River Rouge as a necessary improvement urgently needed by the entire community.

W. J. HAYNES, President.
A. C. MILNE, Cashier.

Following is the summary of the speech delivered by Attorney Henry Messimer:

"About a year or so ago Congress appropriated a large sum of money to widen and deepen the Rouge River, undoubtedly having in mind the needs of Detroit for additional harbor facilities to make the Detroit River and Great Lakes accessible to our newer industries. It now appears that Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, has introduced in the Senate a resolution to withhold this appropriation, and his activities in this regard should meet with your most severe condemnation.

"You know as well as I do that for the last several years and following the making of this appropriation the west side of Detroit, including our villages, has taken on a new industrial aspect. Great concerns, by the literal score, have announced their intention to move to this district, and many have already either completely erected their plants or purchased sites for that purpose. These concerns require vast quantities of coal, lumber, ore, stone, and other materials, which will be sent to them by water. They have located along the Rouge so as to be able to receive their materials with the greatest economy. When all are in operation they will employ thousands of workmen, who will come and reside in our vicinity. For the period just passed scarcely a month has elapsed without bringing forth the announcement of the advent of another industry.

"Now, any government that fails to take account of the industries of the land can not survive, and any man or group of men (the Senator from Illinois included) who, for malice or ulterior motives, seek to wrest and despoil a community or to prevent its proper development fails in his citizenship, and to fail in citizenship is to fail as a man. Senator SHERMAN has failed in his citizenship and as a Senator by his resolution to withhold funds lawfully appropriated for this great enterprise.

"I believe that no man, especially a Senator, should lend his voice and position to 'pull chestnuts out of the fire' for some one else, or lend his position as representative of the people to further a personal grudge or spite against an opponent. No such representative has the right to barter the public or a community interest for any such purpose.

"Not all men in our Congress are like Senator SHERMAN; there are many big men there, and it is these men to whom we must look at this critical hour in the history of down-river development to see that this resolution is defeated. I take it that all the Senators and Congressmen from Michigan will uphold the honor and traditions of this great Commonwealth, for they know what the defeat of this project would mean; but that nothing may be left undone to kill this resolution, let us here, all assembled, by letter or telegraph, instruct the Senators and Congressmen to use their best efforts to defeat this pernicious resolution.

"If the Senators and Congressmen from other States who are to pass on this resolution would spend a little time in visiting the great centers of industry and trade, if they would come to this locality and see the great buildings and smoking furnaces, there would be no question as to its outcome, but as they will not come, it is for us to carry the message to them.

"I can not believe that this resolution will carry, and with the aid of our representatives in Congress and the earnest cooperation of all of us, it must not."

Resolution of Detroit Common Council, adopted January 20, 1920, opposing withdrawal of Rouge appropriation.—By Councilman Simons.

Whereas Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, on January 13, 1920, introduced a resolution in the United States Senate asserting that the improvement of the River Rouge by the United States Government "is solely for the benefit of Henry Ford and the Ford Motor Co.," and that Henry Ford "is using the name and sovereign rights of the United States and the powers of the Secretary of War for his own private benefit," and calling for the suspension of further work upon said improvement: Therefore Resolved by the common council of Detroit, That these statements are erroneous; that said improvement is primarily for the benefit of the whole city of Detroit and the villages on the southwesterly banks of the Rouge and of the citizens of said municipalities, and is of an immediate and direct benefit to large numbers of owners of frontage on either side of said river and of considerable numbers of existing industries in the line of the improvement and of prospective industries about to be created thereon, as well as of many thousands of employees already employed and to be employed therein, and that said improvement, when completed, will be of incalculable benefit to this entire great community.

Whereas vast expenditures have already been incurred by individuals and companies and various municipalities and railroads along the line of the improvement on the faith of the completion thereof;

Whereas the board of supervisors of the county of Wayne unanimously decided that this was an improvement of great importance and voted their approval of an issuance of $1,600,000 of bonds for bridges at West Jefferson Avenue and West Fort Street, in contemplation of such improvement:

Resolved, That it would be a most unjust and unwise thing to suspend or defer or interfere in any way with the completion of such work;

Resolved, That we urge United States Senators NEWBERRY and TOWNSEND, and Congressmen NICHOLS, DOREMUS, KELLEY, CRAMTON, and MICHENER to exert all their efforts and influence to defeat said resolution and to avert such threatenable calamity and also to aid actively in every way the early completion of such work.

Adopted as follows: Yeas—Councilmen Bradley, Castator, Kronk, Littlefield, Nagel, Simons, Vernor, and the president, 8; nays—none.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a resolution of the village council of River Rouge, Mich.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Resolution of the village council of River Rouge, Mich., passed January 20, 1920.

Whereas Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, has introduced a resolution to hold up further work on the improvement of River Rouge because of alleged private benefit thereof: Therefore be it

Resolved by the village council of River Rouge, That this work is of the utmost public importance and of the greatest value and interest to the village of River Rouge and all the neighboring villages and the city of Detroit, and that such work will be of the greatest public service and of immediate financial benefit to large numbers of our people and industries; that great sums have been paid out and incurred by municipalities, individuals, companies, and railroads on the faith of this work and that it would be a disaster to the community to stop such work.

Resolved, That our village president communicate with our United States Senators and Members of Congress and send them a copy of this resolution, requesting them to actively oppose such resolution and in every way to aid the early completion of such work by lending their help to every effort and requirement of the Government in that behalf.

THOMAS J. BRESNAHAN,
Village President.

[SEAL.]

RAYMOND J. PETERS,
Village Clerk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have about concluded my remarks on the documentary factors of this matter. It is further provided here in section 6 of the act of July 18, 1918, on the right of eminent domain, as follows—and I ask to insert that in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 6. That in all cases where private property shall be taken by the United States for the public use in connection with any improvement of rivers, harbors, canals, or waterways of the United States, and in all condemnation proceedings by the United States to acquire lands or easements for such improvements, where a part only of any such parcel, lot, or tract of land shall be taken, the jury or other tribunal awarding the just compensation or assessing the damages to the owner, whether for the value of the part taken or for any injury to the part not taken, shall take into consideration by way of reducing the amount of compensation or damages any special and direct benefits to the remainder arising from the improvement, and shall render their award or verdict accordingly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD section 9 of the act of August 8, 1917, showing that some effort to purchase is required before condemnation proceedings are instituted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The section referred to is as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever any State, or any reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency created by any State, shall undertake to secure any land or easement therein, needed in connection with a work of river and harbor improvement duly authorized by Congress, for the purpose of conveying the same to the United States free of cost, and shall be unable for any reason to obtain the same by purchase and acquire a valid title thereto, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States for the acquirement by condemnation of said land or easement, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to institute and conduct such proceedings upon the request of the Secretary of War: Provided, That all expenses of said proceedings and any award that may be made thereunder shall be paid by such State, or reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency as aforesaid, to secure which payment the Secretary of War may require such State, or reclamation, flood-control, or drainage district, or other public agency as aforesaid, to execute a proper bond in such amount as he may deem necessary before said proceedings are commenced.

Mr. SHERMAN. It therefore seems, from the act and from the proceedings since, that this item was inserted in the river and harbor bill in 1917 for the sole purpose of promoting the private fortunes of Henry Ford and of the Ford Motor Co. These resolutions, it is true, show that other improvements are contemplated and that it will be a great public benefit. So it would be, as I have indicated, if it were taken to any place in the United States and money spent to promote a private undertaking of this kind. Undoubtedly it would attract other enterprises and the price of land or the value of real estate in the urban centers would increase materially by the location of such an enterprise in their vicinity.

I can regard this item and this authority conferred by the act of 1917 and subsequent acts only as the very grossest perversion of the powers of the Government. They are used to enrich a person already possessed of much affluence, one who has been successful in his manufacturing affairs. I think, therefore, that the resolution in the Committee on Commerce ought to be acted upon and that the authorities representing the Government in charge of these condemnation suits and this alleged improvement for private benefit ought to be directed to cease their activities until some investigation can be had and the whole enterprise exposed. I have only been able in the time here that I feel I ought in justice to take to give the very barest outline of the undertaking.

If Senators wish to conceal from the public the draft record of Edsel Ford, beginning with the original proceedings in local board No. 21, as I remember now, in the city of Detroit, going through the district board, until it reached the War Department, together with the action of the Chief Magistrate upon that particular subject; if Senators wish to shield the beneficiary and those concerned from the pitiless publicity, let them do so. I wish, however, to fix the responsibility—let it be known where it belongs. If any Senators feel sensitive upon that subject, they can voice their frame of mind by their vote and their conduct in this Chamber. They have a right to do so.

Further, if 24,000,000 registrants have a record that might be exposed to the prying, envious eyes of 531 Members of Congress, it is only by adopting the very low estimate of the personnel of the moral characteristics of a Member of Congress to suppose that that right would be abused. Members of Congress are elected by their constituents. They are not appointed in a department to hold office. They are responsible before the forum of public opinion for the proper exercise of their legislative powers, including the procedure on an affair of this kind. I think the average Member of Congress does not abuse his powers.

It is said that pressure would be brought to bear by either interested persons or by those possessing great influence, by wealth or otherwise, I suppose, it is intimated, to secure the draft record of some of the registrants for improper purposes. Who is to be the judge of that? Who is the guardian? Who builds up the barrier between the record and publicity? Shall it be the appointed officer in a department? Is he the sole custodian of the proprieties in this country?

He is far removed from public opinion. I said something yesterday afternoon upon the subject of how little the head of a department or the head of a bureau sitting at a desk cares for public opinion, not enough even to comment further upon. The Members of the House, however, go through the ballot box every two years. They are as safe custodians of the performance of public duties, they are as safe to guard any proper cases of record of registrants, as any other public authority in the country. I resent the imputation that a Member of Congress can not be trusted in such a matter, that he will abuse the power. Where do we abuse our other powers? Who abuses his power in the Senate or in the House to serve private purposes? If we do, our constituents are the judges and visit upon us merited rebuke for our conduct. I am content to leave the matter with his unworthy suspicions where the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] has placed it.

I do not know what the Committee on Privileges and Elections will do, whether they will regard it as of importance or not; but if they should issue a subpœna duces tecum upon the proper head of the department or upon the subordinate having the custody of records material to the election contest pending in this body and now before that committee, whether such subordinate or head will refuse compliance with it I know not. It would be entirely in keeping with their conduct upon other matters if they entirely ignored it and treated with a proper degree of contempt any process of Congress, as is customary in the departments. Whether we will ever see it or not I do not know. I only know that much legislation of this body has been ignored and nullified by the departments.

This is not a republican form of government; it is a Government of departments. It is not a Government of law; it is a Government of unbridled discretion. We are not governed today by fixed rules of conduct. We have no municipal law in our country that prescribes what is right and prohibits what is wrong, so that any citizen walking in the broad daylight can tell what his duties or obligations may be. That depends entirely upon the discretion of a department.

Every fifth taxpayer in the United States a year ago this spring paid illegal taxes. In some instances, even if the amount was large, it was thought better to pay it than to engage in litigation. In many instances the amount was comparatively small, less than it would take to go into court, employ an attorney, and contest it, so the amounts were collected. The department itself has practically admitted that $40,000,000 of illegally collected taxes are now held by the Treasury. The rulings this year that certain securities are exempt from taxation are an entire reversal of the rulings of last year. Of course, we would not expect uniformity at all times upon a new law, but we would expect that taxes illegally collected would at least have some move made to be refunded. That will not be done.

The age of government by departmental discretion will continue so long as Congress is in the habit of passing blanket appropriations. Literally millions of dollars go out of this Chamber to departments about which the Senators have no detailed knowledge, much less some of the members of the principal committees, the Committee on Appropriations among others. I see now no flattering prospect in this Chamber for reducing appropriations and taxes. I do not know what the majority side here will do finally. The responsibility ultimately is upon them. There are bills enough pending now to increase the civilian appropriations by over $1,000,000,000. Who is talking retrenchment or reduction in this body? A comparatively few, and so far they have aroused no favorable response.

I have remarked many times upon the unpopularity of reducing appropriations in the Senate. Nothing is so unpopular in Washington. The motto of everybody here is, "Everyone for himself and the Treasury for us all." It is like the corrupt reign of George III reaching over into that of George IV. When the Crown could not control the House of Commons, he increased his civil list and got appropriations of sufficient pounds sterling to influence the members he needed by giving them patronage.

There is only one thing popular in Washington and that is to shout lustily for the old flag and liberal appropriations. That is in order all the time, and noble patriots are bursting with heroic rage every day because we do not further loot the Treasury with all kinds of schemes that constantly appear. You can start to reform appropriation bills and budget bills; you can kiss them into the committee, and then, after being kissed in, they are kicked out with their author. That is the universal experience of those who have tried to protect the taxpayer. We meet with ridicule and the comment, "Oh, yes; the taxpayer, you always refer to the taxpayer. The taxpayer does not care. He gets part of it back himself." You never heard Mr. Ford talking for economy because he is getting the big part of it back. He is getting more back than he pays. He profits by every turn in the road. Of course, Mr. Ford believes even now, after mature reflection, in the old flag and appropriations for the Rouge River half a million dollars. It is a very commendable enterprise for it helps him along.

But we are going along here, happily or unhappily, with all kinds of schemes coming up, $20,000,000 here, $40,000,000 yonder, $68,000,000 further on, with all kinds of increases of salaries coming on, and the high cost of living with us. The head of the appraisers' office at one of the United States ports, before a committee the other day, said, "Our inspector gets $4 a day and a house carpenter gets $15 a day; the inequality is so great that it must be remedied by Congress by raising Government salaries."

I have considerable correspondence in my office to the same effect from various parts of the United States. There is no house carpenter in the United States worth, under healthy conditions, $15 a day. They may get it, but they are not worth it.

We can remedy by legislation, that will come before this body sooner or later, these vast expenditures. I might just as well, in the closing words that I have, refer to it now. When these bills appear the person who opposes them will receive probably short shrift and no sympathy outside. There ought to be everything consistent with industrial conditions allowed, but if we adjust salaries in this body for the public service on the basis of privately paid employees outside in various industrial and skilled labor lines we will reach a point where more than $1,000,000,000 of increases in salaries alone by accurate computation will be called for by appropriations before we reach the end of the session. When salaries are once fixed they will never come down, the schedule will never be reduced. Whatever may happen outside in private enterprise, whatever reductions may come with readjustments, when our between three billion and four billion dollars of Federal reserve notes are called in or reduced to a safe volume, when we return more nearly to a specie basis, when war bonds have settled down until permanent values are found, when prices fall, as they will some time, we will face an entirely different world in our part of the globe.

Prices must fall. Our exports are reduced. Europe will begin to support herself. When she finds that no longer are millions available by way of charity or loans to take care of her, when no longer cargoes of food go across the sea to be distributed, when she finds she must take care of herself, she will do so. The people of Europe never will reach this conclusion until that conviction dawns upon them by the stoppage of supplies. When that time comes our exports will fall off. Indeed, it has come now. Our meat exports are falling off; our exports of manufactures are falling off. Europe is beginning to recover herself; to supply her own wants. The United Kingdom is shipping from her colonial dependencies and from South America. She has great shipping facilities; she operates at a minimum cost. She is feeding her own people now more nearly than at any time since the war. She is, in a large measure, relieved from the necessity of depending upon us for her food supplies. With the coming crop years, with cattle, sheep, and hogs growing in her colonial dependencies, with every 30 days approaching nearer the condition where they may be marketed for meat supplies, the time is not far distant when our colossal exports will be reduced by 50 per cent at least. In that time products will begin to accumulate in the domestic markets, and as the supply accumulates prices inevitably will fall. We are approaching that period.

Consequently there will not be such demand on the pay roll for everybody, skilled and unskilled. There is a time coming—and it is not a disaster, either—when prices will be reduced. Members of Congress are still living on $7,500 a year. They belong to the "new poor" class that has begun to consider itself in London and the principal manufacturing towns of Great Britain. It is true we were not at the starvation point when the rise in prices began; but we are facing a period of readjustment in both private and public life.

Why, then, when matters are in this condition, is that everlasting pressure apparent here, and the yielding by Members of Congress, to raise the compensation of public employees up to the level which private employees are paid? Of course, a great number are insisting on it; a great number of Federal employees are in an association. I think that is what they call it; they do not call it a union, but, nevertheless, the purposes are the same. It was contemplated here for a time that the teachers in a certain public school should quit their occupations. The truth is whenever an employee in this country on the Government pay roll does not like his pay or the kind of work he is doing, he is at perfect liberty to quit; there is no antistrike clause applying to resignations, and there is not likely to be.

The vice in all these proposals is not only the matter of expense, which ought to appeal to Congress, but the vice is that the occupation or the job must be fitted to the man.

I have exactly the opposite creed—that the man must fit himself for the job. Whenever I have disliked my occupation I have changed it, and I think that must be the rule of action in this country all the time. Anything else spells decay. The best rule is that of individual merit; the incentive to do the best there is in one. That is now studiously ignored in both public and private life in all these claims for remaining on the inflated war level. It is apparent, too, in the effort to increase salaries or compensation in all departments of the public service.

I shall await with some interest what the action of the Senate will be upon all such proposals that will come here. The responsibility primarily for appropriations in the public mind will rest upon the majority side of this Chamber. We can not escape it if we would. Whether we have the votes or not, the responsibility will be fixed on us. I know there are some Senators on the minority side of the Chamber who will join us in reducing expenditures to the lowest possible limit, but the question is whether or not all such will be in a majority.

Mr. STANLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. DIAL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Lenroot	Shields
Ball	Harding	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Harris	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Harrison	McLean	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	McNary	Stanley
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Moses	Sterling
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	New	Sutherland
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Townsend
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Dillingham	Kellogg	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Kendrick	Phelan	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Kenyon	Phipps	Warren
Fletcher	Keyes	Pomerene	Watson
France	King	Robinson	Williams
Glass	Kirby	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	Knox	Sherman

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I hold no brief for Henry Ford. It is more than probably true that this thrifty, ingenious mechanic abundantly demonstrated his lack of vision, of wisdom, and experience, his utter unfitness for a place in this august body long prior to the diatribe of the Senator from Illinois. It may be true, for all I know, that this scion of the house of Ford, this heir presumptive to "the chevalier of all the jitneys in the world," was lacking in courage and in patriotism; it may be true, for all I know, that he escaped by falsehood or by favor; but that is not a question at issue now before this body or before any court or tribunal having jurisdiction of the facts and the subject matter. Henry Ford is not a candidate for the Senate nor is he contesting the seat of the Senator from Michigan. There is no legislation pending to which this gratuitous tirade is pertinent or germane. Why this attack and why this astounding and unprecedented statement from the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. President, you may go back to the time when the first ambassadors from the first States assembled in this august presence until now, and I defy you to dig from foolish or from any shameless utterances anything so indefensible, anything evidencing a more brazen disregard of the honor of courts, the proprieties of this place, or a decent regard for public opinion, than this remarkable utterance.

Says the Senator from Illinois:

> We on this side of the Chamber are either headed to lose one vote or we must stand together a great deal better than we have been doing. I somewhat resent the superior virtue implied by voting on all matters with the minority. I can do some of that myself; I have already done so a time or two, as a timely warning, and I will do a great deal more of it before my term expires unless there is a change of behavior on this side of the Chamber. I have dwelt within party lines since 1880—40 years last November—and I think I can not fairly be accused of being too liberal in matters of partisan policy; but if the Senator now on trial in this body before the Committee on Privileges and Elections shall be unseated, one more vote will turn the minority of this Chamber to the other side of the aisle, and I have that one vote. Unless Mr. NEWBERRY is saved, the vote in this Chamber will be for a while, until the governor of Michigan shall act, a tie, in the event a single Republican votes with the minority. This mock heroic virtue must cease, Mr. President. I serve timely notice upon Senators upon this side of the Chamber that they must be Republican or there will be divers Senators here who will refuse to do anything.

What does it mean? To whom is it directed? Against Ford? No. Were I the humblest citizen in the land, I would not, within the hearing of court or jury, express an opinion touching the guilt or innocence of the Senator from Michigan. I know nothing of the merits of that case. I accept without question the beneficent mandate, the benign principle of the law, that every man is presumed, notwithstanding an indictment, to be innocent until his guilt is established beyond a reasonable doubt and by a competent tribunal. I do not mean to imply that the Senator from Michigan is guilty of any offense. What I do know, and the Senator from Illinois knows, and the whole country knows is that this Senator stands indicted, charged with high crimes and misdemeanors. He knows, and I know, that that question is now being determined by a court of competent jurisdiction and by a jury sworn to do its duty without fear and without favor.

Is it conceivable, is it possible, that any mortal man would shield himself behind the sacred privilege of this body to do that which is criminal elsewhere? Is it possible that the dignity of a Senator or the franking privilege of Congress is now to be used for the purpose of snatching an accused from justice? Was it intended to affect the discretion of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber?

God forbid! I do not believe it. I have served too long in the House and in the Senate. I do not believe that any constituency under the flag has ever commissioned a Senator here so mean, so narrow, so partisan, as to induce him to blacken his soul by perjury, after he had sworn to do his duty, and to seat here a man reeking with crimes, with perjury, with bribery, with all of which he is charged, because he feared the loss of a vote. It is not creditable to Members of the other side of the Chamber that one of their own colleagues should hold so poor an estimate of their sense of justice and propriety.

What is this offense?

Mr. President, it is recounted that when Rome had reached her last stage of degradation and unspeakable infamy, after the evil memories of Tiberius and Caracalla and Nero, after fratricide and murder and violence and chicanery and brutality had all dishonored the Roman purple, at last a shameless and aspiring millionaire bought the diadem from the Pretorian guard, from the ramparts of a camp, and the brutal, debased Roman soldiery, in shame and in horror over their crime against the dignity of a decadent empire, arose and butchered the wretch who dared to buy that lofty place.

The Senator from Michigan, whether guilty or innocent, wears a toga more honorable and more honored than the purple of any Roman emperor, than the diadem of any ancient conqueror or king. He is charged with having bought it—bought it from the ramparts of the camp. He is charged with the prostitution of the electorate and with the deliberate fabrication of a padded account. He is charged with bribery and perjury. If he is convicted by a jury of his peers under the instruction of a court of his own party, if he comes here under that shadow, will a Senator from the other side rise in his place and say that to refuse to admit him is a mock heroic virtue?

Mr. President, we are at present with dangers encompassed round. There never was a time when conservative men looked into the future with more concern, when brave men thought of the morrow with more apprehension, when wise men studied problems of state with more diligence; and yet I say to you there is a greater danger to the ship of state, to the honor of our country, and to the perpetuity of these institutions from the shameless, wanton, corrupt, unblushing use of millions than from the narrowness of the fanatic or the violence of the anarchist. That which will carry us through, will support and sustain us, will guide and guard us now, is the disinterested and patriotic citizen, sitting in his cane-bottom chair by his fireside, with an open Bible on his knees, studying reverently the Constitution of his country and the precepts of his religion. It is that simple, devout, incorruptible lover of his country that protects us in time of peace, as his heroic sons defend us in time of war. It is upon the virtue of the electorate that the country must depend at this crucial hour.

Whenever the populace of America, like the populace of Rome, seek only bread and the circus; whenever they are ready to follow, like a hungry pack, debased and shameless, the hand that feeds them most, then neither armies nor armaments, neither the wisdom of sages nor the courage of heroes, will save us from the same deserved ruin that has overcome all other corrupt nations of the world. Said the King of Kings, "They who rule not righteously shall perish from the earth"; and he who goes out with his dirty millions to play upon the weaknesses or the necessities of his countrymen destroys that righteousness. The disinterestedness of the citizen in the sacred function of casting his ballot is to him what honor is to a woman; and there is as little dependence to be put in the patriotism of the man who buys and the man who sells a vote as there is in the womanliness of the scarlet wretch who makes a commodity of her virtue.

It is charged that "barrels" were opened. It is charged that the press was corrupted; that every avenue of publicity, every means of information, was polluted and debauched, and that those who could not be deceived were debased and prostituted; and that this thing covered a whole State, against the dignity of the laws of the Commonwealth of Michigan and the peace and honor of the United States of America.

While that tremendous crime is being investigated by a court of competent jurisdiction, a Senator in this body rises in his place and says, "If you dare to express an honest indignation at the commission of that colossal crime, I will cease to be a Republican." God forbid that he or any other should enter the portals of Democracy through such a door or from such a cause!

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] said yesterday, as I was not present, but I do think I understand fully what is the intent of the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I can assure the Senator, however, that his words will not carry far enough to interfere with or prejudice in the least the trial that is going on in Michigan at this time.

I have been very well pleased with the attitude of Senators in regard to this matter, because they have been content to allow the truth to be determined by means which no one for the prosecution questions. I think it was quite gratuitous for the Senator from Kentucky to advise the Senate as to its duty or even to suggest that Senators might be persuaded into doing what they ought not to do. I believe in determining election contests in a lawful manner and that charges of corruption against Senators which are on trial in court should not be influenced by discussion here, although I am sure that what has been said will fail in exerting influence upon the court.

Mr. President, I want to have the truth known as to the last senatorial election in Michigan, and I would like to have the truth made known as to the election in Kentucky. I remember the discussion which occurred among Senators and the statements in the press in reference to election frauds and corrupt methods in Kentucky. But I have never felt that it was wise to try the case on this floor before it was in order here. I have felt that it was proper for the Senate to proceed through its Committee on Privileges and Elections and the court to proceed through the methods provided by law to determine guilt, and when the question comes before the Senate——

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Kentucky can be assured that other Senators hold quite as high a notion of duty, loyalty, and patriotism as does he.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I assume that the Senator refers to some statement published by some irresponsible correspondent at the time of my election to this body. I saw that statement. I went before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I asked the chairman for any tangible proof. I went before the leaders on the other side and I said: "I covet, I court, the most thorough investigation. If there is anything in the conduct of that election and in my conduct as governor of Kentucky that authorizes the questioning of my right to a seat in this body, then I am ready to face it here and now in this place."

More than that, I told them that if they would investigate I would agree that no witnesses should be brought from Kentucky except those of the opposite political faith, and that I was willing to allow a Republican committee, after hearing Republican witnesses, to pass upon my right to a seat in this body.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the position of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] is like that of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. It is not impossible that the junior Senator from Michigan is an object of the same malign influences as those admitted by the Senator from Kentucky. The Senate has already authorized an investigation of the Michigan senatorial election. That investigation will be prosecuted. The junior Senator from Michigan denies that he is guilty of the crimes charged, the same as the Senator from Kentucky denies that he was guilty of the offenses charged against him. What the facts may be in the former case will be disclosed, and no Senator is more willing than am I that those facts shall govern the action of Senators. But I submit that it ill becomes the Senator from Kentucky at this time to make a speech practically assuming that the junior Senator from Michigan is a criminal, that a crime has been committed against the electorate of Michigan, when the case is on trial and not all of even the prosecution's evidence is yet submitted.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I recognize that the Senator said in the beginning that he presumed a man was innocent until he was convicted, and then the balance of his speech was on the assumption of guilt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I do not wish to be interrupting the Senator from Michigan, but I know him too well to believe that he would intentionally misquote me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would not.

Mr. STANLEY. I have stated that I not only accepted the doctrine that he is presumed to be innocent, but that I knew nothing of the merits of the case, and I meant not to prejudge it in any way. I based my whole argument upon the fact that the indictment was pending in the courts, and in the event of a conviction I then asked what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] would do. In the event of his acquittal it is perfectly manifest what ought to be done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say upon the subject than to repeat that the case is being tried and the facts will be disclosed. If the Senate through its proper committee wishes to proceed further when the trial is concluded, there will not be an obstacle placed in the way. The matter is before the courts now, and I submit that Senators ought to be willing to abide the outcome of that proceeding before they undertake to discuss the case on this floor.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, the last sentence uttered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] I think very correctly expresses what ought to be the conduct of Senators on this floor with respect to the so-called Newberry case. The case is in the court, and I entirely agree with the Senator from Michigan that it is a gross abuse of privilege, though he has not phrased it exactly that way, for Senators on this floor to express an opinion concerning that case.

In making that statement, Mr. President, I accompany it with the further statement that I heartily indorse every word uttered by the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. The Senator from Michigan evidently did not hear all the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky. If I understood him correctly, the Senator from Kentucky was protesting against the breach of a proper rule of conduct by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN].

I desire to advise the Senator from Michigan just what happened in this Chamber yesterday. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] offered a little amendment to the pending deficiency bill, which amendment, if enacted into law, would impose upon The Adjutant General of the Army the duty of supplying a copy of any individual record of any registrant under the draft law to any Member of Congress from the State of which the registrant was a citizen. There was objection to the passage of that amendment, and in the course of the discussion some one said, I believe it was myself, that the real purpose of the amendment was to supply the Senator from Illinois with the draft record of Edsel Ford.

The amendment was very properly beaten. Regardless of the interests of Edsel Ford, the amendment ought to have been beaten. The Senator from Illinois thereupon took the floor and launched forth into this Ford controversy, and in the course of his remarks expressed on this floor his opinion concerning the case pending in the court in Michigan.

With all due respect to the Senator from Illinois, he addressed the jury in the Newberry case; and if I am not mistaken, I venture the assertion that the newspapers in Michigan of the proper political persuasion have the speech of the Senator from Illinois given them to-day or will have it to-morrow, so that the jurors sitting in that case can read it. Let me quote to the Senator from Michigan what was said by the Senator from Illinois yesterday in the course of his remarks. He said:

> It is charged that $178,000 was spent in the campaign in Michigan by the Republican candidate. Probably the truth when known upon a hearing of the evidence will disclose that the money was spent by the Republican State central committee of the State of Michigan. It was a legitimate expenditure. I have as much right—
> Said the Senator from Illinois—
> to pass upon that question here as has Judge Sessions, who is presiding in the trial of the indictment in which the same question is involved. It is within my jurisdiction—
>
> Said the Senator from Illinois—
> as the trial of the indictment is within his.

To-day on this floor again, the Senator from Illinois still, as I think, addressing the jury in the Newberry case, stated that the indictment now pending against 123 defendants in Michigan, including a Senator of this body, supplied but another instance of Federal benevolence in behalf of Mr. Ford, and that Ford's agents are scouring all over Michigan running the prosecution of the Federal Government, and Ford's attorneys are sitting in with the attorneys of the United States Government to perpetrate this outrage—that is the substance of his remarks—upon innocent men.

It may be that these are innocent men. I decline to express an opinion upon their guilt or innocence. I assume them to be innocent until they are proven otherwise. The thing about which I am complaining and the thing about which I understood the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] was complaining was that a Senator of the United States should take advantage of his privileges as such to make an address here to a jury empaneled in a criminal cause prejudicial to one side of that cause, such an address as if uttered in the State of Michigan would render him in contempt of court and subject him to a penitentiary penalty.

Who, may I ask the Senator from Michigan, started this breach of decorum, if such there be? If there is such, it emanates from a Republican on the other side of the Chamber, who at the same time, referring to the case pending in the Senate, notified his colleagues that "unless you save NEWBERRY I am going to the Democrats."

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I said, the statement of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] was the first information I had that anything had been said by the Senator from Illinois or any other Senator. I could not approve at this stage of the court proceedings, if at any time, of the speech of the Senator from Illinois as it is now reported to me. I do not think the argument of the Senator from Kentucky answered it. It simply aggravated, and more flagrantly, the circumstance of which he complained. If the speech of the Senator from Illinois was an address to the Grand Rapids jury, how shall we characterize the speech of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the pending question is the amendment of the committee on page 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 16, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE.

So much of the appropriation of $3,500,000 not necessary for the care and custody of the draft records and for the employment of clerical assistance for the purpose of furnishing to adjutants general of States statements of service of soldiers who served in the war with Germany shall be available for the employment of clerical assistance necessary for the purpose of furnishing such information from the records of the demobilized Army as may be properly furnished to public officials, former soldiers, and other persons entitled to receive it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. At this point I wish to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from The Adjutant General, which refers to the uses that may be made of the information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, January 10, 1920.

DEAR SIR: It may be of interest and possibly of assistance to you to know that the special restrictions heretofore placed upon access to the draft records have been removed.

Hereafter such access will be governed by sections 11 and 12 of the selective-service regulations, which read as follows:

"SECTION 11. PUBLIC RECORDS OF DISTRICT AND LOCAL BOARDS.

"All records required by these rules and regulations to be filed with and kept by local and district boards, adjutants general, and other persons in connection with the registration, examination, selection, and mobilization of registrants under the selective-service law, and these regulations shall be public records and shall be open during usual business hours for public inspection of any and all persons. (See Sec. 12.)

"Provided, however, That the answers of any registrant concerning the condition of his health, mental or physical, in response to series II of the questions under the head entitled 'Physical Fitness,' in the questionnaire, and other evidence and records upon the same subject, and the answers of any registrant to the questions under series X of the questions under the head entitled 'Dependency' in the questionnaire, except the names and addresses of the persons claimed to be dependent upon such registrant, shall not, without the consent of the registrant, be open to inspection by any person other than members of local and district boards, examining physicians, members of medical advisory boards, Government appeal agents, and other persons connected with the administration of the selective-service law and these rules and regulations, and United States attorneys and their assistants, and officials of such bureaus or departments of the United States Government as may be designated by the Secretary of War. After the death of any registrant his answers to the questions concerning his property, financial condition, and income, in response to series X of the questions under the head entitled 'Dependency,' in his questionnaire, shall also be open to the inspection of his widow, heirs at law, and legal representative, and they, or any of them, shall be entitled upon request to a certified copy thereof; and a certified copy of this portion of the deceased registrant's questionnaire may be furnished on request to any person whenever the judge of a court of record shall certify in writing that the registrant is deceased, that the facts, matters, and things in this portion of his said questionnaire contained are at issue on the trial of a case then pending, or about to be brought before such court, to which action the applicant is a party, that proof of such facts, matters, and things is necessary to the due administration of justice, and that the disclosure of this portion of the contents of said questionnaire will not be detrimental to the estate or interests of the deceased registrant, his widow, heirs at law, or legal representative, provided such certificate is accompanied by the consent in writing to the disclosure of such information of the legal representative of the deceased registrant, if there be one, otherwise of any one of the following persons, to wit: The widow, father, mother, adult son, daughter, brother, or sister of the deceased registrant, each of whom shall, while living, successively in the order named, have the exclusive right and option to give or to withhold such consent.

"Any person connected with the administration of the selective-service law and these rules and regulations who shall divulge or impart to any person not entitled under the foregoing paragraph to receive the same, any information contained in a record as to a registrant's physical condition, or as to his answers concerning dependency, as above provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one year.

"The portions of such records as are hereinbefore held to be confidential shall not, without the consent of the registrant, be produced and published in response to any subpœna or summons of any court, except that they may be so produced and published for the purpose of being used in the prosecution of the registrant, or of any person acting in collusion with such registrant, for perjury or for any violation of the provisions of the selective-service law or of these rules and regulations.

* * * * * * *

"SECTION 12. MANNER IN WHICH PUBLIC MAY INSPECT RECORDS.

"Whenever any registrant or other person (except one of the classes of persons named in the proviso of the foregoing section 11 of these rules and regulations) applies to a local or district board to inspect any of the records of such boards, such registrant or other person shall not be permitted to search through such records, but it shall be the duty of members or clerks of local and district boards and other persons having the custody of such records, to discover, open, and point out to the registrant or other person, the portion of the record containing the information requested by such person so applying; subject to the limitations as to the disclosures provided in the foregoing section 11.

"NOTE 1: Local and district boards are prohibited from giving lists of registrants to any person for advertising purposes. (Circular letter, Feb. 11, 1918.)

"NOTE 2: Since under the selective-service law and regulations deferred classification, except in the cases involving outright exemption under the act of May 18, 1917, does not exist as a matter of right, the hearing of claims for such classification can not be considered controversial. Boards sit not as referees between registrants and the Government but as representatives of the Government charged with the responsibility of recruiting an Army, and at the same time, of preserving our economic and domestic equilibrium in accordance with prescribed regulations. The spirit and intent of the regulations requires board members to be in possession of every available fact touching or pertaining to cases within their respective jurisdiction. No small amount of such information is confidential. To open to the public such information would be a breach of the confidence under which persons interested in the successful operation of the selective-service law have furnished the information, and will discourage giving further information to the consequent serious impairment of the fair and equitable selection of registrants. The public, therefore, should not be given access to confidential records or reports.

"A registrant is entitled to access to his questionnaire and to the record in his case, including the record of his physical examination (Form 1010, p. 227), but where such records contain statements or letters of a confidential nature, other than those offered by himself, the names of the informants should not, without their consent, be divulged to the registrant who is, however, entitled to be advised of all statements and allegations which form part of the records in his case. Ample precaution should be taken to prevent a registrant from ascertaining the name or names of persons who have given such confidential information. (Circular letter, Apr. 22, 1918.)"

Very respectfully,

P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 19 on page 17, the last paragraph read being as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

The appropriation contained in section 4 of the act approved December 5, 1919, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia,' approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes," shall be paid one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question for information. I observe the paragraph of the bill just read relates to the Metropolitan police. I wish to be informed what bill takes care of the policemen in Rock Creek Park. I am informed by those men that the salaries of all other policemen in the city of Washington and in the parks of Washington were raised some time ago and that theirs are the only salaries which have not been dealt with.

I am desirous of getting the information in order that I may at the proper time act intelligently with reference to protecting those men. I do not know of any reason why the park men in the city should have their salaries raised without the park men in Rock Creek Park having theirs raised.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho I would say that the bill which raised the pay of the police force of the District of Columbia is one which emanated from the Committee on the District of Columbia and was intended to take care of the policemen here in the city. There were a great many crimes alleged, rape, assault, and so forth, and finally some officers were killed. I do not remember now whether that bill extended to the park men here as well as the police force; but if so, it was because of prior legislation which made these park men policemen as well; that is, gave them police authority.

All the employees in the District of Columbia are being reviewed by the Reclassification Commission and they will be taken care of at some time in the future. Their pay is provided for in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which has been reported to the House and which carries the annual appropriation for all these matters, District of Columbia and others.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, if I should desire to undertake to equalize the pay of the Rock Creek Park men or of the park men in the city, I would have to do it in connection with the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. It should be done in that bill.

Mr. BORAH. This is merely a deficiency appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. Let me say that it is not only a deficiency but it is an urgent deficiency bill. One will follow that, of course, which will be a general deficiency bill. The item to which the Senator alludes with reference to the Metropolitan police is simply to cover a defect in a prior bill, where they made appropriations for the District men and did not attend to it that one-half should be paid by the District and one-half by the United States Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in addition to what the Senator from Wyoming said, I will say that the policemen in the Zoological Park are not members of the Metropolitan police force. They are appropriated for in a different bill from the policemen of the city.

Mr. WARREN. I spoke only of the other parks in the city. They are park policemen.

Mr. SMOOT. I am coming to the point I wanted the Senator to understand. They are appropriated for in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BORAH. That is, the Rock Creek Park men?

Mr. SMOOT. The Rock Creek Park policemen. Under that bill they get the $240 bonus. That applied to all the policemen in the park, but it is true that the amended bill, increasing the Metropolitan police, did not apply to the policemen in the Rock Creek Park.

Mr. BORAH. The place where we may settle that properly will be on the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and that is before the House of Representatives now.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate will bear that in mind when it is before the committee, so that it will take less time when it comes into the Senate if it comes out of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 19, to insert:

RIVER AND HARBOR WORK.

For payment of claims adjusted and settled under section 4 of the river and harbor appropriation act approved June 25, 1910, and certified to Congress during the present session in Senate Document No. 214, $956.63.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Military Establishment," on page 18, after line 1, to insert:

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

Telegraph and telephone systems: For the same purposes as specified under this title in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, the sum of $500,000 is hereby made available until June 30, 1920, from the appropriation "Signal Service of the Army" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919: Provided, That not to exceed $3,000 may be expended from the appropriation for "Signal Service of the Army" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, for tuition, laboratory fees, etc., for Signal Corps officers detailed to civilian technical schools for the purpose of pursuing technical courses of instruction along Signal Corps lines.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what the purpose of this amendment is and what its effect will be. As I remember, the general appropriation bill for the present fiscal year carries a very considerable appropriation for the Signal Service.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice that this is not an appropriation, but is merely a permission to use that much of the original appropriation, and it is used not only for the construction of new lines but also for the rental of lines which the Government does not own but is compelled to use at the various cantonments and places that are not yet abandoned and where in many cases they have troops.

They asked for nine hundred and odd thousand dollars, but after a severe grueling of the witnesses the committee was entirely satisfied that they ought to have at least $500,000, and that amount was allowed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess that I do not yet understand the full implication of this appropriation. I repeat that in the general appropriation bill, which provides for the Army and the Signal Corps specifically and takes care of all conditions up until the 30th of June of the present fiscal year, there was a large appropriation carried for the Signal Service Corps. That bill contemplated the retention and use of most, if not all, of existing camps. It seems to me that there should have been a diminution or a reduction in the appropriation, and that out of the appropriation made, in view of the fact that we are abandoning some of the camps, there would have been a portion of it to have been returned to the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. KING. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. WARREN. Let me read an extract from the testimony of Capt. Arnold, who is one of the witnesses appearing before the committee. I asked him what had been done with some other appropriations, and here is what he said:

Capt. ARNOLD. Yes, sir; but the Signal Corps, out of its $150,000,000 for 1919, covered into the Treasury a larger percentage than any other department, and did it promptly, and it was taken away from us before we had terminated our contracts, and we made some big savings along that line; because if we had gone on and completed contracts as other corps did, we would have used up a great deal more of the money and had much less to turn into the Treasury, and we would have been put to a good deal more expense for commercial telephone service; if we had gone on and continued work on these contracts instead of chopping them right square and cutting off all further expenditure.

That is only one paragraph of Capt. Arnold's testimony, but the entire testimony proves that they had been frugal. They have turned the money back into the Treasury. From the previous appropriation we simply allow them $500,000 now in order to enable them to go on and complete the contracts and do necessary work. They are in some cases operating over their own lines, but where they are paying out rentals we allow them to finish up the contracts.

Mr. KING. The Senator will bear in mind the fact that for some time after we entered the war the Signal Corps had charge of aircraft production. The two services operated together. Gen. Squiers, the Chief Signal Officer, had control of the aircraft production, and there was a large amount expended for the Signal Corps activities.

Mr. WARREN. When the Signal Corps was divided the money that had been appropriated for the Signal Corps was diverted largely to the aircraft branch of the service, and there was only enough left to carry on the operations of the Signal Service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will remember that there were about $27,000,000,000 appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. KING. And $9,000,000,000 was for the War Department.

Mr. SMOOT. About $9,000,000,000 was for the War Department. However, after the signing of the armistice there was an act of Congress taking from those appropriations—how much, I will ask the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. About eight or nine billion dollars in the different departments.

Mr. SMOOT. I am now speaking of the Army.

Mr. WARREN. I will give the exact amount to the Senator from Utah in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. In round numbers, I will say between three billion and four billion dollars. The Signal Service, among other services, was affected by that legislation. The Signal Service now finds there was too great an amount repealed from the appropriation and is now asking for $500,000 for the appropriation that has already been turned back into the Treasury of the United States. That expression, Mr. President, is not altogether accurate; under that legislation they were not allowed to expend the entire appropriation theretofore made, and now they are asking for $500,000 to meet expenses which they have incurred and are now asked to meet over and above that which was allowed them by the legislation which was passed revoking the previous appropriation. I was not present at the time the hearings were held, and I can not speak as to the details of this appropriation; but I take it for granted that the hearings will disclose all the facts.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in connection with what the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has just stated, I desire to say that the amount turned back from the Military Establishment was $6,856,835,124.35, $334,000,000 of which was for the Navy, but that left between six and seven billion dollars which was turned back from the War Department.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Wyoming, of course, means from the various appropriations which were made for all purposes.

Mr. WARREN. I said from the appropriations which were made for the Military Establishment.

Mr. KING. I understand; I recall the law very well, and I remember the representations which were made as to the unexpended balances of the various appropriations which had been made for the various departments, especially for the War and Navy Departments; but I also recall very distinctly—though I am not a member of the Military Affairs Committee or the Appropriations Committee, and of course therefore labor at a very great disadvantage over those Senators who are members—that there was a very liberal appropriation made for the Signal Service Corps, I think a full and ample appropriation, particularly——

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence—in view of the demobilization which was taking place and which has taken place. Therefore I can not understand the necessity of the appropriation which is now asked for in the pending deficiency bill.

Mr. WARREN. But of what avail is the money which we have provided after it is turned back into the Treasury? This money has been turned back and they have not enough left with which to complete the contracts which must be completed in order to save expense. They know what the work is; they know how much it will take to complete it; and they now ask from the sum which we heretofore appropriated that they may use $500,000. We probably should have allowed them the $900,000 for which they asked, but we chose to allow them about half of that sum.

Mr. KING. My contention is that the amount left in the hands of the Signal Corps was adequate for all legitimate and proper purposes in view of the demobilization that was so rapidly taking place in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what I had in mind when I stated the amount as being between three and four billion dollars were the authorizations for the Quartermaster Corps which were repealed. They amounted to $3,740,385,307. The authorizations for the Signal Service which were repealed amounted to $83,373,200. The total for the Military Establishment, as stated by the Senator from Wyoming, was $6,856,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, after line 15, to insert:

Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extensions, betterments, operations, and maintenance of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, the sum of $95,000 is made available from the appropriation for the "Signal Service of the Army," for the fiscal year 1919, to continue available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether that amendment has anything to do with the operation of the railroad in Alaska?

Mr. WARREN. It has nothing whatever to do with the operation of the railroad there, except as tolls are paid and use is made of the telegraph system. The telegraph line in Alaska, as I think the Senator knows, was started a number of years ago. The very interesting officer of the Army in charge of the matter carried his idea of industry to the enlisted men under his command in the Territory of Alaska, and for the little stipend that is paid extra to enlisted men who will work he built roads and telegraph systems there. The telegraph line was opened to commercial business, and the income, as I remember it, derived from it during some years ran as high as $170,000 or $180,000. That money accumulated, and on one or two, or perhaps three, occasions we have made appropriations out of that fund for the building of further lines. Finally, however, a contest was made and the claim was set forth that some of it was wanted for school purposes, and so forth. So it was thought best to turn it back into the Treasury as a miscellaneous asset. This item is to carry those telegraph lines farther and is really a matter of investment, which is profitable to the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 6 on page 19, the last item read being as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

For the medical and hospital department, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, the sum of $1,500,000 is made available from the appropriation "Medical and Hospital Department" for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the item of $1,500,000 for the Medical Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that it has been agreed that the committee amendments shall be first considered, and the item referred to by the Senator is not a committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I appreciate the fact that it is not, but I thought, perhaps, in the interest of economy of time, we might consider these items as we proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 19, after line 6, to insert:

MISCELLANEOUS.

For bridge across the Missouri River connecting the two tracts of land composing the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 19, after line 19, to insert:

The Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to expend from the unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made under the title "Armament of fortifications" for the construction of storage facilities, including necessary appurtenances, for ammunition and components thereof, for cannon, small arms, machine guns, and trench warfare, and for other ordnance material, not exceeding $6,600,000, which amount shall remain available during the fiscal year 1921: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is hereby authorized to expend such part, not exceeding $98,000, of the amount herein authorized as may be necessary for the purchase of land in the vicinity of Ogden, Utah, to be used as a site for an ammunition storage depot: Provided further, That no part of the construction work hereunder shall be done on a cost-plus percentage basis.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 20, at the end of line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That no part of the appropriations herein made or made available shall be used for the construction of permanent high-explosive storage facilities at or near Sparta, Wis.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is from the State of Wisconsin. It is a great State, and there certainly ought to be room for storage facilities elsewhere than at Sparta. I do not object to the amendment, but accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a protest from citizens of Sparta against the location of the storage facilities at that place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The protest referred to is as follows:

SPARTA, WIS., January 31, 1920.

Hon. IRVING L. LENROOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are sending you following resolution voicing the sentiment of this community. Will you interest yourself in our behalf?

Resolved by the citizens of Sparta, in mass meeting assembled, That we protest the establishment of the Sparta Military Reservation as an explosive depot and urge upon our representatives in Congress to exert their most vigorous efforts and influence in opposing such projects.

H. W. JEFFERSON, Mayor,
T. P. ABLE,
H. J. MASTERS,
R. A. MERRILL, Committee.

SPARTA PRODUCE EXCHANGE (INC.),
Sparta, Wis.

To the Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In that portion of your congressional district in which Sparta is situated and extending in all directions a distance of 15 miles or more the people have become very seriously disturbed concerning the War Department's action in storing large stores of high explosives on our military range at Camp Robinson, right in the midst of a densely populated section and within 4 miles from Sparta.

When Sparta and this district so heartily supported the establishing of a military range at Camp Robinson they did so presuming it would be all that the name implied. Far be it from their intentions to establish such a menace as would be a storage depot for the tremendous supply of high explosives as we now understand it is planned to store on the military range at Camp Robinson.

A bitter protest has arisen against our military range being converted into a storage depot for high explosives, and the following resolution was unanimously adopted at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Sparta Produce Exchange, copy of their signatures inclosed: Resolution——

Resolved, That the conversion of the military range at Camp Robinson into a United States arsenal for the storage of high explosives would violate the pledge made to the people of Sparta and surrounding territory, who so generously assisted in the establishing of the military range at Camp Robinson; that its conversion into a storage depot for high explosives will seriously depreciate property values on all property surrounding said depot; and be it further

Resolved, That the storing of high explosives on the military range at Camp Robinson is a great menace to Sparta and surrounding territory, and we the undersigned do urgently petition the War Department to discontinue the storage of high explosives at Camp Robinson and for the removal of explosives now stored on the military range at Camp Robinson.

Dated this 7th day of February and signed: F. KERN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 3 on page 21, the last item read being as follows:

Naval Records of the Rebellion: Not exceeding $15,500 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the continuation for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 of the publication of an edition of 11,000 copies of the official records of the Union and Confederate Navies, in the War of the Rebellion, which were continued and made available until June 30, 1918, by the act approved September 8, 1916, are further continued and made available until June 30, 1921.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not intend to attack this item, but, for information, I inquire of the chairman of the committee if it is not the practice to turn back into the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year all unexpended balances? It seems to me that that would be the proper policy; it is the only way that a proper system of bookkeeping can be maintained; and then, if there is further work to be done, an appropriation to cover the work could be made. But to carry appropriations along, as apparently has been done in the case of this particular item, from the year 1913–14, and make it available year after year because it is unexpended, instead of converting it into the Treasury, and then making reappropriations, will lead to confusion and to extravagance and waste and will permit the concealment of appropriations for an indefinite period of time. If that policy is pursued, it seems to me it ought to call for condemnation and lead the Appropriations Committee to a complete abolition of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this particular item has been running since 1913, having been extended from year to year since that time. This bill extends it until June 30, 1921, but it has been stated positively that this is the last request which will be made for the extension of this appropriation. Whether that will prove to be correct or not, I can not say; but Congress will have to determine whether or not it will be extended beyond the period mentioned in the bill. It seems to me that eight years is ample, and, so far as I am personally concerned, if this appropriation is not expended for the purposes named in the paragraph by June 30, 1921, I shall oppose any further extension.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the reason this appropriation was not expended was because of the war and the lessening of the number of men who were engaged in it because of war service, with the consequence that the work could not well be carried on until the war was over. In the last bill the item providing for carrying forward of this work went out in conference, I believe, because of a misunderstanding. This appropriation will enable the work to be finished. So far there have been completed a great many volumes, and this appropriation will enable the maps and indices, and so forth, to be prepared, which is an exceedingly important part of the work, and unless it is done all that has gone before is of little use.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. WARREN. This item is peculiar. I do not care to take the time to relate the peculiarities; but the Senator is right that unexpended balances should be turned back into the Treasury. Of course, the Senator is aware that the Constitution itself provides that for the Military Establishment Congress can only appropriate money two years ahead, but we oftentimes make appropriations available for that length of time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is a very fortunate thing that the Constitution contains that prohibition, because if that were not there I am afraid that with the lax methods which seem to have been pursued—and I do not say that by way of any criticism—we would be carrying these appropriations for an indefinite period. Like Mahomet's coffin, they would be suspended 'twixt heaven and earth. The money would not be in the Treasury; it would not be out of the Treasury. It would be carried in some suspended account, and it would be difficult for persons attempting to get an accurate statement of the financial affairs of the Government to understand whether it was an asset or whether it was a liability.

Mr. WARREN. I shall have to say, however, that we are out of order in discussing this matter at this time.

Mr. KING. Let me say in all kindness to the Senator that if the Committee on Appropriations fails to secure a reform in this respect I shall feel constrained to offer an amendment to the rules, if that method of procedure will reach the matter, requiring the Committee on Appropriations to so frame appropriation bills as to compel the turning back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year of all unexpended balances. If additional appropriations are required to complete unfinished projects, Congress, which is in session almost continuously, with the generosity and, indeed, prodigality which it exhibits toward meritorious—and too frequently unmeritorious—claims, will provide ample additional appropriations.

If a rule will not meet the situation referred to, I shall offer a bill which will require the departments and governmental agencies to cover into the Treasury all unexpended appropriations at the end of each fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Naval Establishment," subhead "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," on page 22, after line 1, to strike out:

Norfolk, Va., Navy Yard: For dry dock and accessories, to complete, exclusive of any profit to the contractor, $451,047.30.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 6, to insert:

For expenditures incident to the construction of the Pearl Harbor Dry Dock, as set forth in Senate Document No. 210, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, $128,260.60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of the Interior," subhead "National-park service," on page 24, after line 3, to insert:

For the construction of a log crib dam necessary for the protection of bridge over the Elk Fork of the Shoshone River on the Cody approach road to Yellowstone National Park, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Patent Office," on page 24, line 9, after the word "from," to strike out "February" and insert "March," and in line 19, after the words "in all," to strike out "$28,083.33" and insert "$22,466.67," so as to make the clause read:

For additional employees from March 1 to June 30, 1920, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Examiners—1 principal at $2,700, 2 first assistants at $2,400 each, 2 second assistants at $2,100 each, 2 third assistants at $1,800 each, 2 fourth assistants at $1,500 each; examiners of trade-marks and designs—1 second assistant at $2,100; 2 third assistants at $1,800 each; 2 fourth assistants at $1,500 each; clerks—1 of class 4 (versed in business administration), 4 of class 4, 8 of class 3, 10 of class 2; draftsmen—1 at $1,600; 1 at $1,400; translator of languages, $1,600; in all, $22,466.67.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to this item. A bill has been introduced increasing the number of employees in the Patent Office, and I wanted the Senator from Nebraska, who is chairman of the Patents Committee, to know that the increase of employees is taken care of in this bill. I will say to the Senator that really it ought to be taken care of at this time, if at any time. The Patent Office has been short of employees for a long time, and they are away behind in their work. If we are going to give them any extra employees, it ought to be done at this time rather than later.

Mr. KING. Will they be permanent employees?

Mr. SMOOT. They will, unless Congress reduces their number. These are regular statutory salaries, and when the legislative appropriation bill comes before the Senate the additional employees provided for in this paragraph will be added to it, and this appropriation will be carried on for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. This only goes to June 30, 1920.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask my colleague whether the investigations made by the committee demonstrate the necessity of a permanent increase in the personnel of this department?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, they do, and this is one of the departments of the Government that more than pays its way. As long as the business is there, and as long as the extra employees bring into the department more than sufficient returns to pay their compensation, I am perfectly willing that Congress should appropriate funds for that kind of a service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 26, after line 1, to insert:

Old Land Office Building: For labor and material required in the installation of a new ash tank and for a vacuum cleaner for water-tube boilers in the power plant located in the Old Land Office Building, Seventh and E Streets NW., $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "St. Elizabeths Hospital," on page 26, line 23, before the word "accounting," to strike out "The" and insert "Hereafter the," so as to make the clause read:

Hereafter the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized to credit the accounts of the special disbursing agent of St. Elizabeths Hospital with such amounts as he has or may hereafter pay in carrying out the provision of the sundry civil act of July 19, 1919, relating to the readjustment of salaries at the hospital, and the schedule of salaries and allowances for maintenance, where the latter is not provided by the hospital, approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 1 and November 25, 1919, respectively, or as may be modified hereafter by him, notwithstanding the act of April 6, 1914, or section 4839, Revised Statutes, United States, as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, was any real reason given for changing the word "The" to "Hereafter the"? That means, of course, that hereafter——

Mr. WARREN. I know just what it means, and it was duly considered by the subcommittee, and very carefully considered. It is in relation to the employees at the Government Hospital for the Insane. We opened that up by allowing the payment to employees out of lump-sum appropriations of such sums as were favorably passed upon by the Secretary of the Interior, the superintendent of the insane hospital, and, I believe, one other official, with a provision that they should not exceed the salaries that the same class of employees receive at other places in the same line of business. In order to retain those employees they have to know that the salary of the place is not going up and down. If we do not put in here the word "hereafter" to carry it along until we make some other provision, the superintendent of the insane asylum will be very much embarrassed.

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing I had in mind was that whenever we pass a law saying that hereafter it shall be the law, it never appears in future appropriation bills; and unless somebody goes and digs out appropriations of that class and calls attention to them, they will remain forever and the same provisions will apply, no matter what changed conditions may come about.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is giving a different shade to this from that intended. Of course what he says is true of such appropriations that have been, I think unfortunately, made in bills—for instance, for vocational education and for farm matters, where exact sums are provided for every succeeding year, and are so provided in the original laws—but this is simply a matter of providing from year to year, and there are two or three checks on it. The first is the check that in order to be expended it has to have the approval of the committee, composed, as I said, of the Secretary of the Interior and the others whom I have named; and then we have reports, and then we have to appropriate the sum necessary to cover. I do not believe we are taking any chance, because we can repeal it at any time. I think the Senator from Utah will agree with me that we have a very able superintendent in Dr. White.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, Mr. President, there is no doubt about that; but we do not know how long Dr. White will be there.

Mr. WARREN. This is the only thing he asked the committee for, and he asked for it with a great deal of earnestness. I could, of course, read into the RECORD his testimony.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall content myself by saying that this class of legislation ought to be stopped, and stopped quickly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 27, after line 9, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make regulations governing the disposal of articles produced by patients of St. Elizabeths Hospital in the course of their curative treatment, either by allowing the patient to retain same or by selling the articles and depositing the money received to the credit of the appropriation from which the materials for making the articles were purchased.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 24, page 27, the last paragraph being as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For miscellaneous items, including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $15,000, of which sum not to exceed $6,500 may be expended for telephone service and not to exceed $150 may be expended for street car fares.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I understand the rule is that where amendments are tendered by the committee they shall be disposed of before suggestions are made or amendments offered with respect to other parts of the bill. It seems to me, though, in the interest of the economy of time, that where perhaps, after an explanation, an amendment would not be offered to the general text of the bill, it would be best to make the interrogations with respect to such items as the bill is read, instead of coming back again after concluding the reading of the bill, because when the matter is taken up again the notes of the reporters and the RECORD would not show the provisions of the item under discussion. If the interrogation followed the reading of the item, then it would be intelligible.

I ask unanimous consent that amendments may be offered or questions propounded with respect to the text of the bill as we proceed without first disposing of all of the committee amendments.

Mr. WARREN. We can not, of course, give unanimous consent to change the unanimous-consent agreement already made.

Mr. KING. I did not know that that had been done.

Mr. WARREN. Unanimous consent was asked, immediately upon starting the consideration of the bill, to consider the bill for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. KING. Of course, then, I shall not ask to have the roll called in order to secure a quorum to ask for unanimous consent to alter that agreement.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Senator can make any observations he wishes to, but we must follow the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 29, after line 6, to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car fares not exceeding $200, and other necessaries, directly ordered by the Attorney General, $5,000.

For stationery for department and its several bureaus, $5,000.

For furniture and repairs, including carpets, file holders, and cases, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Detection and prosecution of crime," on page 29, line 24, after the word "notwithstanding," to insert "Provided further, That the sum of $75,000, in addition to that now provided by law, shall be available for the compensation of necessary employees serving at the seat of government," so as to make the clause read:

Appropriations under the Department of Justice for the fiscal year 1920 for detection and prosecution of crimes shall be available for advances made by the disbursing clerk of said department, when authorized and approved by the Attorney General, the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That the sum of $75,000, in addition to that now provided by law, shall be available for the compensation of necessary employees serving at the seat of government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that the word "further," on line 25, page 29, be stricken out as unnecessary.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly. It is the only proviso in that paragraph.

Mr. KING. But what I rose for primarily was this: Does the Senator know what this $75,000 is for? And is he very clear that this is not available from some appropriation heretofore made?

Mr. WARREN. This does not appropriate. We have already appropriated the money and prescribed the amount which could be expended within the District, and they want to expend the sum already appropriated and $75,000 more on account of the extra work occasioned by this raid on Bolsheviks and others, and, of course, to arrange for the guarding of whisky and other matters that have loaded more work on the District than it formerly had.

Mr. KING. It is for the payment, then, of employees in the District?

Mr. WARREN. All of it. They asked for $100,000 privilege, and we told them we could give them only $75,000, after agreeing that the money was really necessary, and they will try to get through on it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this simply means that there will be employees additional in the District of Columbia sufficient to consume the $75,000. The Department of Justice has been adding to the number of employees for months past. It does seem to me that some time or other a halt must be called. For months past I have received no report with reference to the number of employees in the different departments of the Government that did not show additional employees in the Department of Justice in the District. I can understand that there would have to be more employees in that department out in the field, but I fail to see how any Bolsheviki can be detected by a lot of employees in the District of Columbia, and I fail to see where the detection of crime is going to be made by having a lot more employees brought into the District.

It seems to me that the amount is asked to be inserted simply because the amount of money already appropriated will not be expended, and they want to take the $75,000 to put more employees into the District.

I think from this time on I shall place in the RECORD the report furnished me every month as to the number of employees in the District of Columbia in every department of the Government, and I hope that Senators and Representatives will note the increase that is going on in a great many of the departments. When will it cease? Never as long as there is a dollar to pay them. This only gives $75,000 more to bring more employees into the District of Columbia.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, unless the committee are satisfied with this item, I think it ought to be disallowed. The Senator from Wyoming made a statement with regard to the enforcement of the law which provides for the deportation of certain aliens. Senators are familiar with the action of the Government in causing the arrest of a large number of aliens who were subject to deportation from the United States. I rise merely for the purpose of stating that I have observed in the press recently that out of the large number arrested for deportation many of them have been discharged or released on bail.

We have heard a great deal about raids made upon Bolsheviki and anarchists and others subject to deportation from the United States. Several hundred were deported to Russia some time ago, but if the reports appearing in the press are true many who, under the provisions of the act of Congress of October, 1918, are subject to deportation are being released on bail, and no present purpose seems to exist to speedily send them out of the United States. Several weeks ago I introduced a bill transferring from the Department of Labor to the Department of Justice the administration of the laws with respect to the deportation of aliens. It would seem that some agency of the Government is delinquent in enforcing the law against those who are seeking the overthrow of this Government by force and violence and who come within the terms of the act of October, 1918. If there were ample grounds for the arrest of hundreds recently "gathered in by the Government," and I think there were in most instances, they ought to be promptly deported.

Recently some ministers were very much agitated because we were deporting aliens, and sought to have officers of the law nullify its provisions. I fancy that some of those ministers would do better service for their country and for the cause of humanity if they would preach a little more of Christ and Him crucified and mix a little less in affairs with which they are unfamiliar.

There was a demand well-nigh universal in this Nation that the anarchists and the communists and those who followed the proclamations of the third international at Moscow be deported not only because their doctrines were inimical to the perpetuity of free institutions but because the program of the Moscow conference demanded the destruction by force and violence, by revolution and bloodshed, of this Nation and other nations. The Bolsheviki of Russia called the Moscow conference for the purpose of devising methods of carrying on a world-wide revolution and the destruction of all law and order and all governments, and at that international conference declared war upon all nations and the overthrow of the present social structure and the rule of a tyrannous, cruel, barbarous despotism called the dictatorship of the proletariat. Lenin and Trotski had their disciples here seeking to execute this wicked and diabolical policy. Lenin and Trotski, professing, as they are doing now, friendship for other nations in order to lift the blockade and seduce this Nation and other nations into some sort of a treaty with them, are aiming at the destruction of all government, and they are sending their spies and their representatives and their criminal agents to propagandize this and other nations and to undermine law and order and to destroy the governments of the world. Hundreds of their followers are in the United States. Hundreds of them were arrested. They ought to be deported instead of being released. The Department of Labor, that has to do with the enforcement of the law, ought to carry out the terms of the statutes or it ought to confess its utter inability to discharge the duties required by law, in which event we could transfer to some other department the administration of the statutes of the United States which provide for the deportation of anarchists and certain other classes of undesirable aliens.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the amendment is not agreeable to the Senator. I am perfectly willing to strike it out.

Mr. KING. I do not know enough about it. The Senator knows what the situation is.

Mr. WARREN. The information that we had was such that I thought it ought to go in and go to conference.

Mr. KING. I do not know enough about it to justify a request for its rejection.

Mr. SMOOT. Really, Mr. President, I think it ought to go out. I do not think we ought to have any more employees in the District of Columbia than we have at the present time. If the Senator from Wyoming has no objection, I think it should go out.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 2, to insert:

UNITED STATES COURTS.

The appropriation contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of March 1, 1919, for salaries of district judges, shall be available for the salaries of all United States district judges lawfully entitled thereto for the fiscal year 1920, or any portion thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 33, after line 4, to insert:

For making alterations to vessels transferred from the Navy Department, $20,500, to continue available during the fiscal year 1921.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in connection with this item and the other items under the head of "Coast and Geodetic Survey," I wish to ask the Senator if the various items, $140,100, $22,370, $68,000, and $20,500 are deemed necessary? The Senator will remember that the Coast and Geodetic Survey had a very liberal appropriation in the last general appropriation bill. The other day we placed the Coast and Geodetic Survey officers in a bill which increased their compensation 31 per cent. Complaint was made that they could not keep men in the service, and that a large number of them had resigned.

It would seem, if that were true, that instead of there being a deficit—because we made a very liberal appropriation—there ought to be some money available to be turned into the Treasury of the United States. But it would appear that the more men leave the service of the Government the larger the appropriation and the greater the deficit.

I do not understand, in view of the very extensive appropriation which we made, and in view of the slowing down of the activities of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, instead of there being a deficit there ought to be money available to be turned into the Treasury of the United States.

Will the Senator tell us why these deficits exist and why it is necessary, just before we are to pass a general appropriation bill for the coming fiscal year, that we should make these large appropriations? My inquiry, of course, would not apply so much to the pending amendment for making alterations to vessels transferred from the Navy Department, $20,500.

Mr. WARREN. That stands by itself, I will say to the Senator, and is for a vessel turned over to it which is unseaworthy. The Navy, complaining of not having sufficient funds to repair its ships, turned this ship over, and it was believed right for the survey to have money to repair it, as there was no money available for that purpose.

On the other hand, last year we appropriated $115,000, and they want $51,300 to carry the matter through. The House believed they were right in putting in $37,000. We made examinations accordingly and felt that they should have it, because there has been a great demand for the work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, because of the great number of ships built, not only for the war, but we are putting out many more for the merchant marine and those engaged in shipping. All these have a right to ask for charts from the Government and are asking so numerously that the business done before the war along that line is not comparable at all with the amount of business that is exacted of the department now.

The committee of the Senate believed that the work had to be finished sooner or later, and now is the time to go on and finish it. We believe that the amount the House put in should be retained.

Going on to the other amendment, where they had $250,000 and wanted $106,000, they are given $57,000. Another place where they had $400,000 and asked for $84,000 they got $68,000.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that the amount should be appropriated now in view of the fact that the general appropriation bill will take care of this agency as it will all other departments and agencies of the Government?

Mr. WARREN. That is for next year, however.

Mr. KING. That is for the fiscal year commencing July 1.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do believe that, if we are going to continue to support the Coast and Geodetic Survey, now is the time to be liberal with them, and then we can cut down in the future, because there is more or less of the work that is, I will not say temporary, but is in the nature of a flow that exceeds the call heretofore, and it must, of course, lessen before long.

I do not want to go into the matter of the uncharted seas, but the Senator knows that there is a great deal of work to do. Up in the Alaskan waters every now and then a ship goes down, and many people and cargoes are lost because of rocks unknown and theretofore unseen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 39, after line 15, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Lucy Day Martin and Thomas Staples Martin, jr., heirs at law of Hon. Thomas S. Martin, late a Senator from the State of Virginia, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 19, to insert:

For the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle for the official use of the office of the Secretary of the Senate, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I was going to inquire the necessity for the item which has just been read. It seems to be for the purchasing of an automobile for the use of the Secretary of the Senate, and the amendment following that seems to be for the purchase of "motor vehicles for carrying the mails and for official use of the offices of the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, $5,000." Is this an appropriation to purchase an automobile for the use of the Secretary of the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. It is. The Senator desires some information. I also desired information and received it.

The Sergeant at Arms and Secretary of the Senate receive a given salary and formerly a certain amount was provided for teams—horses and carriages, harness and equipment, and so forth. Of course, that has been done away with, and now motor vehicles are used. Most of the cars now in use are some that were taken from the War Department. They had been long in use. The Secretary of the Senate received one Hudson car, which is now in the repair shop. He has no conveyance provided, except as we may provide one for him. We all draw our money at the Secretary's office here, so do all the employees, on the 15th and at the end of each month. Large amounts of money are required to meet the payments, so that two employees go every day to the Treasury, and usually twice a day, and sometimes several times in a day, to transact business of a financial nature. In this work expedition is required, and it is also necessary to guard against attack. The Secretary himself may be called upon suddenly to go almost anywhere.

Now, as to the Sergeant at Arms, whether right or wrong, the Sergeant at Arms has, I think, four or more cars or automobiles, if you can call "flivers" automobiles. He himself has a good one, I think.

What causes the expenditure of the $5,000 is that the Senate, in its wisdom through its Committee on Contingent Expenses—of which I have no control, not being a member and not having been so for years—authorized the employment of some four or five so-called chauffeurs, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. Then there come naturally the repairs of the motor engines, and so forth, that must be paid for.

Mr. KENYON. For what are these different automobiles used?

Mr. WARREN. They are not only used for the carriage of mail but for the transportation of commodities of any kind which have to be carried. Of course, sometimes late at night some of them are used for Senators to take them home from late Senate sessions, but not very often; that occurs only occasionally. I think the Senator will notice that cars are passing very often which are marked "Senate," with loads or partial loads of various kinds.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it may be that it is necessary to furnish an automobile for the Secretary of the Senate——

Mr. WARREN. I think it is highly necessary to provide transportation for the conduct of the business; it has been so considered since I have been in the Senate, and was so considered many years before that.

Mr. KENYON. Then the motor-propelled car is used for the purpose of carrying on the business of the office of the Secretary of the Senate and not in any event for the personal use of the Secretary of the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. It is not used in that way. It is for the use of the Senate, and it is in daily use for that purpose.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if the cars which are used by the Sergeant at Arms—some four or five of them, as I understand the Senator—might not be employed for the same purposes as that for which the Secretary of the Senate employs cars?

Mr. WARREN. They are used for similar purposes; they are used, as I have stated, for mail and other purposes. The Sergeant at Arms and the Assistant Sergeant at Arms have, I think, a Ford, and the property clerk, who comes and goes and has a great deal to do, has a car. I think, however, it is his own. But these were old cars when they were taken. These Sergeant at Arms officers are not asking for new cars, but that those which they have shall be kept up. I think one or two of them are, probably, out of commission.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether this is the first time that an automobile has been furnished to the Secretary of the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I am inclined to think that one was furnished to the Secretary of the Senate four or five years ago.

Mr. KING. Did Mr. Baker, the predecessor of the present Secretary of the Senate, have a car?

Mr. WARREN. I think he did, and a very fine one.

Mr. KING. Was it paid for by the Government?

Mr. WARREN. It was.

Mr. KING. All I can say is that it was a very unwise and improper expenditure, in my opinion.

Mr. WARREN. How I came to know that it was a fine car is that I, with others, happened to be summoned to the White House once or twice and was carried down in that car. Is the Senator from Utah inquiring as to the former Secretary of the Senate or the former Sergeant at Arms?

Mr. KING. I am inquiring as to the former Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. The car of which I spoke was that of the former Sergeant at Arms, but the former Secretary of the Senate also had one.

Mr. KING. Furnished by the Government?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes. Not only that, but before these officers had cars they had, as I have said, horses and wagons and equipage. They had those for some time.

Mr. KING. Under the economies, Mr. President, of the Federal Government, of course it has become necessary that we should furnish cars for a large number of employees of the Government. I notice upon the streets every morning as I come to the Senate scores and, indeed, hundreds of cars used by the War Department; and I am advised that these cars are used by the families of officers. That may be proper; it may be that it is a proper application of the money which is wrung from the taxpayers of the United States to furnish cars for the officers of the Army and the Navy who in such great abundance—such rich abundance—inhabit the city of Washington.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator from Utah has said, there are a good many cars that officers of the Army are using. I have not been fortunate enough lately to see ladies riding in any of them, but at one time here, as the Senator will probably recall, it was almost a law in this District that he with his car or I with mine if we passed a lady in the street who was a war worker we should pick her up and take her to her destination. In that case Army automobiles were probably used the same as ours were.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator from Wyoming is not attempting to justify that which everybody knows is an improper use by the War Department of automobiles in this District.

Mr. WARREN. On the contrary, we have under a provision of law, in the enactment of which I participated, placarded them all, so that we shall know that they belong to the Government; and under the rules and restrictions we have imposed it is positively forbidden that they shall be used for any but official purposes.

Mr. KING. Attention has been called upon a number of occasions to the improper use of Government vehicles by officials of the War Department and various employees of the Government. Millions of dollars have been expended for this purpose. I think it is a good time now to draw the line and call a halt.

If anyone is entitled to a vehicle, I am sure the present efficient and competent Secretary of the Senate is, and I should dislike to single him out for the purpose of enforcing a rule of economy; but I think we ought to begin somewhere, and I suggest to the committee if it would not be wise now to cut out this item and begin pruning with respect to the use of vehicles by so many of the employees of the Government.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I consider this provision necessary to the convenience of the Senate, and I am not prepared to advocate that it be eliminated. I hope the item may be sustained.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, notwithstanding the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I am very doubtful whether this item has ever before appeared in any appropriation bill. Certainly I have never seen it, and if I had seen it I would have objected to it. As the Senator from Utah has said, it is now one of the serious evils in the District of Columbia that probably hundreds of public officials are riding in automobiles provided by the Government and are using them for private and social purposes. If the Senate sets this example of giving to its Secretary an automobile, which the chairman of the committee admits he may use for his personal and individual purposes, the Senate will be in no position——

Mr. WARREN. I do not admit anything of the kind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator did a few minutes ago.

Mr. WARREN. I made no such statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator said a few moments ago that of course the Secretary would use it for his personal purposes, although it was for official use.

Mr. WARREN. So far as the facts are concerned, I never knew of his using it for anything of a personal purpose. Does the Senator think that when, as sometimes happens, $100,000 has to be brought up to the Capitol from the Treasury that some clerk should go to the department and bring it back on foot?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senate possesses automobiles that can be used for that purpose. The Sergeant at Arms has a number of automobiles, mail-carrying automobiles, and others, and I have not any doubt that that can be provided for without assigning an automobile to the Secretary.

This seems a small matter in its relation to one public official, but it is a bad example to set to the District and to the other departments of the Government; and we as a legislative body are in no position to criticize administrative officers if we provide for employees of the Senate automobiles which they may use. If the automobile is purchased as necessary for the use of the Senate, it ought to be for the use of the Senate and not for the use of any official of the Senate; there ought not to be any possibility that an official of the Senate can use it for personal or individual purposes.

Mr. WARREN. It is nearly 30 years since I first came to the Senate, and, although I may be wrong about this, I do not remember any appropriation bill that contained an appropriation for automobiles for the Army or other branch of the Government that has not been discussed here and the extravagance denounced—and properly so—and laws have been enacted so far as they could be enacted to stop the practice. Of course, now that the question comes up as to an automobile for the Secretary of the Senate, if the Senate feel that the custom that I found here 30 years ago, and that has been followed ever since—to furnish the Secretary a conveyance—is wrong, I shall submit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall certainly ask for a roll call on it and put the matter on record, because I t[illegible] it is an evil that ought to be stopped. It is not simply an evil here, but it extends through all the departments, and it is something for which we are responsible. We permit these people to use these automobiles for their own personal benefit. Here is an automobile which it is proposed to purchase for the use of the Secretary—it is stated for his official use. It is always stated to be for official use; but we know that after they have gotten them for official use they always use them for individual and personal purposes, and we ought not to set that example. If we purchase an automobile it ought to be for the use of the Senate, and individuals should not use it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will notice the way this reads:

For the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle for the official use of the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I noticed it; yes. They always are purchased for official use and they are constantly used for personal use.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator question my statement that the Secretary has to go to the Treasury nearly every day in the year?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have Senate automobiles that can be sent on that errand.

Mr. WARREN. Of course we have them, and they are in constant use, but we do not have many, and those that we have are continually in demand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Here in the next paragraph we provide—

For maintaining, exchanging, and equipping motor vehicles for carrying the mails, and for official use of the offices of the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If we have freight automobiles for that purpose——

Mr. WARREN. They all have to be repaired, and, as I explained to the Senator a few minutes ago, part of this $5,000 is for paying chauffeurs, under a provision which was put through the Senate to hire three or four and pay them from the contingent fund of the Senate. This when the Senator and his party were in control of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have never before seen this item in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. It has been here right along. It is not the fault of the Committee on Appropriations that the Senator has not seen it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator state now that the Secretary has an automobile?

Mr. WARREN. He has what remains of a Hudson automobile that was turned over to him that came from the War Department, and he states that it is unfit for use and can not be used now because it is worn out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator state how it happened to come from the War Department?

Mr. WARREN. Because the War Department, at one time or another, have delivered automobiles quite lavishly to other departments. In fact, we legislated that they should turn them over. Not only that, but they have turned over thousands of them to the Post Office Department for road making and other purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has assured us that we have been putting items in appropriation bills for the purchase of an automobile for the Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, he states that the Secretary is using one that he acquired from the War Department, a second-hand car.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Those statements hardly comport. Which is true? Have we been furnishing the Secretary with an automobile heretofore?

Mr. WARREN. We have; and I said to the Senator, and I will say it again, that we heretofore provided transportation for the office of the Secretary who preceded the present one, and we provided one for the Secretary before that. We have provided, as I say, all these years for a conveyance that has been considered necessary, and we have always appropriated to maintain that vehicle, whether it be a horse and buggy, or whether it be a car.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator? The fact is that the Secretary of the Senate does a banking business, among many other functions which he performs.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. And that many times daily, certainly once every day, he is compelled to communicate, in person or by his representative, with some bank which acts as a clearing house for his financial office. It is true that the Secretary of the Senate has had the use of a motor car since some time before my service in the Senate began. The one that is now being used, according to my information, is pretty well worn out and almost useless.

Mr. WARREN. What the Senator says is true. The car goes down in the morning for currency which is required by Senators, and goes down in the afternoon usually to deposit checks that the Senators ask may be deposited out of their salaries, or checks that are cashed in the office on their own banks, so that there are at least two trips a day, and sometimes many more.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, can the Senator state what number of motor cars the Senate now possesses.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate has one for the Sergeant at Arms, one for the Assistant Sergeant at Arms, and there is a third one, I am inclined to think, used by the property clerk, and I think there is one that, like this one, has passed beyond repair that came from the War Department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In addition to that, have we mail motor cars?

Mr. WARREN. No. I am giving the Senator the total number of automobiles and trucks as I understand it to be. The language is "motor-propelled vehicles," as the Senator will notice.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How many does that make?

Mr. WARREN. I should say altogether they have probably five there, and maybe more, and that would cover everything in that line. Of course, the Library of Congress have the trucks that go and come with their mail and to deliver their literature; and in fact every department of the Government that has to transport merchandise has to have either teams or motor cars, usually motor cars. In fact, they can not afford to keep horses at the present price of feed for them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know whether the Senator has procured the notes, so as to see what was said about the private use of this car?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator said that the Secretary's car was used for private purposes, and I said that it was not. I have not seen the notes, but I hope the Senator will convince himself on the subject.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought the Senator had sent for the notes.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know whether they are here or not. The Senator's charge was that I said that this car was for the Secretary's personal purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No.

Mr. WARREN. I ask whether that is true or not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; my inquiry was addressed to the Senator from Wyoming as to whether the Secretary might use the car for his private or personal benefit, and I understood the Senator from Wyoming to state that he could.

Mr. WARREN. I remember no such statement; quite to the contrary, because I never had that idea. I have been fighting here for years to bring about just what the Senator is fighting for, but I believe in fighting over something larger than one automobile for a servant of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, the position of the Senator, I take it, is that this car, if purchased, could not be used for personal or social or private purposes, but only for official use?

Mr. WARREN. That will be with the honor of the Secretary; but the appropriation certainly provides for its use only for official purposes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator answer the question in that way—that it could not be used properly for personal and social purposes?

Mr. WARREN. It could not be used properly under this appropriation for purely personal purposes; no.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the ranking member of the Foreign Relations Committee if he knows how many automobiles were kept at the Hotel Crillon during the peace conference in Paris, and if he has any definite information of the cost charged to and paid out of the President's civil list?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I might reply to the Senator by suggesting to him that in view of his statement yesterday that he might abandon his Republican associates if they did not save the Senator from Michigan from expulsion from the Senate, he should, in view of his intention, treat the Democratic side with a little more consideration at this time and not embarrass us by any questions that might be difficult to answer.

Mr. SHERMAN. There will be no embarrassment at all; but I want the information and I have not got it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We like to view the Senator as a possible recruit over here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair's understanding was that the Senator's inquiry was addressed to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if there is any subject on earth that has not been discussed while this bill has been before the Senate I hope it may now be trotted out and fought out on the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I would complete the circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 40, after line 22, to insert:

For maintaining, exchanging, and equipping motor vehicles for carrying the mails, and for official use of the offices of the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 41, to insert:

For fuel, oil, cotton waste, and advertising, exclusive of labor, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 2, to insert:

For the Capitol: For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, fiscal year 1919, $4,966.79.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the amendment just read makes an appropriation that is applicable to the Senate kitchens and restaurants, both in the Capitol Building and in the Senate Office Building.

If there is a civil establishment in the city more needless and less profitable than the restaurant in the Senate Office Building, I do not know what it is. Why it has been continued has always been a subject of some curiosity on my part. If it is designed for the benefit of employees of the Senate, we have supplied them with a tunnel and with electric cars, of which they may avail themselves without any difficulty, and take an appetizer in the shape of a ride before they appease their hunger over in the restaurant here. If it is designed for the general public, perhaps it is sufficient to say that the general public do not know anything about it.

If it is designed to give employment to a few more employees—and that is about what it amounts to—then the sooner it is dispensed with the better.

I have an office on the same floor, and consequently I pass the restaurant every day. Sometimes there are people in there engaged in satisfying the wants of the inner man, and sometimes not. Now, this is a small item, and, of course, it is hardly worth the time that I am occupying in calling the attention of the Senate to it; but I do not know. We say we must find some point somewhere as an economic start from which we can proceed, with the intention expressed by both parties in all their national platforms, to economize in the public administration. I have endeavored to find that particular starting point here on many occasions, but in vain. Now, I want to see if we can not start with the restaurant in the Senate Office Building, because I am satisfied that once we can get a send-off we may be able to make a record.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I think I can give the Senator from Colorado some information on the restaurant in the Senate Office Building.

The building as originally constructed provided for that restaurant, and it was conducted up until about a year ago and then abandoned. There was a great deal of complaint made on behalf of the employees of Senators in the Senate Office Building of being deprived of the opportunity of going in the building to some place where they could get a light luncheon; so that the Committee on Rules, after giving the matter full consideration, concluded that in a limited way, and at a reduced cost and a reduced service, they would establish a buffét lunch in the room that had been originally provided for that purpose. There was another reason, and it was quite an important reason. It relieved the congestion at the noon hour in the main Senate restaurant; and we have found that while it is not operated at a profit—neither is the larger restaurant operated at a profit—it is a very great convenience to the young women and young men in the Senate Office Building, and many persons employed in the Capitol go over there, on account of the luncheons being served more cheaply than they are in the main restaurant. That was the reason why the Committee on Rules decided to reestablish it in a modest way.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has deprived me of the comfort of finding a starting point of economy in the Senate restaurant. I knew some one would blight my rising hopes and direct my efforts to some other item of this or some other bill, where, I suppose, I shall meet with the same conclusion. Of course, the item is small; and if my distinguished friend assures me that it is necessary, in the opinion of the present Committee on Rules, I shall endeavor to conceal my disappointment by directing attention to the next item.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let me comfort the Senator a little. This bill, as reported, contained between two and three million dollars less than the bill that came from the House.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I noticed that in the Senator's report.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows how seldom that has ever occurred, if in his life he ever saw it occur before, in this kind of a bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I have known it to occur once or twice before, but not on the same scale. However, the bill is not through the committee of conference yet, and I am not going to bark until I get out of the woods. I am satisfied that the Senator has done his best; but inasmuch as the House vociferously pledged itself to economy, I very much fear that a considerable part of this $2,000,000 saving will disappear in the compromise.

Now, Mr. President, without occupying any more of the time of the Senate than is absolutely necessary, I want to call attention to the next amendment, which I will relieve the Secretary—who has been hard at work all day—by reading myself:

Senate Office Building: For securing plans for the construction of an additional section to the Senate Office Building to be placed along First Street east, and for preparation of drawings for the interior and approaches to the entire building, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, labor and material, to be expended by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, under the supervision of the Senate Office Building Commission, $2,500.

That is a small item, also, but it is evidently designed to precede the construction of an additional section to the Senate Office Building, to be placed along First Street; and I am unable to conjecture what possible need there is for this addition to the Senate Office Building. It is constructed for the use of 96 men and their aids, and it is about as large as the House building, which is constructed for the use of 435 men and their aids. I think there is as much waste space in the Senate Office Building as in any public building in this country—huge rooms that are sometimes, but seldom, used; one magnificent room that never has been used, as I am informed, except on one occasion, and that was for the drawing of numbers for the draft in 1917 and 1918. Now, what possible need is there at this time for even going to the extent of drawing plans for a section of a building where 96 men have an average of two and a half rooms apiece, with a good many rooms on one floor, I understand, that are still available?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WARREN. This expenditure, to really complete what was intended in the first place—that is, complete the office building—does not indicate any early expenditure in constructing the additional wing. The Senator himself remembers that he took the committee to task at one time; perhaps I ought not to say that, but he said that the building ought to be finished and some stairways put in at once where they had not yet been put in.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I remember that.

Mr. WARREN. I remember the very proper suggestion I received once from the Vice President, that something ought to be done. There was a building committee that was appointed originally to go on and complete the building. Of course, the members of the original committee have passed away. The present chairman of that committee is the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the other two members are members of the Committee on Rules. It is considered necessary to have these plans ready to proceed so far as finishing the building up to these little matters of steps and stairs to which the Senator has alluded and to have the plans if we ever want to complete the building.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if I understand the logic of my genial friend from Wyoming, it amounts to this: Because I complained that the stairs and steps and some other deficiencies ought to be added to the building for its completion, he proposes to provide plans for the building of an entirely new section. If my efforts at accomplishing something are to bear that sort of fruit, the sooner I get out of the Senate or, at best, take my seat, the better off the taxpayers will be.

I might say that if plans for the purpose of constructing the steps needed for the entrance of the building nearest the Union Station can not be furnished otherwise, I can draw them myself, and I will not charge the Government a cent.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. And if it be necessary to extend my architectural efforts a little further, I think I can supply a few doors that may be needed. I had no idea when I suggested those additions that the committee was going to take advantage of it and propose to build an entire new section of the building. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I do not wish to thwart the Senator from Colorado in his admirable endeavors to economize, but if he knew anything about the trials and tribulations of the room clerk of the Senate, the position which I happen to occupy, he would know that there is a real demand for the completion of the building. Congress is in practically continuous session. It is true that the House of Representatives has only a building that is, perhaps, one-fourth larger than the Senate Office Building, and it is an outrage that Members of the House shall be practically limited to one room.

Three rooms are really essential to the work of a Senator. There are 32 Senators who have but two rooms. There is scarcely a Senator who does not have to crowd into one of those rooms two or three clerks, and it is almost impossible for a Senator to transact the business in his office under those circumstances.

As the Senator from Wyoming said, it is not contemplated that the building shall be immediately finished, but that there shall be some preliminary steps taken looking toward its final completion. I understand that the House contemplates asking for another building, probably of the same size as the existing building; and if it does, it ought to have it. That would not give them more than an average of two rooms apiece.

I sincerely hope that we may be able to take this preliminary step.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, continuing my references to my own architectural capabilities, I am satisfied that I could supply the needed extra rooms in the present structure by providing for partitions in four or five of the enormous rooms in that building which are never used. While my sympathies go out to the poor Members of the House who are obliged to get along with one room, the very fact that they are able to do it indicates that we are somewhat extravagant in insisting upon three rooms apiece for each Member of this body.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator speaks in a large way of four or five great rooms that are never used. I know of but one.

Mr. THOMAS. I said "never used"; I mean used only occasionally.

Mr. LODGE. What other rooms are never used?

Mr. THOMAS. They are occasionally used.

Mr. LODGE. I think they are all used. I think they are all attached to some committee.

Mr. THOMAS. Take the room marked "Conference of the minority." That is used very seldom. The present minority has its conference room in the Capitol Building. It is used, of course, for various investigations. We can not carry on 60 investigations at the same time without occasionally using some of those rooms.

Mr. LODGE. I think they are all in use except the great room the Senator spoke of, the minority conference room.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be that in the sense that they are used occasionally, that is true.

Mr. LODGE. The minority conference room we occupied until a year ago, and now the minority has the conference room we had, and the majority has none.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator plans to allow the majority to get along without a room, we will try to get along without a room, too.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there is a great deal of space there that can be cut up. Of course, there are rooms there that can be cut up, but we must have some large rooms where hearings can be held. There are none in the Capitol that are fit for the purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. I would not sacrifice them all, but I think additional space can be had there.

Mr. WARREN. May I call the Senator's attention, following what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, to the fact that the House Members mostly serve on one committee, and only one if it is an important committee. They have less clerks and less business and less people calling their attention to various matters, so that they can better endure the crowded offices and the lesser number of clerks than can Senators.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think this is no time for the Senate to increase its office accommodations or to go to the extent of taking preliminary steps in that direction. The need for public buildings and of repairs to public buildings in other sections of the country is much more insistent than any such need here. For example, the old customhouse in the city of Denver can be converted into an excellent office building at an expense of not to exceed $25,000 and save the Government in rents a good deal more than that during the first two years after completion.

Mr. WARREN. Are Government officials in Denver paying rent?

Mr. THOMAS. They are.

Mr. WARREN. Is the Federal building in Denver, the one that occupies a whole block, overrun?

Mr. THOMAS. The Federal building is badly overrun—that is, the old Federal building.

Mr. WARREN. What about the new public building, as well as the old Federal building?

Mr. THOMAS. I am talking about the old one. I am informed by the custodian that he can save more than $25,000 if he can get that amount of money for the purpose of cutting up the spaces occupied by the postal department and converting those spaces into office rooms. They are badly needed. Of course we all know that the Government bureau service is constantly expanding in the larger places throughout the country, and particularly in the public-domain States.

Mr. WARREN. To finish my inquiry, I know something, of course, of the Federal buildings in Denver, Colo., and the mint——

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; Denver is indebted to the Senator very largely for the last building.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that any one who is acquainted with the public buildings in Denver and the number of men employed in them, the amount of space which they occupy, would desire very much to increase the facilities of Senators and Representatives here, because, by comparison, they are very much better provided for in those public buildings than we are here in the way of public buildings for Members of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not agree with the Senator. I think we are not anywhere nearly so well provided for out in the sections to which I refer as we are here.

Since the enactment of the prohibition act, which is being enforced, of course, throughout the country, since the widely extended responsibilities of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue consequent upon the revenue act, the demand for space has increased, I think, out of all proportion to the demand for space by Senators and Representatives. We are saving at the spigot and wasting at the bunghole by refusing to consider appropriations for repairs of that kind, and at the same time presenting the spectacle to the country of spending money for our own comfort and convenience when that would seem under all the circumstances to be ample at present.

I therefore respectfully submit to the Senate that the appropriation of $2,500 to which I have called attention should be stricken from the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question first is on the amendment on page 41, lines 3 to 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment on page 41, lines 10 to 18.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," on page 43, line 19, after "1920," to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$800,000," so as to make the clause read:

For public printing, public binding, and paper for public printing and binding, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 19, to insert:

Hereafter enrolled bills and resolutions of either House of Congress shall be printed on parchment or paper of suitable quality as shall be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 3, after the words "Interior Department," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$15,000," so as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding for the Interior Department, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 5, after the words "Department of Labor," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$25,000," so as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding for the Department of Labor, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 9, after the words "Treasury Department," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

For printing and binding for the Treasury Department, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 45, line 5, before the word "namely," to insert "and Senate Document No. 219," so as to make the clause read:

For payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims and reported to Congress during the present session in House Document No. 601 and Senate Document No. 219, namely,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 8, after the words "Navy Department," to strike out "$188.88" and insert "$451.24," so as to make the clause read:

Under the Navy Department, $451.24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$1,891.51" and insert "$5,156.87," so as to make the total read:

In all, $5,156.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 11, to insert:

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in an Indian depredation case, certified to Congress in Senate Document No. 220, of the present session, $1,115; said judgment to be paid after the deductions required to be made under the provisions of section 6 of the act approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for the adjustment and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," shall have been ascertained and duly certified by the Secretary of the Interior to the Secretary of the Treasury, which certification shall be made as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and such deductions shall be made according to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, having due regard to the educational and other necessary requirements of the tribe or tribes affected; and the amounts paid shall be reimbursed to the United States at such times and in such proportions as the Secretary of the Interior may decide to be for the interests of the Indian Service: Provided, That the said judgment shall not be paid until the Attorney General shall have certified to the Secretary of the Treasury that there exist no grounds sufficient, in his opinion, to support a motion for a new trial or an appeal of said cause.

The above judgment shall not be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, under the head of "Audited claims," subhead "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Treasury Department," on page 47, line 12, after the word "officers," to strike out "$25,665.15" and insert "except the claim of Miller & Lux (Inc.), $20,917.51," so as to make the clause read:

For payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers, except the claim of Miller & Lux (Inc.), $20,917.51.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department," on page 57, line 17, after "section 2," to strike out "$1,004,693.64" and insert "$999,946," so as to make the clause read:

Total audited claims, section 2, $999,946.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. There are some committee amendments yet to be offered to the bill, and I am informed that there are other amendments to be offered by Senators. It is now half past 5 o'clock, and I move, Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has the floor.

Mr. KING. I desire to say to the Senator from Wyoming that I have about 20 amendments to the bill, which I desire to offer.

Mr. WARREN. I am about to move a recess until to-morrow.

Mr. KING. Very well; I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will the Senator from Wyoming withhold his motion long enough to act upon an amendment which I desire to offer? I must attend a committee meeting to-morrow, and it will be impossible for me to be present in the Senate. If the Senator will consent——

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator from New Jersey will not talk any longer and will offer the amendment, I will consent.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey in order that he may offer his amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order without unanimous consent.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. KING. I think there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. I do not mean by my remark to assure the Senator from New Jersey that there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment, because we shall object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

BUREAU OF MINES.

Tunnel investigations: For investigations of conditions dangerous to health and safety in tunnels, shafts, and similar confined places, caused by deleterious gases, or arising during the construction of tunnels, shafts, and similar engineering works, with a view to improving such conditions by determining the most efficient means of protection from these dangers, including all equipment, supplies, expenses of travel, subsistence, and all other expenses requisite for and incident thereto, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to be immediately available and continue available during the fiscal year 1921, $100,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think I have the floor.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WARREN. I think it is for me to say whether or not I will make a point of order on the amendment. If there is going to be any debate on it, I make the point of order now that the amendment is not in order, that it increases the appropriation in the pending appropriation bill, and that it is general legislation. It has been considered by the committee. The two States referred to in the amendment are spending some $30,000,000, more or less, in building a tunnel, and the United States will be doing pretty well to keep out of it. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. I withhold the point of order for a moment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator from Wyoming suggests a point of order against the amendment upon several grounds, and I should like to ask him on which ground he is making the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. On all of them.

Mr. WARREN. I make the point of order that it is general legislation. We can settle it on that, if we wish. Then, if necessary, I shall make the point of order against the amendment on another ground.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has reserved his point of order until I make my explanation on the amendment, as I understand.

Mr. WARREN. I withhold the point of order a few moments.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I understand that this item has been estimated for. It was submitted to the committee by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], for whom I now offer it. New Jersey and New York have joined to build a vehicular tunnel. It is very important that the question of toxic gases be investigated. There will be in that tunnel over 2,000 automobiles an hour. There is only one laboratory in the country that can make this research, and that is in the Bureau of Mines. There are three other similar tunnels in the country. I understand that the Senator from New Jersey has submitted the amendment to the committee and that it is in order. I ask for a ruling on the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order made by the Senator from Wyoming against the amendment is that it is new legislation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator has made that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. There are several points of order against the amendment; but the Senator from New Jersey wished me to state one specifically. I make the point of order that it is legislation increasing an appropriation in an appropriation bill; that it has not been recommended by any committee and was not introduced as an amendment and sent at the proper time to the committee. And there are other points of order I might make against the amendment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know what understanding the Senator from New York, who is a member of the committee, or the Senator from New Jersey had with the chairman of the committee. I was asked to offer this amendment. I understood it would be received by the Senate and that the Senate would give it consideration. The very fact that the Senator from New York, who has asked me to offer the amendment, is a member of the committee indicates that undoubtedly he knew the position in which I would be in before this body in acting for him. I do not think he would have asked me to submit an amendment which was subject to a point of order in this way. I am perfectly willing that the amendment shall be ruled out of order, but I simply ask for fair treatment, because this matter very seriously affects a large project in my State. I hope if the Senator from Wyoming desires to adjourn to-night at least he will allow the amendment to lie over, in order that further debate may be had upon it to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. No; Mr. President, I make the point of order against the amendment. I told the Senator from New York that the amendment could not be considered, and I told the secretary of the Senator from New Jersey that I should make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rule is very plain that—no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

An amendment moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate must be introduced and referred to the Committee on Appropriations at least one day before it is considered. The amendment is not general legislation within the rule, but it is an amendment which increases the appropriation, and it has not been moved by the direction of any standing or select committee. So the point of order must be sustained.

RECESS.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, we bless Thee that Thou hast created man, an undeveloped being, and hast placed him in an unfinished world to multiply and develop its resources, and thus develop his physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual powers by the discovery of the raw material and molding it into the finished product.

Work is therefore a blessing. Idleness invites defeat to the individual and his fellows. Give us therefore the desire to develop ourselves and shape the unfinished world into a veritable Garden of Eden, where we may live in peace and harmony with Thee and all mankind, inspired by the life, character, and precepts of the world's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Richmond, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bills of the following titles:

S. 2454. An act for the relief of certain members of the Flathead Nation of Indians, and for other purposes; and

S. 796. An act for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3484. An act authorizing certain railroad companies, or their successors in interest, to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of their rights of way.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3654) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of Hawaiian National Park.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3484. An act authorizing certain railroad companies or their successors in interest to convey for public road or park purposes certain parts of their rights of way; to the Committee on Public Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2454. An act for the relief of certain members of the Flathead Nation of Indians, and for other purposes; and

S. 796. An act for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. The Democratic national committee, Mr. Speaker, has sent out a statement, which has been given wide publicity throughout the country, in regard to my record during the war, or what purports to be that record, which is so false, so unfair, and has such a bearing upon the report of the aviation committee which has been rendered, that I feel, in justice to the committee and in justice to the House, I ought at this time to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will disclose the point in the statement to which he objects.

Mr. FREAR. It is taken from the Washington Post of yesterday.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FREAR. Will not the gentleman withhold that until I secure recognition on the question of personal privilege?

Mr. BAER. I will withhold it.

Mr. FREAR. The headlines are—

Democrats hit back at critic.
Say FREAR, who attacks Air Service, voted against war bills.

And then it goes on to say:

Democratic national committee headquarters last night issued a statement charging that the chairman of the House subcommittee which on Monday issued its scathing denunciation of the aviation report was one of the House Members who voted against all the earlier acts committing this country to a war against Germany.

The chairman of the subcommittee was Representative JAMES A. FREAR, of Wisconsin, and the Democratic national committee charges he favored the McLemore resolution forbidding Americans to take passage on ocean liners, as well as a resolution favoring an embargo on the sale of munitions to the Allies.

It is further charged by the Democratic national committee that Mr. FREAR voted against war with Germany, against conscription, against the espionage act, and against the first war revenue bill, "among others."

The Democratic national committee also made public extracts of the Democratic minority report of the committee, characterizing the majority report—

And so forth.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state what he claims as the ground for his question of personal privilege?

Mr. FREAR. Four statements contained in that are absolutely false.

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman voted for certain bills that he did not vote for?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. It is a matter of record.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that that is an attack on his integrity?

Mr. FREAR. I do, because of the way it is connected in this statement. It is an attempt to discredit the whole report because it makes a false statement of my position throughout.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is only in doubt on this: Whether voting for such bills for which a good many Members did vote or whether that——

Mr. FREAR. That is not the question to my mind. The way in which it is conducted to mislead the public in regard to the value of the report and in regard to myself is all untrue.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the Speaker and to the gentleman that if the matter he speaks of is the privilege of Members and the privileges of the House, there is not a day on which a dozen Members or a hundred Members of the House could not get up and occupy an hour each to discuss a question of personal privilege. If the mere statement of a newspaper or an outside party is to be considered the ground of it, to the effect that a man had voted in such and such a way, or that he had not voted that way, would constitute a question of personal privilege, there would be no end to it. But if it does reflect upon the integrity of the gentleman in any way, there would be a question of personal privilege on the part of the gentleman himself, and I submit to him that the mere statement of the construction put upon his vote by some person outside of the House or elsewhere than in the House does not constitute a question of privilege and does not reflect on his integrity. It is a mere reflection of their views on the effect of his vote.

Mr. FREAR. I am glad to get the enlightened statement of the gentleman who so frequently takes the floor, and I will say that thus far, Mr. Speaker, I have not taken the floor more than five minutes, but before I get through I hope to take the floor and have an opportunity of making my reply to the statement given out by the Democratic national committee for the purpose of discrediting our report. We have put six months on this report and taken nearly 4,000 pages of testimony. I want to read to you some things that I think will startle you and some gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. The gentlemen all voted to send us out. Now, to permit a Member of this House to be placed in this position by a report from an organization like the Democratic national committee, with the power that it exercises——

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman is not courteous enough to be considerate, I will make the point of order that he does not state a question of privilege, and I ask the ruling of the Chair on that point of order.

Mr. FREAR. The Speaker is ruling on that point of order now, I believe.

Mr. GARNER. I ask the Chair to rule.

Mr. FREAR. May I continue?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may continue to state his point of privilege.

Mr. FREAR. The point of privilege is this, Mr. Speaker. I have never risen on this subject but once before, and then on the National Security League, and we put through a resolution unanimously. The Members of the House are entitled to their good names; they are entitled to their good character; they are entitled to the protection of the House. When statements are given out declaring that men voted for certain propositions which they have not voted for, for the purpose of discrediting the men, for the purpose of injuring them as well as the matter before the House which has been transferred to our keeping, it seems to me there can be no question as to the right of personal privilege in this case.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman allow the Chair a question?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman claim that a statement by a newspaper that he voted for a bill which he did not vote for gives him a ground of privilege?

Mr. FREAR. Standing by itself, certainly not, Mr. Speaker. I have read the article, which shows the inference and the insinuation carried throughout.

The SPEAKER. Then what is the additional fact which makes it privileged?

Mr. FREAR. The insinuation that a man voted for all these acts which I did not vote for leaves him not entitled to the credence of the public and as here framed is an attack upon the integrity of the Representative named.

Now, here is House committee report that has been reported. It has cost this House $14,000 or $15,000.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send the statement up to the Chair.

Mr. FREAR. Yes. There are two statements. One of them is by John B. Ryan. I am not sure whether that quite states a matter of personal privilege, although it states everything in regard to the German sympathizers. The suggestion is that, by innuendo, that accuses me of disloyalty as well. I can not see how any other interpretation can be placed upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this article claims that the gentleman voted for the McLemore resolution and voted against the war with Germany, against conscription, against the espionage act, and against the first war-revenue bill.

Mr. FREAR. The Speaker is only reading the names of acts but does not give the inference that is carried with that statement contained in the papers.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that we are going to have the legislative bill up, and there will be several hours' general debate. Why can not the gentleman get time on that from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]?

Mr. FREAR. Because I believe—I say this with all due respect to the gentleman—that when a statement like this is given to the press of the country, coming from the authority that it does, it is no answer to wait until there is a handful of Members here and then make a half hour's speech.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the Speaker should rule that it is not privileged—and it does not look like it is—why not take time from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]?

Mr. FREAR. We will approach that when we get to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in considerable doubt about this point. The Chair understands that the gentleman himself does not claim that the charge that he voted for or against bills, which charges were false, gives him the right to raise a question of privilege. The only remaining question, as the Chair understands it, is that this makes charges which are not true.

Mr. FREAR. Insinuations as well, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The only insinuation the Chair can see is—and perhaps it would be a fair inference from the article—that it amounts to a charge that the gentleman was pro-German in his sympathies. At the same time, of course, a great many Members of the House did vote for all these bills, and those Members who did so vote would certainly resent that inference.

Mr. FREAR. Does the Chair think that with that implication a Member of this House has no right to state his position to the country?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Members who did vote that way would certainly resent the inference that they were pro-German.

Mr. FREAR. I await the Chair's decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is disposed to rule that this does not raise a question of privilege.

ABSENCE OF A QUORUM.

Mr. FREAR. I make the point of no quorum present, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a point of no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ayres	Costello	Dyer	Graham, Pa.
Begg	Cramton	Eagan	Greene, Vt.
Blackmon	Crowther	Fairfield	Griffin
Booher	Curry, Calif.	Ferris	Hamill
Britten	Darrow	Fields	Harrison

Larsen	Rainey, H. T.	Stephens, Ohio
Lea, Calif.	Riddick	Sullivan
Lufkin	Riordan	Tinkham

The SPEAKER. On this call 319 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to another question of personal privilege. It is an article quoting John D. Ryan, of New York, in a statement making certain assertions which I think entitles me to the floor in reply.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. In an article appearing in the Washington Post of yesterday a statement is quoted from John D. Ryan, of New York, in response to a criticism which appeared in the aviation report, and in the course of his statement appears the following:

> The chairman of the subcommittee having, as shown by the record in Congress, assumed a position hostile to the assertion of American rights during the prewar period, and having voted against the declaration of war with Germany, can not now, I am sure, influence public opinion by submitting a report based on an investigation so thoroughly discredited as the one which he conducted.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send his article to the desk? The Chair thinks that it involves a question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, the statement made by Mr. Ryan brings up all the prewar records and necessarily involves a statement in regard to the different measures which were mentioned by the Democratic national committee in the other articles.

The McLemore resolution is one of the measures it has been suggested advocates and determines the position of any man as to his patriotism and loyalty to the Government, and I assume that is one of those to which he refers at this time. I do not know how far I may digress from the direct right of personal privilege, but I am perfectly willing to be called to order at any time if I overstep the bounds. This whole subject reaches out in an effort to discredit the committee that this House unanimously appointed to make an investigation, and for that reason it is very important for you to know just exactly the complexion——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. An attempted reflection on the committee by referring to the prewar record of a member of the committee is certainly not a question of privilege to which the gentleman arises. If he is charged with anything which reflects on his integrity and his loyalty he should be heard. But the gentleman announces that he is going into controverted matters having to do with the committee and the motives back of it. There might be 50 men who would want to get up and demand an hour to discuss the question of personal privilege, and we would find ourselves swamped. I appeal to the gentleman to confine himself to his question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman is anticipating; he has not permitted me to make my statement.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman was talking about the committee and what the committee had done.

Mr. FREAR. No; I have not talked about what the committee has done, and do not intend to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will confine himself to the question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. That I propose to do, and, if possible, to make my speech here at this time or at some other time. The McLemore resolution was one presented to the House back in 1916. You gentlemen know what the McLemore resolution contained. The statement to the effect that it was to prevent an American citizen from going on these ships is not true; it was a question whether they should be warned against undertaking an unnecessary danger. The position of the Secretary of State upon that, the position of the President in the letter which went to the belligerent countries is very clear as to how far that resolution was intended to reach and what the disposition of the administration was at that time. That resolution included such men against it as Gen. SHERWOOD on the Democratic side, Mr. Van Dyke on the Democratic side——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has proceeded far enough to show the trend of his remarks. He has made a statement here that the McLemore resolution was not unpatriotic or a disloyal resolution, and yet he makes a question of personal privilege the fact that some one charged him with having voted for it. I am not willing to sit here and see that bare statement that a vote for that resolution is a reflection upon a man's loyalty to the Government. I voted against that resolution, but I know men on both sides of the aisle who differed with me, and I do not want to see those men put in an embarrassing attitude by having a question of personal privilege predicated upon the fact that these gentlemen voted against the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair in his previous ruling stated that that would not constitute a question of personal privilege.

Mr. FREAR. The test, then, is that no one particular bill can be referred to in reply to a charge of this kind. How else can you answer the general charge?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has predicated his question of personal privilege on an article by Mr. Ryan. Now, let us see. It says:

> The chairman of the subcommittee—

I presume that means the gentleman from Wisconsin—

> having as shown by the record in Congress assumed a position hostile to the assertion of American rights during the prewar period, and having voted against the declaration of war with Germany, can not now, I am sure, influence public opinion by submitting a report based on an investigation so thoroughly discredited as the one which he conducted.

Mr. Speaker, the language of which he complains does not even charge him with having voted one way or the other on the McLemore resolution. What is the charge? I suspect that the Speaker gave him the benefit of the doubt and ruled that the question of personal privilege is based on the language—> assumed a position hostile to the assertion of American rights during the prewar period and voted against the declaration of war with Germany.

That is the only possible language on which he could predicate it. What have the merits or the demerits of the McLemore resolution to do with a charge that the gentleman was against the assertion of American rights during the prewar period? If we get into that, then every gentleman who voted against the McLemore resolution could rise to a question of personal privilege, because if it is a reflection upon the gentleman from Wisconsin, then it is a reflection upon them. Where would we be in such circumstances?

Gentlemen who voted against it would have the right to rise and address the House for one hour on the question of personal privilege, and this Congress would find itself bogged down with gentlemen debating their loyalty on acts before the war which involved judgment; and I submit that gentlemen should not be so sensitive to the criticism of their political opponents during a political campaign.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, this is not a question of sensitiveness, it is a question of dishonesty and lying. That is the reason I am trying to answer some of these statements, and they were given out by the Democratic national committee—given out to the press of the country.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, I rise to a question of order. Mr. John D. Ryan is not a member of the Democratic national committee. He is the man who has charged the gentleman with being against the assertion of American rights. Let the gentleman from Wisconsin answer that. That is the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point made by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] is weighty. The gentleman can not go into a discussion that would be endless.

Mr. FREAR. I would not take advantage of the privilege that the Speaker indicated by indulging in anything that is not strictly parliamentary—that is not strictly within my rights. Therefore I ask the Chair to indicate to me how far I am privileged to answer a statement of that kind.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is charged with having been hostile to the assertion of American rights and with having voted against the war. The Chair thinks the gentleman can deny that.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, the charge of hostility on the part of the gentleman is not confined to his vote on the war resolution. The charge of hostility against the gentleman from Wisconsin is on his prewar record, and in answer to a charge of that kind, would it not be within the question of privilege for the gentleman to take up those measures that were controverted, relating to the war, to show that his position was not hostile on these propositions, even though they be not specifically enumerated in the charge, under the general charge of hostility to American rights or the interests of this country? The gentleman, it seems to me, upon the question of personal privilege could take up all of his record to disclose that that charge was not justified, not alone on the war resolution but the McLemore resolution and every other prewar measure that related to the war.

The SPEAKER. It hardly seems to the Chair that a Member could take up and discuss as to whether each measure that came before the House really involved the assertion of American rights, and then his attitude upon that. If he could, then, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] said, any Member would have the same privilege.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me ask the Chair a question. Under the general charge that the conduct of a gentleman as a Member of this body is hostile to his own Nation previous to the declaration of war, how is he to meet such a general charge unless he takes up the specific items and shows that his conduct was not hostile?

The SPEAKER. It does not seem to the Chair that he can take up every bill that came before the House and go into the merits of a bill, as to whether each bill was patriotic or not.

Mr. REAVIS. If these bills related to war matters, in which this country subsequently became interested, under a general charge that his prewar record was hostile to his own country, the ruling of the Chair would deny him the right to make a defense.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the wisest course for the gentleman to take—and the Chair knows nothing about his prewar record—would be to state, if he desires so to do, what his prewar record was, what he thinks this is predicated on, and then we would have some basis to know what the gentleman is answering.

Mr. REAVIS. It is within the memory of the Chair, I have no doubt, and of the membership of this body, that the position taken by Members of the House on the McLemore resolution was the subject of criticism as bearing upon the question as to whether the membership was pro-German or, as has been termed, 100 per cent American, because that was one of the controverted measures upon which the Nation formed its judgment as to the reliability of the Americanism of the membership of this body. Then comes the general charge that the gentleman's prewar record has been hostile to his own country, and certainly in answer to the general charge he has the right to show his position on the war resolution and his position on the McLemore resolution, his position on the selective draft, even though that came subsequent to the declaration of war; and if the Chair should rule that a Member is restricted to a general denial and denies him the right and privilege of going into specific matters, which are the foundation of this general charge, then the Chair would deny the gentleman the right to defense at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly would not rule that a charge that a gentleman voted for the McLemore resolution was a charge of hostility to American rights.

Mr. REAVIS. I understand the Chair does not rule that.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair he would have to rule that, if the Chair admitted that that was relevant.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman, as I understand it, has no intention of confining his remarks to this measure, but he is speaking of this measure as one of those antedating the war on which he took a position, and subsequently to speak of other measures, showing by specific denial that the general charge is not correct, and certainly it seems to me he has that right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will proceed, and the Chair will rule as he proceeds.

Mr. FREAR. Well, within the limitations the Chair has suggested, I will ask that the Chair point out what answer can be made by a Member on the floor to this assault on his prewar record and be within the strict ruling, to which I desire to submit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the gentleman can go into a general discussion of the McLemore resolution.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can discuss his own point of view and answer that——

Mr. FREAR. The only way I can discuss it is by discussing the measure properly, as I understand, and also the war measure. If the Chair holds to his ruling, I desire to keep within the rule, and I realize the narrow limits which it places upon me in this case. But I feel it is an unjust rule which would confine a Member of this House to just simply say, "I am innocent of the charge," and leave it at that. That is all I understand from the position taken here by my critic. It is the only license I have in speaking, and if I discuss the McLemore resolution——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman indicate what he desires to discuss?

Mr. FREAR. My purpose is to discuss these matters referred to and which appear——

The SPEAKER. In reference to the McLemore resolution?

Mr. FREAR. I desire to discuss the message sent—and I have it here—by the Secretary of State to the belligerent countries showing the attitude of the administration at that time.

Mr. REAVIS. And the McLemore resolution, as I recall, was pronounced by the President as the acid test of loyalty.

Mr. FREAR. One of them.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, he overlooks the fact that the newspaper article upon which he predicates his question of privilege does not mention the McLemore resolution. There are two charges in the Ryan statement, one is that the gentleman resisted the assertion of American rights before the war and the other is that he voted against the war with Germany. Now, the gentleman can discuss whether or not he was right in voting against war with Germany, the Chair having ruled that is a question of privilege. But the gentleman is trying to couple up two things. If he raises the question of the McLemore resolution, he places an implication of disloyalty upon all the men who voted against it, and to be fair that would give each of them the opportunity to raise the question of personal privilege——

Mr. REAVIS. But suppose the charge was made against the gentleman from Arkansas that his prewar work indicated he was hostile to American rights, how would you meet it?

Mr. WINGO. I would tell the gentleman how I would meet it.

Mr. REAVIS. How would the gentleman——

Mr. WINGO. I would meet it where it ought to be met, and I would not take up the time of the House answering a general charge. I would go to the very man who made it. [Applause.] I would call upon the man who made the charge to give a bill of particulars wherein I failed. I would go to him personally. I would not come on the floor of the House and take up an hour's time.

Mr. REAVIS. I am not discussing the question of good taste.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman asked me a question and I am answering it.

Mr. REAVIS. I was asking the gentleman what he would do——

Mr. WINGO. And I told him.

Mr. REAVIS. I did not ask the gentleman where he would meet it, but I asked him how he would meet it.

Mr. WINGO. And I told the gentleman like every other honorable man would meet it, go to the man who accused me. That is what I would do.

Mr. REAVIS. How could you meet it if you were denied the right to state your prewar record?

Mr. WINGO. Who could deny me the right?

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is denying the gentleman from Wisconsin the right——

Mr. WINGO. I have not denied him the right to go to John D. Ryan and holding him responsible for the charge which he resents.

Mr. FREAR. This is a great privilege, which I appreciate coming from the gentleman from Arkansas. It has nothing to do with it. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the limitations under which I am placed, and I shall endeavor to see if I can not get time in the consideration of the pending appropriation bill this afternoon to discuss the matter which I desire, because I realize it is embarrassing to the Chair, and I do not care to be kept within such limitations at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be much relieved if the gentleman would use the time in general debate.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on last Friday, the 13th, the President of the United States issued an Executive order restoring to the owners all the radio stations of the country which were owned by private owners, which were taken over during the war. It is a matter of general importance to those people and I ask unanimous consent to insert a copy of that Executive order in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the Executive order in reference to radio stations. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The order is as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

Whereas, pursuant to authority of Executive orders of April 6, 1917, and April 30, 1917, certain radio systems and stations and rights connected therewith were taken over by the Government and certain restrictions were placed on the operation of other radio systems and stations.

I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby authorize, order, and direct as follows:

All radio stations taken over by the Government of the United States and now held by it under authority of Executive orders of April 6 and April 30, 1917, respectively, including all systems, lines, and property taken possession of or received, operated, supervised, or controlled under authority of said Executive orders shall, at midnight on the 29th day of February, instant, be returned and delivered to the respective owners thereof.

All restrictions placed under authority of said Executive orders of April 6 and April 30, 1917, on all radio stations not necessary to the Government for naval communications shall be removed to take effect at midnight on the 29th day of February, instant, from which time the control and operation of all radio stations not owned, controlled or operated by the Government, independently of action taken by or on behalf of the Government under the aforesaid Executive orders of April 6 and April 30, 1917, shall be subject to the provisions of the act to regulate radio communication approved August 13, 1912.

The enforcement of this order is hereby delegated to the Secretary of the Navy, who is authorized and directed to take appropriate action in the premises.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
February 13, 1920.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for seven minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for seven minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in order to advertise myself partly, and mainly for the benefit of the House, I am going to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter written by my brother, Frank I. Mann, of Gilman, Ill., who is one of the experts of this country on soil and farms, and I think, if gentlemen will listen, they will hear some interesting and instructive information about soils.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

GILMAN, ILL., February 16, 1920.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JAMES R.: Ever since I learned of the Muscle Shoals project, when in Tennessee a few years ago, I have felt quite an interest in its success, because of the great opportunity it seemed to present for an increased and economical production of crops by supplying a cheaper form of fixed nitrogen. The value of nitrogen and phosphorus in the production of crops has not been properly realized. Take an example of corn for instance: In 100 pounds of corn there are but about 3½ pounds of materials which were taken from the soil; the balance of the dry weight is made of compounds formed from carbon taken from the air by the leaves of the plants and formed into sugars, starches, oils, etc. The amount of these carbon compounds that can be formed are measured, however, by the amount of materials that could be secured from the soil. If the same plants, which produced 100 pounds of corn, could have secured another 3½ pounds of soil materials—mostly phosphorus and nitrogen—they could have formed another 100 pounds of corn, without any further effort on the part of the grower, and the yield would be increased 100 per cent. On the best corn-belt soils we find it is comparatively easy to double the yields of crops by doubling the phosphorus available to the crops, where there is sufficient nitrogen to match such an amount of phosphorus. The soils which contain such an amount of nitrogen, however, are small in area. On the early glaciated and the unglaciated soils nitrogen is in small amount, and the crops will grow in proportion as they can secure nitrogen, except on the natural rich soils, which are usually alluvial and limited in extent. As a rule, the soils south of the Ohio and Missouri Rivers are unglaciated and low in nitrogen, except the alluvial types. A large part of southern Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, and Ohio is composed of soil types on which crops—other than legumes—will grow in proportion as the plants can secure nitrogen from the soil.

This increase in yield, which comes from the proper element of fertility, increases food production without an increase in area or of man labor, and is real economic production if the cost of the fertilizing element is small.

A good deal of the corn-belt soils have already or will soon reach a nitrogen limit to their production, and, while we will be able to profitably maintain a nitrogen supply for some time by using legume crops for the purpose, it might also be profitable and economical to supplement this legume nitrogen with a fixed commercial nitrogen. In the South, however, with the high average temperature and rainfall, it is doubtful if it would be possible to maintain enough legume nitrogen in a soil to secure a high production of food products, because of the great destruction of the organic matter in which such nitrogen must be held from the bacterial action and leaching when crops are not taking food from the soil.

I know of no one thing which could add so much to the production of more and cheaper food, and in such an economical way, as to supply cheap nitrogen for these lands so poor in humus. I do not know how cheaply nitrogen might be fixed at Muscle Shoals, but it would certainly be much cheaper than to secure it through legume growth. I figured out once the relative horsepower equivalent at Niagara Falls in fixing nitrogen compared to a clover field. The nitrogen fixed by an 80-acre field of clover, under favorable conditions and a large growth, could be fixed by a 28-horsepower engine working throughout the season. If the Tennessee River can be properly harnessed, it should be able to fix nitrogen at a small fraction of the cost of fixing it by means of bacterial or legume energy.

In these days of low man power on the farms and the need of more food economically produced, it would seem to be almost a crime against civilization to not heed this great need for cheap nitrogen.

If there is any possible and fair way to provide that the Muscle Shoals power might be used for fixing nitrogen, and that it might be obtained cheaply for farm use, it would be a wonderful step in the production of cheaper food and help to quiet the unrest of the present and future.

I understand that Mr. Graham's committee is considering matters relative to the Muscle Shoals plant, and expects to take action soon. Some representatives of the Illinois Agricultural Association are going to Washington this week, and I was asked to go with them, but other matters in which I am deeply interested are likely to prevent. If you can see the nitrogen problem as I see it, and the matter can be put into satisfactory shape, I hope you can see your way to help it along in the interest of humanity.

Affectionately,

(Signed) FRANK.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. GARRETT. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois to permit that letter to be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am quite willing it should be so referred.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the letter just read be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the letter just read by the Clerk be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be disepnsed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are entering upon the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1921. I think it opportune that I should state some of the difficulties, some of the problems, that your committee had to contend with in the consideration of this measure. The subcommittee having this measure in charge was in session from the 5th day of December, 1919, until the 10th day of February, 1920, every day except two—Christmas Day and New Year's Day. The hearings held cover 2,850 printed pages. In a measure these present the material with which the subcommittee had to deal in formulating the bill. It presents a splendid picture in considerable detail of the ramifications of our system of government. It presents strikingly the crudities with which we do business. It presents, if you please, the incongruities that have grown up from long usage in the matter of our appropriations and in the manner in which we create places.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill perhaps is the most difficult of preparation of any of the regular annual appropriation bills which the Congress has to deal with. The scope of its jurisdiction extends to a provision for the expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Library of Congress, the Botanic Garden, the Office of the President of the United States, the Civil Service Commission, the Bureau of Efficiency, and nine of the great executive departments of the Government. The tenth—the Department of Agriculture—is provided for in the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The work of the committee in the preparation of a bill with this broad jurisdiction, providing as it does approximately 20,000 specific statutory salaries, involves a limited examination into the activities of each of the departments and bureaus in order to arrive at a conclusion as to their needs for personnel and operating expenses in the District of Columbia.

The statement that it provides for nine of the great departments of the Government is not complete, for it provides only in part for those departments, and the separation of appropriations for a given department into different bills makes more difficult the work of providing funds for the conduct of those departments.

Appropriations for the Treasury Department include the salaries for the office of the Supervising Architect in the District of Columbia, while appropriations for the field service to be administered by this force are carried in the sundry civil bill.

Appropriations for the office salaries in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing are carried in the legislative, and so forth, bill, while the appropriations for the expenses of printing and engraving are carried in the sundry civil bill. Appropriations for the office of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service are carried in this bill, while the appropriations for the medical personnel and the maintenance of hospitals are carried in the sundry civil bill.

Appropriations for the Department of State in the District of Columbia are carried in this bill, while the appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service are carried in the Diplomatic and Consular bill, coming from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Appropriations for the salaries of the subtreasuries are carried in this bill, while the appropriations for contingent expenses of these same subtreasuries are carried in the sundry civil bill. The appropriation for the office of the Comptroller of the Currency is carried in this bill, while the contingent expenses, incurred in the redemption of national and Federal reserve currency, are carried as a permanent appropriation.

The salaries of the civilian personnel of some of the bureaus and offices of the War Department in the District of Columbia are carried in this bill, while the compensation of other civilian employees in that department in the District of Columbia are carried in the Army appropriation bill and the fortifications appropriation bill, and the appropriations for the Military Establishment are carried in the Army appropriation bill, the fortifications bill, the Military Academy bill, and the sundry civil bill.

Appropriations for the compensation of civilian personnel in the Navy Department in the District of Columbia are provided in this bill, while the compensation of the commissioned and enlisted personnel of the Navy in the District of Columbia and in the field, and the compensation of civilian personnel of the Navy in the field, are provided in the naval appropriation bill.

Appropriations for the General Land Office in the District of Columbia, including the offices of the surveyors general, are provided in this bill, while the appropriations for the expenses of surveying and administering the public-land service are carried in the sundry civil bill. Appropriations for the Indian Office in the District of Columbia are carried in this bill, while the appropriation for the Indian Service in the field are carried in the Indian appropriation bill.

Appropriations for the Post Office Department in the District of Columbia are carried in this bill, while postal funds service are carried in the Post Office appropriation bill.

Many other instances such as those herein enumerated could be cited to show the various bills in which various departments and bureaus of the Government get appropriations for their maintenance.

Right here I wish to add that we had a splendid illustration of this waste during the hearings on this present bill. The same gentlemen who appeared before us from the War Department, from the State Department, from the Post Office Department, and from the other departments and bureaus, except the Agricultural Department, during the time that we were in session, came again to the Capitol and appeared before the sundry civil subcommittee, now having its hearings. And while we were in session those who are interested in the military affairs of the Government and the upkeep of the Military Establishment who had appeared before our committee and had given their estimates and their ideas concerning those estimates within the last few days appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs, presenting their estimates and ideas upon the same propositions.

In order to determine whether employees are necessary in a department or bureau in the District of Columbia it becomes necessary to find out the extent and volume of their field service in order to know what work is thrown upon the department at the seat of government.

The original intent of the bill just reported was to provide, as its title indicates, for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government, and its jurisdiction has been confined principally to providing for compensation of employees and other expenses in the District of Columbia. This original basic purpose has become somewhat shattered by long years of practice until some provision of some character for some activity of the Government in the District of Columbia, either in whole or part, is now being made in practically every one of the regular annual appropriation bills, except perhaps the Military Academy bill, the pension bill, and the river and harbor bill. A very excellent example of this divided method of providing appropriations is the employment of temporary clerks and others in the War Department. The legislative act for the fiscal year 1920 carried $4,000,000 for temporary employees in that department. It developed during the hearings on the bill just presented that there is being expended from other War Department funds, some of it in violation of the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, as amended, which prohibits the employment of personal services in Washington from lump-sum appropriations unless specific authority for such employment is granted, a total of approximately $10,205,000 in addition to the foregoing sum of $4,000,000, or a total for civilian personnel in the War Department for this current fiscal year of $14,205,000. The civilian force of the War Department in the District of Columbia on April 6, 1917, was 2,911. It was 37,406 on November 11, 1918. The total on December 31, 1919, was 21,216.

Whereas, if the law was observed as prepared and put upon the statute books way back in 1882, and as afterwards amended, there could not at this day be, if you please, in the War Department, or connected with the war service of the United States in the District of Columbia, as many employees as there are now. Notwithstanding that fact, as I have stated, there are 21,000 men connected with the War Department, doing various kinds of clerical work or want of clerical work, in the District of Columbia to-day, part of them in violation of this very statute.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. What remedy do you offer for that practice? Is there no criminal law on the statute books which forbids heads of departments from violating acts of Congress by employing men and paying out money in violation of those criminal statute laws?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In the act to which I have referred, as I understand it, there is not a penalty, but we have sought in this bill, if you please, to remedy it. We will, at least, call it to the attention not only of the War Department itself but to the various other committees having to do with these appropriations, and to the public as well. We have placed a limitation upon the expenditures in the War Department under this bill, to the effect that the amount provided in this bill shall be the only money expended for the clerical force of the War Department in the District of Columbia, and, if it is obeyed and is not repealed by some act of some other committee, there will not be to exceed in the fiscal year 1921 in the District of Columbia more than 3,250 men connected with the War Department.

Mr. SISSON. Will my friend yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. SISSON. In further answer to the question propounded a moment ago by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ], I will say that under the Overman Act, as a war act, these statutes were suspended during the war and given that peculiar power. But, as the chairman suggests, we have made an effort in this bill to try to reestablish it on a peace-time basis for services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question just for information?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with the gentleman that something ought to be done to remedy the situation, but will not your remedy there interfere with the work of the War Department?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Not in the least. There is not a single function of the War Department but what can be properly maintained under the provisions that we have in this bill, and there is not a single bureau of the War Department that will be in the least crippled, in my opinion.

Here is a proposition to which I wish to call the attention of the committee, lest I forget it: This town is full of men dressed in military garb. You see them upon the streets; you see them at the hotels; you see them riding down here around the Speedway; you will see them riding horseback out in the park. They are all receiving their full complement of pay and the other perquisites of the offices they are holding while they are absolutely doing nothing. They had better be doing something, if you please, thereby releasing many of these civilian employees.

I understand that gentlemen connected with military affairs of this Government are still thinking and hoping that they will have an Army of 500,000 men, and this great surplus of officers that is being maintained in the District of Columbia is being held in anticipation of that realization.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I wanted to ask two questions. As to the first one, I am under the conviction that if you do limit the amount to be expended for a particular department there is always a deficiency reported later on, and a subsequent committee recognizes the deficiency.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. FESS. That ought to be cured.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is one of the troubles.

Mr. FESS. Another proposition: Congress is not responsible for this large number of people in military garb doing ostensibly clerical work, but Congress is being held throughout the country responsible by newspapers of respectability who editorially say that these people are held here simply because Congress does not want to let them go. That is what they are doing.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Congress has no strings on these gentlemen and has nothing to do with keeping them here.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he is speaking advisedly when he says that those connected with the Military Establishment of the United States are still looking for the maintenance of an Army of 509,000 men?

Mr. FESS. Five hundred and seventy-six thousand men.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The evidence had before our committee as late as the 10th day of February discloses the fact that they are taking and gathering the personal property which they have salvaged since the war ended and are holding it, and their excuse for keeping it as surplus of the Army and not disposing of it to the people of the United States is that they have been figuring on provision for an Army of 576,000 men.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another short question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman from Indiana object to stating the personnel of those men that he has referred to?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will refer you to the hearings. There are 2,588 pages in that series of hearings, and you will find a great amount of illuminating matter on all the subjects about which you have spoken.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Is it not a fact that this Congress allowed the War Department something like 18,000 temporary officers by an act passed by this Congress?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LAZARO. You say the evidence discloses the fact that these men believe they are going to get this big Army?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I say they are anticipating it, and are making their calculations in view of that anticipation.

Mr. LAZARO. Does not the gentleman believe that they are meeting with some encouragement somewhere in Congress in order to continue to believe that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am not a mind reader; but I would say, if I were going into the matter of belief, that there are many friends of a large Army such as is desired by those connected with the War Department. I do not believe that the people of the United States, however, are in favor of a large Army such as these gentlemen are hoping to wish upon the people. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. One of the great troubles we have had in regard to decreasing our clerical force in the Government is the fact which, I am sure, the gentleman from Indiana has noticed himself, and that is that the Civil Service Commission is still holding examinations, still calling upon new employees to enter the Government service faster than the departments can get rid of those they have. The gentleman may have noticed the report in the paper the other day that the newly examined employees and the newly placed employees on the rolls have almost equaled the number of those sent home. That ought to be stopped.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think the blame should be lodged with the Civil Service Commission. The total number of Government employees in the District of Columbia to-day is about 15,000 less than it was when we reached the peak during the greatest war activity. There has been a turnover, however, of more than 80 per cent of the employees of the Government. They come here and stay a little while and then go, and it is because of the demands that are coming from these various bureaus and departments that these new appointments are made. That is the excuse for the activity of the Civil Service Commission, and that can not be remedied, so far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, because they have no discretion in the matter.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The Civil Service Commission has no power to force these employees on the departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. REAVIS. The fact that the Civil Service Commission holds these examinations is in order that they may fill the demands of the departments?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman evidently misunderstood me. If he will allow me to correct that impression, I will say that the efficient clerks here who know how to do the business of the Government ought to be transferred to the departments that need them, and the Government ought not to take on a lot of new inexperienced and inefficient clerks and train them.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman is entirely right about that.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he does not believe that the evil spoken of by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will be cured whenever the Congress of the United States cuts the appropriations to the point where the heads of these various departments can no longer ask for additional employees? [Applause.] Are you not in this bill applying the only remedy by which that evil can be cured?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the opinion of the committee; and, acting upon that idea, we have appropriated, for the fiscal year 1921, for about 10,000 people less than were appropriated for in the District of Columbia in this bill for the current year. [Applause.]

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. The gentleman has expressed the opinion that the War Department still has in mind the idea that Congress may pass an act authorizing a peace Army of between 500,000 and 600,000 men. Is not that opinion corroborated by the fact that there are over 90,000 automobiles or motor vehicles lying out in the weather all over this country, some of them unprotected, that the War Department are trying to reserve for that great Army which they hope to see authorized by Congress.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say, in answer to the gentleman from West Virginia, that that is one of the additional evidences of the desire of the War Department.

Right at this point I might as well disclose another striking proposition. The War Department purchased, from first to last during the period of the war, 200,000 typewriters. Thirty-five thousand of those typewriters have been accounted for in some manner or other by the gentlemen connected with the War Department whose business it is to salvage the personal property of the Government. The same proportion of furniture was purchased, and the same proportion of all the utilities that go to make up a successful and active Army were purchased in the same quantity. To show you how tenacious they are with reference to holding on to this property for their future use, they have declared no surplus of consequence on the item of typewriters. It was disclosed to your committee that they did sell 27 up in Ontario, where it seems we had a war activity during the war, and that is still going on in some little degree. Twenty-seven typewriters were sold there from that stock. There have been but 12 disposed of in the District of Columbia, and when we were trying to ascertain how many of these typewriters they had, and they said they were giving us the best information they had with reference to where they were located, so many at New York City, so many at Richmond, so many at Chicago, so many here and there, the evidence discloses that they found in storage or in their possession in the city of Washington only 1,002 or 1,003 typewriters. The very next day after this evidence was heard your committee went to 613 G Street, a portion of it occupied during the war by the Housing Commission, a five-story building, three stories occupied by a garage, and the two upper stories by the War Department, and we there discovered more than 2,500 of these typewriting machines ourselves, 1,900 of them in splendid repair and fit for immediate use, most of them new, 400 needing some little repairs, and 300 in the hands of the mechanics now undergoing repairs.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman refers to the fact that the War Department is holding this material, hoping to build up a great Army. May I not suggest that if the distinguished Republican who presides over the Military Affairs Committee would bring out a reorganization bill, and let some of us Democrats join with gentlemen on that side in killing this military spirit, we might be able to get some of these supplies sold.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Are there any such Democrats?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I hope gentlemen in asking questions will confine themselves to those that are pertinent to this subject. I like to have questions asked, but I hope we will confine ourselves to things that are pertinent to this measure. There will be plenty of time later for these little political jabs.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman will yield, I think my question is as pertinent as his criticism.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish to say right at this point, in answer to the gentleman from Oklahoma, that he seems to think there is nothing except politics in the presentation that I am attempting to make here. I wish to tell him how different was the action of the gentlemen comprising the minority of the committee, who were associated with us all these weeks, during the hearings. I wish to make public acknowledgment now of the splendid service rendered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCANDREWS], who by reason of their long experience in this Congress and on this committee, and by reason of their intimate knowledge of the affairs of this Government, were enabled to render splendid service and gave it unselfishly, never once suggesting the idea that there was any politics in it, but both of them seeking to save money to the taxpayers of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman referred to the purchase by the War Department of 200,000 typewriters, and stated that 35,000 of them had been accounted for. Will the gentleman explain a little further? Is nothing known of the other 165,000 typewriters?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The testimony discloses that there are many storehouses and depots throughout the United States from which no accounting has as yet been received. The whole country is divided up into zones. Some of these zones have reported and some have not reported. No doubt it is true that many of these typewriters have been destroyed. War is the most wasteful thing in which humanity was ever engaged, and those charged with the care of war material give it less proper care and attention than any other class of men having to do with the care of property. I will state right here, while it is in my mind, that in order that the United States Government may save something in the purchase of typewriters we have placed in this bill a provision requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish typewriters to all the various activities of the Government in the District of Columbia during the next fiscal year from the typewriters now in the possession of the War Department and other departments, and have provided that no new typewriters can be purchased during that time, our action being based upon the opinions stated by typewriter men themselves and by those who are in a position to know, with reference to the quantity of typewriters we have, that it will not be necessary for the Government to purchase a single typewriter during 1921 if we can pry these machines loose from those who are trying to hold onto them.

Mr. HARRELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. Does not the gentleman think the most serious objection should be made to this habit we have gotten into of making appropriations to cover these things and then letting deficiencies be allowed in special bills? If we are to continue that practice, does not the gentleman think we had better quit wasting time making appropriations by regular bills and let everything be covered by deficiencies afterwards?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have in mind some ideas on that subject and was about to proceed to elaborate them. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the manner in which these appropriations are made. That is one of the great difficulties. Every man who is at the head of a bureau has but one single thing in mind, and that is to build up his bureau. There is no big, capable man who cares to be at the head of a bureau of two or three people; he wants to be at the head of a bureau that employs a thousand, and he is selfishly fighting for his bureau's advancement and enlargement all the time.

By reason of our divided system of appropriation, when these gentlemen can not succeed in getting an appropriation which they would like to have for developing their bureau from our committee they go to another committee. For instance, if some one connected with a bureau of the War Department appeals to the legislative committee for an increase of force for purposes of enlarging their activities and fails to receive it there he goes immediately to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee is charged with the responsibility of looking after the Military Establishment, and in a great measure becomes the champion of the Military Establishment. They are therefore the friends of that bureau, and in many cases, not because they wish to pad the Government rolls, but they are impressed with the fact of the necessity of building up the thing that they are charged with caring for, the request is granted. The same thing is true of the Navy Department. Those who fail to get through appropriations which they ask for on the legislative bill will in turn go to the Naval Committee, and so it is all the way down through this system of ours.

Here is another thing. We have a practice, by reason of divided responsibility of appropriations, of creating new offices, not by the committee that is supposed to have immediate charge of the clerical force in the District of Columbia, but if the head of the bureau that is desirous of building up his bureau fails to get an appropriation from the legislative committee, he will go to the committee representing his specific department and make an appeal there with greater success, and not only do they get the new positions but they get an increase of pay for the clerks under this practice. Failing there they will often attempt, and they have succeeded, in not only creating new places, but they have succeeded in increasing the pay of those on the statutory roll in the deficiency bill.

Now, it might be interesting to refer briefly to the manner in which we made our appropriations when the Government was first established. For 75 years there was no Appropriation Committee. The Ways and Means Committee did all the appropriating. They first found out how much money they were able to raise, the manner in which they were to raise it, and after concluding the amount they could raise they commenced to apportion it out and divide it up among the various activities, few in number as compared with the number that we have now.

That continued practically down to the Civil War, when by reason of the exigencies of that war and the increased activities of the Ways and Means Committee the Appropriation Committee was created. When it was created in 1863 it had charge of all the appropriations. By reason of the system then in vogue all departments of the Government realized full well that it was the only appropriation committee that could make an appropriation for any purpose either for the creation of places, the payment of those on the roll, or the increase of salaries of those already on the roll.

That continued until 1885, when by reason of a ruction in this House the Appropriation Committee was divided into seven or eight different parts. From that time down to this this system of duplication, this system of divided responsibility, has been going on and on, with expenses mounting higher and higher for the clerical force and the maintenance of the various departments in the District of Columbia. In my opinion the only way that we can remedy this constantly growing evil is by adopting a system of single and uniform responsibility where there is one committee that will know what demands there are on the Government and will have the satisfying of those demands, so that one committee can not say that we would not have done this thing had we known that you had been appealed to and had turned it down. [Applause.] That has frequently occurred during the hearings we have been having.

If I had my way about it I would have one appropriations committee, and on it the chairmen of the large committees, who could make the wants of the various departments known to that committee and all the time have the responsibility in that one committee, have that one source of supply, and then, I think, instead of seeing the expenses of the Government mount higher and higher, out of all proportion to the increase of inhabitants, out of all proportion to the amount of business we are doing, you would find it growing less. There is no business establishment in the world that I know of whose overhead is so out of proportion to the business it is doing as the overhead of the United States in the maintenance of the United States in the business of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. FESS. The budget plan that has been passed in the House and favorably recommended in the Senate will not go to the extent of centralizing all of the appropriations in one committee; but I understand the plan is to bring in a supplemental bill to do that very thing.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. My opinion is that it is the best thing that can be done, and the only remedy I know that will provide in any degree a remedy for this constantly growing evil.

Mr. RICKETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. RICKETTS. Is it not true that bureaus have been able to secure duplication of appropriations by going to various committees year after year?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is what I have been trying to explain; that is absolutely true.

Mr. HARRELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. HARRELD. I will ask if the system could not soon be put into effect if it was not for the jealousy between the chairmen of the different committees? I do not mean among the committees themselves; but there exists a feeling that no prerogatives of a committee shall be taken away from them.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The committees of this House are a good deal like the courts of the country. They are very jealous of their jurisdiction.

Mr. FESS. It has never been presented to the House.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the very objection that the gentleman has urged could be obviated if these various committees would have their representation, so that they would know that their wants would be properly taken care of and that there would be no discrimination against them in the matter of appropriations.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Would not the plan suggested by the gentleman from Indiana result in one or two or three members having charge of various appropriation bills, instead of as at present a committee of 21 members?

Mr. FESS. Not necessarily.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, no; not necessarily. The fact of the business is that it would require more subcommittees in order to make the investigation, and it would result in a more complete knowledge on the part of more men in the House. Here is the great trouble with us about this. How many men do we see here to-day connected with the Committee on Military Affairs? How many men are here who are members of the Committee on Naval Affairs? How many men are there here who are members of any of these other great appropriation committees? How many of them will read the hearings had before our committee? How many of them are advised with reference to what has been going on in these other committees? Very few, indeed. If this plan that I have suggested were adopted, there would be somebody connected with this general committee representing each of the other specific committees who would know something of what was going on and who would communicate the knowledge received to their respective specific committees.

Mr. FESS. The proposal that has been widely discussed is for a committee of 35 to be made of representatives of the various big committees, so that it would admit of a subcommittee taking charge of the work of these big committees, so that there would be no duplication; and what the subcommittee would do would be later on recommended or approved by the general committee, so that duplication would be impossible, and at the same time no interest cared for by the big committees could be neglected.

Mr. LAYTON. Do I understand that in the event of that committee of 35 being appointed all of the other appropriating committees would cease to exist?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; they would cease to exist as appropriating committees only. They would still have all of the functions they now have with reference to all initiatory matters connected with their specific activities.

Mr. LAYTON. The function of gathering statistics?

Mr. FESS. For example, the Education Committee is not an appropriating committee, but it does recommend the authorization that goes to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is it. I am satisfied that some arrangement of this kind would not only result in saving millions of dollars to the United States but it would result in far greater efficiency, the thing that we should be first interested in.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is no one in the House, in my judgment, who has worked more diligently and arduously on any appropriation bill than the gentleman from Indiana, and I contend that it would be physically impossible for him to do any more work than he has been doing; but if we put all of these appropriation bills in one committee, they can not have the consideration that they will have where we have 10 or 12 committees composed of 21 members each.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman, in answer to that, that had we the character of committee I have just spoken of the time of this committee that had this bill in charge could have been saved 50 per cent. Here is the trouble: In order to make appropriations for the 40,000 clerks in the District of Columbia, that this bill has to do with, we had to make inquiry into the appropriations that are being made for 760,000 civilian employees of the Government of the United States. That is the trouble.

In order that we might have some intelligent idea of what appropriations we should make, we had of necessity to inquire how many are paid out of this lump-sum appropriation, how many men are paid out of the bond-expense account, how many men are paid out of this specific appropriation, and where they are, so that it quadrupled the work of this committee. To do what I have suggested would simplify not only the work of this committee, but the work of every other committee charged with the same responsibility, if they are industrious, and no doubt they all are, in trying to keep from duplicating, and try as best you may under this system you can not help but duplicate.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. In the event that this plan is adopted of having a committee of 35, what opportunity would a Member of Congress have to present his views to the committee concerning conditions in his own district and appropriations for carrying on the activities of the Government there?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He would have a representative before that committee from the committee having in charge that specific matter. Suppose the matter had reference to the Department of the Interior, having to do with the land offices, and things of that kind. The representative from the committee having in charge the affairs of the Department of the Interior would take care of the gentleman's wants before this appropriation committee.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Are we to defer to the opinion of an executive officer entirely in regard to the needs of our respective districts?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentlman did not understand what I said. I said your committee representative would be a member of the general committee and represent the Department of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Admitting that, the member of the committee from the West has had no opportunity to have a hearing before the gentleman's subcommittee affecting appropriations for the public-land States. The matters were presented to the full committee informally or probably formally, and then the report of the subcommittee was accepted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the gentleman will bide his time he will have plenty of opportunity——

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is not that true?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I tried to explain to the gentleman, but I fear he is in such a condition of perturbation on account of something that has happened to his State in this bill that he does not quite understand what I am talking about.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Do I understand that the gentleman thinks that he could get more economy in government if the committee or subcommittee dealing with military affairs made the appropriation for the Army affairs in Washington instead of having it made by a subcommittee that deals with the clerical force in Washington generally?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not, but I want to be understood as saying that the subcommittee of the legislative committee is handicapped by reason of the fact that it is not the only committee that does make appropriations for the clerical force of the War Department. After men have failed to succeed in getting certain appropriations before the subcommittee on the legislative bill, then they go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and, if they are plausible enough, obtain the very thing that is denied them by our committee. That is the trouble.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, that is sometimes the case. Now, the gentleman referred to the Interior Department, public-land service. Of course, appropriations for the Interior Department are made by the Appropriations Committee; that is, all recommendations go to them; no other committee has jurisdiction over any of those matters.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Appropriations Committee brings in a bill for all the departments in Washington, except one——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I am under the impression that we would have a considerable reduction in the force of employees of the Agricultural Department in Washington if the Committee on Appropriations had power to include the appropriations for that service in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; I agree with the gentleman on that proposition, too. Now, gentlemen of the committee, I think it would be interesting to know how rapidly this civil list of ours has grown since the beginning of the war. When the war broke out there were employed in the District of Columbia July 1, 1917, in all departments 37,908. Some two months after the war there were employed in the civil service of the United States outside of the District of Columbia 476,388. How many there were employed on the 1st day of April, 1917, outside of the District of Columbia I am not informed, but in 1918 the civil-service employees of the District of Columbia had grown from 37,908 to 111,457. In 1919 it was diminished to 102,126—that is; July, 1919. In December, 1919, it was 102,950, and that is practically what it is to-day. Now, the civil-service employees outside of the District of Columbia to-day—that is, the 31st of December—are 657,744, or a total of civil-service employees engaged in doing the business of the United States of 760,269. Now, of that 102,000, in round numbers, who are in the District of Columbia, 20,500 of them at this time are what are known as statutory employees, whose places are specifically provided for.

There are 20,000 who are paid out of some kind of lump-sum appropriation in the District of Columbia. That makes 40,000. There are 80,000 and over who are still paid from specific appropriations that come from these various committees with which the legislative committee has nothing to do and knows nothing about. That briefly gives you a picture of the employees in the District of Columbia and the manner in which they are provided for.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. IGOE. I recall the other day some Member put a statement in the RECORD that the number of employees had reached a million and a half.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is a mistake.

Mr. IGOE. That is a mistake?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The total number in the United States to-day—it varies a little from day to day—is 760,000.

Mr. IGOE. The statement was made in connection, as I recall it, that we could cut down 300,000. May I ask the gentleman another question? Has the gentleman any figures as to the number of these employees who are not under civil service or are they all under civil service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; they are not all under the classified service. There are the classified and the unclassified. And I take pleasure in putting in the RECORD at this point a statement obtained from the Civil Service Commission, showing the civil-service employees of the United States and the manner in which they are divided. It is a very illuminating proposition, and it shows concretely the growth of this service.

The statement is as follows:

Number of persons in the executive service of the Federal Government on July 1, 1919, outside District of Columbia (United States Railroad Administration not included).

[Compiled from data furnished to the Bureau of the Census by the several departments and independent offices. Mr. IGOE. The number who came in under the civil service, whether classified or whatever form, those who were appointed by officers without regard to applications under any form of civil service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There are some, I do not know how many, engaged in the Government, either directly or indirectly, who are not under civil service. The number I have stated—102,000 in the District of Columbia—does not include those connected with the Railroad Administration. There are many quasi boards of the Government of the United States. There are members of some of these shipping boards and their forces not within the civil service, and as to that it would be impossible for me to state how many of those there are, but those who are included in the civil service in the United States, whether having passed the civil-service examination or not, are 760,000 in round numbers. There is another thing that confronted your committee and added to its difficulty. Every one of these emergency bureaus and divisions which you created during the war—and it was reasonable to believe would end their activities when the war activities had ceased—are now trying to convince us how necessary it is that they be continued and the great service that they are rendering to the Government, and many of them have asked for increased forces as compared with the force they had at the peak of the war.

Now, I wish briefly to call attention to some of the things developed by this bill; some of the things which we have done. The total appropriations carried in this bill are $103,650,016.11. The estimate presented to your committee was $122,453,685. The appropriations for the last year, or the fiscal year 1920, were $127,165,683.63. Now, the appropriations made by this committee for the fiscal year 1916, immediately before we entered upon the war, were $36,910,799.75, so you can see it has grown almost $67,000,000 as compared with the appropriations during the period of the war.

This bill is large when we contemplate that it means an expenditure of $104,650,016, but you should take into consideration that we have expenditures to make now that we had not to contend with before the war. There is one item alone of $42,038,000 to the Bureau of Internal Revenue for the enforcement of prohibition and enforcement of the antinarcotic act and many other activities imposed by reason of the changes in our manner of collecting our revenues. There is an appropriation of $10,824,400 to the War Risk Insurance Bureau; something we had not to do with before we entered upon this war. There is another item of $5,000,000 to the Census Bureau that was not included in these prewar estimates.

And I wish to say in passing that the total expense of the present census now being taken is $23,000,000, and that $17,550,000 has already been appropriated for this purpose. We carry an item of $5,000,000 in this bill, and it is estimated that it will take $1,500,000 in addition, that may be appropriated by a subsequent Congress.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman spoke of the amount that had been appropriated for the current year. I think it is fair to say that the legislative and judicial appropriation bill for the current year carried only $97,000,000, and of that some $15,000,000 was appropriated for the census.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; but to this sum of $97,000,000 must be added items provided for in the deficiency bill and other acts, that make the total appropriation for 1920 $177,165,683.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. How much does the Public Health Service carry?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The report will disclose exactly. I can not give the figures just now, and I do not care to estimate it.

Mr. LAYTON. There are 2,300 physicians, costing over $4,500,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say that their force in the city of Washington has been reduced over 200 by this bill.

The present bill is $23,515,667.52 less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year, and it is $18,803,669.41 less than the amount requested in the estimates. In other words, we have cut out of this bill from the estimates submitted by the various departments $18,803,669.41, to be exact.

Now, I desire to tell you as briefly as I can some of the more important items in our reduction.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. One or two department chiefs have said to me personally that because of reductions made by various appropriating subcommittees they have been forced from time to time to put in estimates much larger than they expected would be granted. Now, can the gentleman tell us whether or not any of the estimates submitted to his committee indicated that they were doubling up on the committee purposely, hoping thereby to get at least half or more of the amount demanded?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that we did not discover any deliberate attempt on the part of any of the departments to do that thing.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what the subcommittees will have to look for and expect.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Here is the great trouble with these estimates and in the sums asked for of these various committees: These gentlemen—and it is to be commended to a certain degree—are enthusiasts in the development of their own departments, and if they were not they would not be worthy of the places they occupy, but in their enthusiasm they forget and think nothing of the manner in which the money is to be raised. That is something that seems not to enter into their consideration. And I wish to say in passing here, in reference to one of our institutions that has grown from a very, very small beginning, until now it is a colossal institution, doing a splendid work, not only for the Government of the Untied States but for all the people of the United States. I refer to the Bureau of Standards. Only a few years ago you could have moved all the property that they had in a wheelbarrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has consumed one hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] and myself had an understanding that I should make my statement, and after that we would agree upon time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Would the gentleman like half an hour or an hour more?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think I can get through in an hour easily enough.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman be extended one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman can not get through in an hour, we will extend his time. It is not a very good practice to give unanimous consent to gentlemen to speak until they conclude, because that will invite a whole lot of time and take it from somebody else.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will try to get through in an hour.

Mr. SISSON. Just so it is understood that the gentleman from Indiana may have such time as he wants, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I shall not object, because the gentleman has been so very courteous and accommodating in answering questions that I would not object, no matter how much time he asked for.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. When I was interrupted I was speaking in reference to the Bureau of Standards. It would be impossible for me even to describe the great work that is being done by that institution and the great service it is rendering to all of the people of this country. Yet the gentleman who is at the head of that institution, who is one of the ablest men I have ever come in contact with, and who has more knowledge in one head than I thought possible to exist in one mind, made such demands that if the United States Government attempted to keep up with him in his enthusiasm for development and desire for development of that institution it would bankrupt the Government in course of time. I speak of that only as illustrating what the heads of these departments do. I think they come with honest intent in making their demands, but they do not seem to study the relations of things. They do not seem to realize that this money has got to be raised from some source, and that there is a limitation to the source of supply.

The War Department asked for a lump-sum appropriation of $4,000,000. Your committee, after elaborate hearings, concluded that the War Department could get along with $2,500,000 in addition to their statutory positions, so that we cut this estimate $1,500,000. We provided that out of this $2,500,000, $1,850,000 should be given to the office of The Adjutant General. The Adjutant General's office, as you know, has had imposed upon it some extraordinary duties since the war. It has been charged with the responsibility of furnishing to the adjutants general of all the States of the Union complete lists and histories of the boys from their respective States, a work which requires a great amount of help and a great amount of money. In addition to that there is a constant demand from the War Risk Insurance Bureau and from the Department of Finance in the War Department and various other departments and from the Navy for data and facts with reference to the boys who served in the Army under these several departments who now have claims against the Government, or who are asking for compensation, or who are asking for vocational training, so that unless this appropriation was made for the use of The Adjutant General's office, this very necessary service would have to be abandoned, according to the testimony of The Adjutant General. So, not wanting to cripple The Adjutant General's office in its ability to furnish this information as under the law it is now required to furnish it, and considering the demands of these institutions that have to look to the War Department for this information, we concluded that $1,850,000 of this $2,500,000 should be allotted to The Adjutant General's office.

Now, we eliminated, if you please, a great number of these high-priced clerical officers who came in as civilians during and after the war, drawing all the way, if you please, from $5,000 to $2,500. I will not take the time to enumerate them except to give one or two instances.

After the Creel syndicate went out of business there was created in the office of the Secretary of War a news bureau, the purpose of which was to censor all the news that came from the various bureaus of the War Department. This might have been necessary during the period of the war; but if it was necessary then, certainly that necessity ceased to exist with the termination of the war. We felt that that was a needless expense, and the gentleman occupying the head of that institution was one of those high-priced men. So all down the line we took and reduced these civilian employees of the War Department to the number of more than 1,300; so that if this law is enforced, as we hope it will be enforced, during the fiscal year 1921 there will be engaged in the War Department in the District of Columbia not to exceed 3,500 men.

There is another thing that we discovered, and we think the committee was of some service in bringing the opposing forces together growing out of a seeming conflict between some of the departments and the Bureau of Efficiency, established by an act of Congress for the purpose of trying to get more efficiency out of the employees in the District of Columbia; and we discovered that the activities of this Bureau of Efficiency were resented by some of the departments. They were resented in some little degree by The Adjutant General. I am not here for the purpose of criticizing The Adjutant General. I have a very high regard for him personally, and I think he is conscientiously doing his best for the Government of the United States. But he had some well-fixed notions of his own with reference to efficiency which seemed to be in conflict with the ideas of the Bureau of Efficiency. But after awhile he admitted, and it was demonstrated, that by reason of the change of policy in doing certain kinds of work in a different way they could save thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government of the United States; and, being convinced of that fact, The Adjutant General will adopt a new system that will result in considerable saving to the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Right in that connection I understand that under what is known as the Dockery law it is required that there shall be made of the funds received by the Supreme Court of the United States an audit, just the same as other departments of the Government are audited. I am informed that not since that law was passed a number of years ago has there been such an audit, and I have been informed by a very distinguished gentleman who was once an auditor that an attempt was made to audit the accounts of the clerk, and the Supreme Court refused to permit such an audit to be made. Does the gentleman from Indiana know anything about that?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I do not.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will make some inquiries, he will find, I am sure, from the information that has come to me from a reliable source, that the Supreme Court refuses to permit an auditor to inspect the accounts and books of the clerk of the court. That is right in the face of the law requiring that to be done.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will excuse me, I wish to bear testimony as to that, because I tried to accomplish that under three different Secretaries of the Treasury, and was refused by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANTON. If that condition prevails, some action ought to be taken. The Supreme Court is not different from any other department of the Government, I presume. I presume the accounts of the clerk of that court could be audited the same as the accounts of any other department, especially as the law requires it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the Supreme Court, which enforces the obedience of all others to the law, ought to be obedient itself.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to an item in the Ordnance Department. The Chief of the Ordnance Department asked for an authorization of $660,400, as against an authorization for the same purpose last year of $400,000. Your committee refused the estimate and left the authorization the same as it was last year.

It is interesting for us to know that we went through this war from the beginning to the end without ever having developed a piece of artillery that was fired on the fighting line in France. We appropriated millions and millions of dollars, but so unprepared were we when the war broke out and so behind hand with reference to our accouterments of war that it took all the time of the war for us to develop something that we felt might be efficient when we got it over there, and when we did we found that it was inefficient. Our 75-millimeter gun did not compare in efficiency with the French gun, and in consequence we used the French gun during the period of the war.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Was not the delay largely owing to the fact that the War Department debated what type of gun they should have instead of manufacturing a good gun which they had in hand at the time?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That question will lead up to the very purpose of my argument in a moment. It was demonstrated that never from the beginning of the war to the end did any of our belated production of guns compare in efficiency with the German gun; and, as I stated a while ago, although we manufactured during the war 810 of these guns and 363 carriages, and actually shipped to the other side 32 of these completed guns, not one of them was used in battle.

Now, the Chief of Ordnance tells us that we were in that position because of the fact that we had not kept pace with the growth of the artillery of the world; that by some unfortunate circumstance our military attachés over upon the other side were ignorant of what was going on over there. At any rate, our War Department was not furnished with the facts, and in consequence we were away behind. What is up to date in munitions of war to-day may be obsolete before to-morrow.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Do I understand that the War Department has advised the gentleman's committee that the French 75-millimeter gun was not so good as the German gun of that character?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely. That is the testimony of the gentlemen who appeared before our committee. They are asking this appropriation now, that they may keep up with the nations of the world in order that if we ever get into another war we will not be behind any other nation in artillery efficiency.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Did you have any testimony before your committee that the Ordnance Department is now going to change the design of our field gun, which has been recognized as one of the best field guns in the world? We changed to the 75-millimeter in order that we might utilize the French ammunition, but our 3-inch field guns have had the reputation for years and years of being the best field guns in the world. Now that Germany has a little better gun, do I understand that therefore they are going to change the type of gun? Was there any testimony along that line?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This is the testimony of the department. As I have stated, it is their contention that improvements are constantly being made, so that what may be our best gun to-day, and equal to the best gun of any other country in the world, may not be the best gun to-morrow; that it takes constant preparation to keep abreast with the continual improvement of the world in these destructive instruments. It is the purpose of this authorization, as I was about to state, to carry on the experimentations, many of which they have in hand now, and to anticipate not only what is being done by those who have been our allies and whom we hope will continue to be our allies, but by those from whom we may look for danger, and I think they are exactly right about that. One of the curses that befell this country was because of the fact that we had not been doing that thing before the war.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. It was testified before the Committee on Military Affairs some time ago, before we got into this war, that the American Springfield army rifle was about the last word in the manufacture of rifles so far as the development of effectiveness was concerned, and I believe that is correct. There is a certain limit beyond which they can not go. They may make some little changes in the mechanism, but in effectiveness, so far as a shooting iron or an instrument of warfare is concerned, there is a last word. That is true in artillery also, except perhaps in the increasing of the caliber of the gun. In my opinion there is no gun on earth which surpasses our field gun, except that perhaps the 75-millimeter French fieldpiece was a little more effective.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The trouble does not seem to consist entirely in the difference in the size of the two guns. It is also due to the construction of the gun. It has been discovered by those who were in a position to know, who speak authoritatively, that the French 75-millimeter gun is a little longer than ours and in consequence shoots a great deal farther than ours.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. The item of which the gentleman is speaking is an appropriation of $400,000. Do I understand that with $400,000 they are going to experiment all over the world as to the efficiency of different arms?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is not the purpose at all. The purpose of this appropriation, as was made plain by the gentlemen who appeared before us, was that it was for the purpose of experimentation in our own laboratories and in our own ordnance-manufacturing department, so that we can keep abreast with the information that comes to us as to what these other nations are doing. As I understand it, it is not for the purpose of manufacturing guns, but for the purpose of developing a gun to perfection. Then the blue prints are made and laid away for future use, or to be destroyed when they become obsolete by reason of the fact that something else has been brought out which is an improvement upon the gun adopted. It looks like a wonderful waste of money. After all the trouble that we have had in this war and all the woe and suffering and death and expense that has been entailed not only upon this generation but upon generations yet unborn, it may seem useless to many to expend this money, but I am still of the belief that the best guaranty of peace is in constant preparation for war; while this country does not declare war, there are other people who are not as content to live in peace, who, in my opinion, we had better be prepared for.

Mr. McKENZIE. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I would like to make one statement if he will permit it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. All right.

Mr. McKENZIE. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Congress of the United States, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], who is now gracing the chair of this Committee of the Whole, appropriated money for the express purpose of manufacturing the necessary gauges, dies, and jigs so that if we did get into war we could turn them over to such concerns as the Bethlehem Steel Co., and others, and have guns manufactured in a very short space of time. But for one reason and another, which I have never been able to understand, our Ordnance Department neglected to expend that money, and the war came on and we did not have the jigs and dies and gauges with which to manufacture the guns.

Mr. CALDWELL. It is only fair to say that the person responsible for that was Gen. Crozier, who has friends on that side of the House.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not concede that Gen. Crozier was responsible for that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not want to get into a side discussion.

Mr. CALDWELL. When a statement like that is made, it ought to be cleared up on the record.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. There are a great many apparent inconsistencies and incongruities in the War Department. We discovered, incidentally, that they have a peculiar way of fixing the salaries in the War Department. I was astounded when I learned that there was one gentleman connected with the War Department who, by reason of his military positions, receives quite as much as Gen. Pershing received before he was made General of the Army under the act of this Congress. I refer to Gen. Mitchell. He gets a base salary of $6,000; he gets commutation of quarters, $1,152; for heat and light he receives $342; then he gets 75 per cent of his salary because he flies occasionally. His total salary is $11,994.50. To put it another way, the base salary is $6,000 as brigadier general, and he gets $4,500 as a flier, so that he gets $500 more than did Gen. Pershing before he was made a general under the act of this Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not quite understand how this $11,000 is made up.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. This man gets $6,000 as a brigadier general. That is his base pay. Then he gets $1,152 for commutation of quarters, $342.50 for heat and light, and $4,500 as a flier, which is 75 per cent of his base pay as a brigadier general.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. He gets some "fogies," does he not, for being in the service?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; he gets some "fogies."

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the bill which the gentleman voted for making Gen. Pershing a general empowers the President to give him such allowance as he may see fit in addition to the salary?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know that it does.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the way it passed the House. I do not know how it passed the Senate.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish now to call the attention of the committee to the Quartermaster General's Department. On September 16, 1919, the present Quartermaster General issued an order consolidating the purchase service and the storage service into one service, to be known as the Supplies Division. In the execution of this order 72 officers were released, and preparation was being made for the release of more than 500 civilian employees. On September 26 the Secretary of War countermanded this order, and all these relieved officers were put back in their places and none of the civilians referred to were discharged. This action on the part of the Secretary of War cost the Government at the rate of $4,000,000 per year. That this saving could have been made was clearly established in the minds of a majority of your committee, and it was likewise clearly established that by this combination of service greater efficiency could be had. This fact was not only established by the Quartermaster General himself through his testimony and by that of his staff officers, but he was fully corroborated by the Bureau of Efficiency and by the Inspector General of the Army. That the Quartermaster General was right is further corroborated by the action of the Pennsylvania Railroad that has just lately adopted this very scheme of purchase and supply for the conduct of its great business affairs. In consequence your committee has recommended a provision consolidating the various branches of the Quartermaster Department to accord with this order of September 16, which we are assured will result in a future saving of 33⅓ per cent in this department.

Now, for the purpose of economy we abolish the Subtreasuries, one in Philadelphia, one in Boston, one in Chicago, one in Cincinnati, one in New Orleans, one at Baltimore, one at St. Louis, and one at San Francisco. The abolition of these Subtreasuries takes place on the 31st of December, 1920. That will result in a saving of salaries at these institutions of $455,705, and contingent expenses amounting to $148,337. The estimated saving in toto is $450,000. And in addition to that we were advised by the Secretary of the Treasury that it would save to the Treasury of the United States on an interest account alone $2,000,000.

We were convinced of the fact that these Subtreasuries had long outlived their usefulness, whatever function they performed, which was constantly a decreasing function since the establishment of the national banks in 1863 has been taken away by the Federal banks. I am informed by those who were here advocating the establishment of the Federal reserve banking system that one of the arguments that they then used was that it would result in the abolition of the Subtreasuries. There is absolutely no use for their further continuance. I am informed that the Committee on Banking and Currency has already introduced a bill providing for the manner in which the business of the Subtreasuries shall be wound up. This bill abolishes the Subtreasuries and provides that the civil employees therein shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury.

We also felt that we were justified in abolishing the Surveyor General offices—one in Alaska, one in Arizona, one in California, one in Colorado, one in Idaho, one in Montana, one in Nevada, one in New Mexico, one in Oregon, one in South Dakota, one in Washington, and one in Wyoming. The combined salaries and clerk hire of those offices amounts to $223,870, with contingent expenses amounting to $217,395.

I appreciate the fact that our action will precipitate objection from those representing these several States that have these land offices located within their confines. I know and appreciate full well that objection will also come from the representatives of those localities that have the Subtreasuries located in their States. I know that that is inherent within us and is a part of our selfish nature. I know the same objection was made when they sought to abolish the pension commissioners that were located throughout the country, one in every State in the Union. They became absolute sinecures, rendering no real service to the Government that could not as well and better be rendered by the Pension Office in this city. I know that when a statutory place is created and located in a State those immediately interested in its continuance object to its discontinuance; but we are here looking at the whole picture, looking at the expense that would be saved, looking at the increase of efficiency, and we are amply assured by those in a position to know that the work, whatever remains to be done by the Surveyor General's offices scattered throughout the West, can better be done at Washington.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The largest Subtreasury, outside of New York City, is located in Chicago. We have had this proposition up a number of times. I do not recall any Member of Congress from Chicago ever having urged that the Subtreasury be retained, and I hope that example may be followed elsewhere.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish it might be emulated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not want to let it go that Members from all localities affected by the loss of an office were protesting against it. I have thought that these Subtreasuries ought to be abolished. I do not think any Chicago Member ever thought otherwise, although I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What is the source of the gentleman's information that warrants him and his committee in reaching a conclusion that it would be wise to abandon the surveyors general offices in the various public-land States?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We were amply advised by those whose business it is to know something about them, and I wish to say to the gentleman that there is nothing that actuated the committee except the idea that we were not hurting the efficiency of this work, but if anything that we would be helping it, and that we would save this amount of money, not so extraordinarily large, but when all of these things are taken into consideration it makes a large sum. I would suggest to the gentleman that the surveyors general are not the only thing abolished by this bill. There are many other things abolished, and as I say, if there was not one bit of business for the surveyors general in the State of Idaho, there would be gentlemen here insisting that the office should be maintained, and that is but natural, for we have friends that are filling these places, and it is natural for us to desire that they continue just as long as possible.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, that remark is unwarranted. The occupant of the office of surveyor general in the State of Idaho was appointed by the present administration, and I do not even know him.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Has the gentleman no friends among the Democrats?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Very few. Did the gentleman's committee consult a single Member of Congress from the publiclands States in regard to the wisdom of abandoning these offices?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. So far as I know, we did not, and it would have been useless to do so. If we had consulted a single man, with the exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as far as I know, and the further exception of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCANDREWS], who is on the committee, with reference to the abolishment of these Subtreasuries, we could not have abolished one of them. Many appeared before us trying to convince us of the absolute necessity of continuing these Subtreasuries in the various localities. If we depended upon gentlemen from States where we abolish these offices to give us information as to the necessity of whether they should or should not be abolished, this bill, instead of carrying $104,000,000 would carry $150,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. As I stated before, I am not interested in the occupants of these positions. I want to make just one explanation. I am interested in the development of the resources of the western country, and I want to state that without these offices the settlement of the country will be very much hampered.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As against the testimony of the gentleman who just addressed us, I call the attention of the committee to the testimony of Mr. Tallman, whose business it is to know something about this thing. He is connected with the Department of the Interior. We first talked about the advisability of dispensing with a few of these surveyors general. Mr. Tallman felt that that would be unwise, that when we abolished one we should abolish all of them. He says:

> It is not advisable to consolidate offices of surveyor general. If there is any consolidation to be done they should be all consolidated and the work transferred to the Washington office.
>
> Mr. WOOD. That would not hurt; all of these offices could be abolished without material detriment?
>
> Mr. TALLMAN. Of course, I do not belittle that work. They are doing important work, but the organization is not altogether in harmony with the development of the field organization and the office organization. To understand that thoroughly one must know something of the history of the surveying business of the public lands, particularly this, that originally authority was largely decentralized in the surveyor general for each State, and he was an officer of considerable authority and power; he let contracts for the making of surveys and supervised the execution thereof; all of that business was handled through him. As the result of subsequent legislation we have entirely abolished all of that contract business and we make all of the public-land surveys by Government forces, direct appropriation, and direct expenditure. We have had to substitute our field organization in place of much of the work which was formerly handled by the surveyor general. In making a survey the field notes are returned to the surveyor general and they rewrite, correct, and perfect the field notes and make the plats. Then they return those to our office and we examine them, and, if acceptable, then we have an approved survey.
> It is perfectly apparent that a surveyor general's office is not an economical business institution, because we have too much overhead in each one in proportion to the amount of business we have there. That would not be true, perhaps, if we were going to survey a whole State at once; but take an office like South Dakota or some other office where we have a surveyor general, a chief clerk, a chief draftsman, and one or two draftsmen—in other words, more generals than privates—we could handle that work in a consolidated office, without any doubt, for much less than we are handling it now and much better.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I make one more observation? The public lands in a few of the States may be practically all surveyed, and probably it is true that those records and the work could be transferred to Washington without injuring the service, but in many of the States not one-half of the public lands are surveyed, and there is just as much need for a surveyor general now as there was 15 years ago.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I submit the testimony of Mr. Tallman as against that of the gentleman, and I think Mr. Tallman has no interest whatever in this matter, except to serve the best interests of the Government.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Does the gentleman believe that in a State like the State of Washington, where one-third of the area lies within the public domain, it would be best to have all of the business with respect to it transacted from the city of Washington, or would it be well to retain, say, in the State of Washington a surveyor general for the States of Washington, Idaho, and Oregon?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We spoke about the advisability of consolidating them, and, as I stated, Mr. Tallman says they should not be consolidated in parts; that there should be one consolidation here; and that the business could be more effectively done from here. There are still these land agents out there, who are not abolished or affected, and all of these things eventually have to come here to be finally passed upon, anyway. It is a duplication, and in consequence of the duplication there is needless expense.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I suppose the gentleman from Indiana will agree with all of us that the exercise of a governmental function has its foundation in the convenience of the people. Did anyone representing or defining the Territory or District of Alaska, or did Mr. Tallman himself, advise the abolishment and the taking without the District of the records of the surveyor general of Alaska?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We abolished everything up there in connection with the surveyor general except the secretary, who by reason of his office is the secretary of Alaska.

Mr. MILLER. What is the use of taking out all of the records of the surveyor general and leaving a secretary up there to feed out of the public crib?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Because the law makes the surveyor general of Alaska ex officio secretary of Alaska. The records, so far as that is concerned, mean nothing. We might as well say that it would be a convenience if we had a land office in the State of Indiana in order that we might keep the records that are here in Washington in Indiana. I admit that that would be a convenience, but it would be a useless expense, for all that is necessary for us to get the information that we desire is to write to Washington.

Mr. MILLER. Did Mr. Tallman advise the gentleman's committee that the surveyors general of 11 States be eliminated by——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, the gentleman will be no more inconvenienced after they are brought here than will the people who live in Georgia or Indiana or Mississippi. I do not see why you should be an exceptional class, or why you should have any more convenience than the common run of people. I know that government is formed for the convenience of the people, but if we carry that to its ultimate end, you destroy the Government itself by being unable to provide the conveniences you would like to have for everybody.

Well, we abolished the mints at Deadwood and Salt Lake. We felt they had outlived their usefulness, and they are but an additional expense upon this Government without bringing in any return whatever. There are a number of others I thought could well be abolished at this time, but the majority felt otherwise and we contented ourselves with abolishing those two.

I now wish to speak briefly of another action of this committee that may be criticized by some. We have abolished or refused to appropriate for the so-called commercial attachés. They asked for $300,000. They had $165,000 in the last appropriation bill. It is not the purpose or the desire of the committee to injure in the least the Department of Commerce or its activity in extending our foreign trade. It is the purpose, I believe, of the entire committee to aid if possible in doing something to help the business men of this country in extending our foreign trade. But this thing developed before your committee: It was admitted by those representing both sides of the controversy that there is a conflict of authority between the Department of State and the Department of Commerce with reference to these commercial attachés. For all time since the beginning of the Government our foreign business relations were conducted exclusively through the State Department until after the creation of the Department of Commerce. After the creation of that department we first sent so-called commercial agents over there to represent us in looking after our business or manufactures. They went from place to place rendering the best service that they knew how. After that we created what is known as commercial commissioners. Some of them were stationary residents, some traveled about over the country doing substantially the same thing the agents did. After that there was created these commercial attachés.

There is no law for the creation of commercial attachés except the original organic act creating the Department of Commerce, and through that department they have created these commercial commissioners and these commercial agents. Now, we are continuing to have the Consular Service of this country represent the business interests of the country or the commerce of the country, and they are engaged in doing the same kind of work which the commercial attachés are doing. The commercial attaché, by reason of the fact that he thinks that his department is charged primarily with this commercial business, seeks to assert himself as the superior representative of the commercial interests of this country to the consular officer; but, on the other hand, by reason of the fact that the consular agents have been engaged in the business since the creation of this Government, the Consular Service insists upon being the superior agent. You know what that results in. It results in conflict of authority. It results in want of efficiency and it results in needless waste of expenditure. Mr. Sweet, a very intelligent gentleman, fair-minded, appearing for the Department of Commerce, admitted to your committee that there is a conflict there, and that it should be removed; that for the best interests of this country there should be a single authority and a single responsibility, and according to his idea it ought to be centered in the Department of Commerce. On the other hand, those who represent the other service of the United States feel that it ought to be centered in the State Department, where it has always been, and where it should continue, as the reports of these gentlemen come through the State Department and from the State Department to the Commerce Department. The commercial attachés or agents, in making their reports, which come to the State Department, sometimes copy verbatim the language in the consular report, and vice versa, showing, if you please, that there is a duplication in doing the same kind of work that ought to be avoided. Now, we propose to bring this thing to a focus.

We believe the Foreign Affairs Committee or the Commerce Committee, or both, ought to get together and evolve some plan whereby we can get the worth of our money, where there would not be this continual duplication of authority and of money expended on the part of the United States and the attendant friction inherent with this mixed responsibility. Now, we also reduced the appropriation for our commercial work in the Far East by $50,000, so far as European activities are concerned. It may be said, perhaps justly if we are wrong, that now, above all other times, should we try to extend our commercial connections on the other side. We did not reduce the appropriation so far as South America is concerned at all, because if there is a place in the world where we can sell goods to-day and hope to get our pay it is South America. If there is one place where a fertile field exists where we can profitably extend our efforts it is in South America, and it should be encouraged as far as possible. But that state of facts does not exist in the Far East and it does not exist in continental Europe. Continental Europe is bankrupt to-day. They absolutely have nothing with which to pay if they buy from us, except the money they borrow from us to pay for our own goods. Not only is that true, but by reason of the extraordinary efforts that are being made to sell to European countries, they paying for the goods with our own money loaned to them, on which they can not pay interest, we are every day mounting higher and higher the cost of living to the American people. [Applause.] And that was the reason we reduced this estimate. We made a reduction in the estimates of the War Risk Bureau of more than $5,000,000, not because we wanted to cripple the bureau.

Every man in this Congress is a friend of that institution. We have criticized its operations and it is subject to criticism yet; but we have given them all the money, and will continue to give it as long as it is necessary to carry on to the fullest its activities. Those who are in charge of the War Risk Bureau asked that an appropriation be made to the amount of a million dollars for the purpose of advertising in the magazines and in the great metropolitan newspapers of the United States. Query: Advertise what? They have nothing to sell; but the explanation was that the ex-service boys, many of them, did not even know there was such a thing as the War Risk Bureau; that most of them are ignorant of the rights they have; that many of them are not aware of the advantages that might be given them through vocational training or the compensation to which they are entitled; and that for the purpose of bringing these advantages home to them they wanted to advertise these facts through the newspapers of the country or by posting them upon billboards, and so forth. Now, Mr. Jones—and I think he is trying to do a splendid work down there—has accomplished a good deal of good, and as he becomes better informed of the necessities of the institution will be enabled to do more good. His environment has been that of a newspaper man connected with the advertising department of one of the great metropolitan magazines of this country, and he can only see the accomplishments of advertising through an advertising medium of that character.

I suggested to him, and I appeal to you if it is not reasonable, that if he wants to get this information to every one of these boys a far better way of advertising would be to take and notify the Congressman from each district of each new ruling, each new service or privilege, showing what this boy and that boy is entitled to, and the Congressman will see that it is put in every newspaper in his district and brought home to everyone who would be benefited by this knowledge. He could do more for these boys than Mr. Jones can by his kind of advertising, and it will not cost us anything. So by applying a little common sense we eliminate the $1,000,000. They also ask $2,000,000 for the purpose of collecting the premiums on insurance policies. There is a bill pending here now, known as the Wason bill, that has that very subject in its purview, and by the enactment of that or some other bill that expense will be provided for; and so it was taken out. We also took a million dollars out of his estimate for field service. We have established under another act eight war-risk agencies, or war-risk posts, in the United States. Six of these have been established. Two are not established yet—one at Minneapolis and the other at St. Louis, I believe. For the activities in only the eight institutions, but hoping to establish one in each of the cities of the Union, he asks for $1,500,000. We appropriated $500,000 for that purpose. He only expended $233,000 out of the current appropriation for the six offices already created. The appropriation that he had this year was a little over $200,000. But they have admitted that unless we create more offices $600,000 would be ample, and we believed that $500,000 would be plenty, and in consequence we limited our appropriation for that purpose to the sum of $500,000.

There are now employed in this institution, or were employed there in the month of December, about 10,000 men and women. At one time there were 17,000, and every man in this Congress knows that it was the most inefficient establishment in our entire Government; that the employees were absolutely so thick that they could not work if they had desired to do so; and that a very large per cent of them did not even desire to do so. Fortunately, the head of this institution at the close of the war secured the services of Col. Wayner, who was the official Army canner, I understand, over there. He has been doing a splendid job of canning in this establishment. He has been reducing these 17,000 until they had it down to about 10,000 in December, and the appropriation we have made of $9,000,000 for the payment of the personnel will, according to the calculation given us with reference to the wages paid, provide for an average of 7,500 clerks during the fiscal year 1921. And this, gentlemen, must reduce the number to that amount. And by doing so they will render a greater service than they have ever been rendering yet, in my opinion, even when they had 17,000 people down there.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. The only way you can limit the number is by limiting the appropriation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the only way you can do it.

Mr. HASTINGS. You have no other jurisdiction? That would be legislation on the bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. We have not.

There is another provision that we put in this bill. We put a limitation on the Federal Farm Loan Board, providing that hereafter all the loans made by the Federal farm boards throughout the United States, and there are many of them, and they are constantly growing and doing splendid work, should be paid by the Federal farm loan banks themselves and should no longer be a charge in general upon the taxpayers of the United States. I am happy to say to you that this suggestion met with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board itself; and their officers prepared the provision that will carry this into effect.

In the Internal Revenue Department we made an appropriation that seems large. It is large, but it is the only source that brings to the Government any considerable revenue. We have added responsibilities beyond the dream of anyone in this country a few years ago. Whether we have given them enough or not is problematical. I think it is problematical even with those who are in charge of the enforcement of the new laws imposed upon the Internal Revenue Department. This department during the present year will have collected $6,000,000,000 in taxes. It is charged with greater responsibilities than ever, though perhaps they will not be able to collect as much money next year as they did last. As a consequence we not only permitted their present statutory force to remain but increased it considerably. We allowed them $4,500,000 for the two activities, the enforcement of the prohibition act and the enforcement of the narcotic act. The narcotic drug estimate submitted by them was $750,000, and it occurred to your committee that these activities could be connected up to a certain extent, and an agency in enforcing one of these laws might be used for enforcing the other. We called the attention of the commissioner to our opinion in reference to this thing, and after some consideration he said that he thought that could be done, and that they were already attempting to organize their force in accordance with the suggestion I have made. And in consequence we reduced that appropriation $250,000.

We increased the appropriation for the Patent Office because of the absolute necessity existing there. The Patent Office has had less attention paid to it in the last few years than almost any other department. When the war ceased all the ingenuity of the American people was turned toward the invention of instruments of peace rather than those of war.

The American people are the greatest inventors upon the face of the earth. They have invented more instruments and different kinds of machinery and appliances in proportion to our population than any other people upon the face of the earth. And the very necessity that confronted us when war broke upon us aroused the inventive genius of the American people as it had never been aroused before. In consequence the applications for patents coming through the department are now 115 per cent greater than they were before we got into the war, and the trade-mark registrations have increased more than 100 per cent. The income in 1918 was $1,975,728; in 1919 it was $2,418,824, and the estimate is that for this year it will far exceed this amount. And, if you please, this is one of the few self-sustaining departments of the Government. After paying all their overhead, after paying everything that they could be charged with if they were running as an independent business establishment itself, they will have a surplus this year of over $150,000; and by reason of the fact that some time ago we doubled the price of a patent from 5 to 10 cents, the amount of surplus will continue to grow greater. We think that justified us as a business proposition, letting alone the efficiency required, in making the increase.

We appropriated for the Census Office, as I believe I stated a while ago, the sum of $5,000,000. The estimate was for $6,215,000. This office had already received $17,550,000 out of their estimates for completing the work of $23,000,000, which leaves $1,500,000, which can not be used until after the close of this fiscal year and until after another Congress shall have convened, and which may then know their absolute necessities, when that appropriation will be made.

There were but two salaries of chiefs of bureaus increased by this bill. Your committee felt they were justified in increasing the salary of Dr. Putnam, at the head of the Library of Congress, $1,000. He is now getting $6,500. We have made it $7,500. The evidence disclosed the fact that there is no great library in the United States but what pays its chief more than what Dr. Putnam is paid. The cities of Brooklyn, New York, Cincinnati, and Chicago pay their librarians $10,000 a year. This is the parent library that has to do with all of them, to which all look for their guidance, and its chief has been paid only $6,500.

We have increased the salary of the Director of the Botanic Garden, who is receiving $2,400. We felt that by reason of the responsibility of that place and the excellent work done by the present incumbent his salary should be increased from $2,400 to $3,000.

We did not undertake to increase or to consider the salaries of the clerical forces in the various departments, for the reason that this Congress enacted a law appointing a commission upon reclassification. They are engaged upon that work now and their report is soon to be submitted. We felt that it would not be proper for us until we have that report to do that thing. That there is need for reclassification all will admit. We found clerks who were being paid a certain salary in one department and a clerk doing exactly the same kind of work in another department is paid another salary, and this disparity has grown up on account of the unfortunate manner of different committees making these increases and creating these offices and at the same time establishing these divergent salaries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How much more time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. About 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I wish also to call the attention of the committee to the provision in this bill with reference to the compensation of Members' clerks. We inserted the same language in this bill that already exists by reason of a resolution passed at the last Congress, providing for the sum of $3,200. This increase is subject to a point of order, but if a point of order is raised against it and sustained, I wish to apprise the committee of the condition we would be in. The only law that authorizes the expenditure of money for the Members' clerical force is a law limiting it to $1,200 a year, so that unless this provision or some other provision is made, that figure would be the limitation under the law. I thought it wise to apprise the House at this time of this fact, so that the Members might have this under consideration and prepare for it when it comes up for discussion under the five-minute rule.

We also put a provision in this bill which I know will save the Government many thousands of dollars in the course of a year, and will also save us from scandals that have occurred in times past and which may happen again. We have a different way, and these departments have a different way, in taking and calculating the traveling expenses and subsistence expenses of those connected with the Government who go about on official business. It has been abused to a considerable extent, and by reason of its want of uniformity it has occurred to the Comptroller of the Treasury that some uniform system should be adopted, so that we have prepared and inserted in this measure a limitation which is intended to cover it.

I wish to call the attention of the House to one of the incidents which prompted this legislation. The governor of Alaska entered upon a tour of alleged inspection of some character or other over the Territory of Alaska on August 5, 1918, and continued it until October 7, 1918. During that period he expended $31 in tips, giving all the way from 50 cents to $6 at a time in tips. In one case he gave the chambermaid $6 and the porter $6. In that same period of time he spent $31.60 for laundry, showing that he at least kept his clothes clean. During that same period of time he expended $13 in having his trousers pressed. His total bill, including necessary and unnecessary expenses during that period of time, was $326.22. Fifty-two dollars and fifty-two cents was denied. Now, it is just such practices as this that makes it absolutely necessary for the adoption of some sort of a provision whereby the auditing officers and the Comptroller of the Treasury might have some chance of putting a stop to the same.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman proposes by the bill to cut off the opportunity for making such expenditures, but he also proposes to raise the salary of the governor of Alaska $1,000. Would it not be cheaper to let him continue to make these expenditures and keep his salary as it is?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is misinformed. We did not raise his salary. We had an application to raise his salary, but we denied it. That is what we did to the governor of Alaska.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I may be mistaken, but my recollection is that the gentleman's report says you raised it $1,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. If the gentleman will examine the bill, he will find that we did not raise it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I have not examined the bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The application was refused.

Here is another practice whereby the good offices of the Government are abused and the good intentions of the law are subverted. These gentlemen who are going about over the country on official business are, under the law, entitled to be paid for their absolute and necessary expenses; but in the instance that I have called to your attention, this gentleman was not engaged in doing the business of the Territory at all. He was engaged in a political-speaking campaign from the day he started until he stopped, and he was stopped by reason of the fact that some of the citizens of Alaska sent a telegram to Mr. Lane, the Secretary of the Interior, to the effect that the governor was abusing not only the confidence which the Secretary had placed in him but was engaged in violating the law by going over the Territory making political speeches, and thus he stopped immediately after it was called to his attention by the Secretary of the Interior.

Another thing to which I wish to call attention is the subject of the bonus. We have placed in this bill a provision for a $240 bonus, with the same limitation that was placed in the last bill. We have excluded from it the police department and the fire department in the city of Washington, for the reason that during the present Congress they have had their salaries raised so that the least increase that any of them has received is very nearly twice the amount of the bonus. It would have been absolutely unfair to the other employees in the District of Columbia if this bonus had been permitted to these employees in the fire department and the police department in the District of Columbia.

We also provided that the bonus for the playground officials and employees should be paid entirely out of the funds of the District of Columbia. We further provided that the commission and the clerical force created by the law passed in 1918 creating a Minimum Wage Board in the District of Columbia should be paid entirely out of the money of the District of Columbia. I do not know how many gentlemen here remember having voted for that law, which provided for the establishment of a board which can go to every business man in this town and dictate to him the minimum wage that he shall pay to women and minors, absolutely destroying the right of contract, absolutely violating the constitutional provision that property shall not be taken without due process of law. It was done, however, by this Congress, and it is still in existence. The employees of this board may be entitled to their bonus under the law, but we have provided that it shall be paid out of the moneys of the District of Columbia.

These are some of the more important features of this bill. I know that when you take away things which are being enjoyed by others you do not add to your popularity, but I believe at least we will receive the sympathy of a tax-suffering public in our attempt to save them a few million dollars. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. I should like to inquire how much time the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] consumed?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. LONGWORTH). The gentleman from Indiana consumed 2 hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, before discussing the merits of the bill I feel I would not be doing justice to myself or to my associates on the committee if I did not make a statement to the House as to the service rendered by the chairman of the subcommittee. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has, as chairman of the subcommittee, rendered to the House and to the country faithful, efficient, and able service. During the consideration of the bill it would have been extremely difficult to determine who were the Democrats and who were the Republicans on that committee.

I have been a member of this committee for some years. It is a committee which requires patience, toil, and care in making up the bills that come to it. This is true at all times. Since we got into war the labors have multiplied a hundredfold. No one not serving on this great committee can have any conception of its labors. I have helped to make up many bills in the appropriation committees, but this bill has presented more difficulties, more nagging details and complications than any bill in whose preparation I have ever been called upon to assist in making up. We had to deal with lump-sum rolls, with temporary rolls; we had to deal with rolls made up of sums of money transferred under the Overman Act from one fund to another, so that we had at least four different rolls to consider. In addition to that, many of those who were responsible for the making of the estimates had put onto the statutory roll many of the people who were on the temporary rolls, and it was necessary to trace them all up and eliminate them if we were to ever get rid of them, for once on that roll it is next to impossible to get rid of them even when the necessity for them is ended. We have sought to care for these remaining temporary positions out of lump sums, so that they can be dropped as soon as not needed. This hang over of war activities should not be permanent, but should be eliminated at the earliest day possible. If they ever get on the statutory roll, I have found that you can not blow one of them off with a stick of dynamite. The chiefs always find an excuse to keep them.

I mention these difficulties, which do not confront the committee ordinarily but which have confronted us in the framing of this bill, to give you some idea of the enormous amount of detail when you take into consideration the thousands of salaries to be considered. For these reasons I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is to be congratulated on the magnificent showing which he has made. He has been patient, painstaking, efficient, and I am sure he has exercised that legislative courage which ought to characterize every man on the floor of the House in doing what he believes to be right. [Applause.]

I also wish to say for our other colleagues on the subcommittee that they have been equally industrious, but it just happened that the burden fell largely upon the chairman of the committee, and I am sure that I am voicing the sentiment of the entire subcommittee when I make this statement publicly, because I believe it is due the gentleman from Indiana, in order that his colleagues in the House may know how faithfully he has served upon this committee. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the committee, I do not believe it will be said that I have ever been charged with being an extravagant member of the Committee on Appropriations. On the contrary, since I have been a member of that committee I have endeavored to appropriate public funds with the same degree of care that as an attorney or administrator I would handle a trust fund, and I believe that my colleagues on the committee will also say that when I am convinced that a salary should be increased, or that money should be appropriated and paid, I have not hesitated to say so. But I also feel that everyone who has ever served with me will with equal readiness say that until convinced of the necessity of the appropriation I do not hesitate to say so. I want also to say that in so far as I have been able to observe none of my colleagues on the committee in using the snickersnee has displayed any favoritism.

The chairman of the subcommittee has so thoroughly covered the details of this bill in his very clear statement that it is not necessary for me to go into details as to the items in the bill. There were a few differences, most of them minor, and I shall not mention them. There are two or three, however, to which I will call your attention. This bill consolidates "Purchase" and "Storage and Traffic." At this time my colleague [Mr. MCANDREWS] and I thought this ought not to be consolidated, because the Army reorganization bill will become a law on the 1st of July, the time this bill goes into effect, and that bill will control. We should have waited until the committee on Military Affairs, having legislative jurisdiction, had acted. This present organization, which is now being disturbed, is the organization which Gen. Goethals perfected during the war. This department under the old organization failed to function. Chaos and confusion reigned. The two departments were then combined. Goethals separated them. They functioned. Now, to consolidate again may break up an organization which in time of war was found necessary. Gen. Goethals gave the whole matter great consideration, and was selected by the Secretary of War to relieve the situation, which at the time was alarming. Just think of the mighty task of securing the war supplies from farms and factories—that is, having them produced—and then, after production, having them assembled and distributed to the various units of the Army in America and in Europe—the greatest problem of the war. This organization accomplished this mighty feat, and I think before we break it up and go back to the old system, which failed, we should hesitate.

It is true that it is contended on one side that it will save some money. On the other hand, it is contended by the other side that it will not save a cent. The truth is that the Army officers responsible for the old organization in the Quartermaster General's office have resented the new organization, and it is a question of Army politics, a question of who has authority. So, Mr. Chairman, the minority of the subcommittee thought it best to leave this organization alone and let the reorganization bill settle the controversy, as, by the way, it will do, irrespective of what we do in this bill.

The item about which my colleague [Mr. MCANDREWS] and I differed with the majority of the committee was the abolishing of the commercial attachés and the reduction of the amount for the service of commercial agents abroad and other activities of the Secretary of Commerce.

I have never been wedded to the commercial attaché system. On the contrary I do not believe it is wise to have our commerce and our diplomacy mixed up together. I will not go into a discussion of that question; but the reason that I thought it unwise to reduce at this time the force which we had in foreign countries was that within the next 18 months, when peace treaties shall have been signed and the world shall assume a normal condition, or as nearly so as it can within that time, the governmental activities of other countries will be reaching out for foreign trade, and they will not only establish this service, but according to the testimony before our committee the other Governments, and especially the English Government, have adopted practically this form of governmental activity in extending foreign trade. Therefore, feeling that we ought not to disturb our relations, and especially in the Far East, I thought we ought to give to the Secretary of Commerce the amount carried in the current law, and I also believed that, notwithstanding the deplorable conditions in Europe, it would be wise not to disturb in any way this service in Europe at the present time.

The people of the South are especially interested. Our cotton crop must seek foreign market, not only the raw cotton but the manufactured cotton. Our American mills should be kept in close touch with conditions abroad so as to secure this trade at least on equal terms with our foreign competitors.

If America makes up her mind that she is not going to look after this character of service, in my judgment, our foreign trade is going to suffer.

The great Imperial Government of Germany was the first Government that undertook to use the Department of Commerce for the purpose of extending her trade throughout the world. It is true that England had a magnificent consulate system throughout the world, but Germany pursued the course of taking specialists, for instance, in the shoe business or the clothing business, and establishing proper financial relations in foreign nations. In addition to that she would ascertain the kind and character of goods needed in a particular nation, then would give that information to the manufacturers and have them manufacture the character of goods used in that section of the world. Then, following up that information, the German traveling man would go into all the foreign nations and sell to these nations because, first, the financial arrangements had been made, and, second, the needs and necessities of the country along these lines had been ascertained. He was after the business.

I recall a letter written by an English consul in India on one occasion back to his home office. He said:

I walked into the office this morning, took off my hat, looked on the inside, and found it was made in Germany. I walked upon a rug which was made in Germany. I hung my hat up on a costumer that was made in Germany. The pen that I write this letter with was made in Germany. I took up some stationery, upon which I am writing this letter, and if you look through and see the watermark you will find that it was made in Germany. I am writing on a table that was made in Germany; I am wearing a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes that were made in Germany; and about the only thing made in England is your consul who is writing this letter.

He was giving that as a statement of what the German commercial system had done. Secretary Redfield, in my judgment, has been a great Secretary of Commerce. It has been said by some that it would take two Treasuries to supply his demands. But he did make a great Secretary of Commerce. At this time I was unwilling that we should curtail this service that Secretary Redfield has built up. I did not ask that the appropriation be increased, but I wanted the current law, because I do want America to take her place as one of the great commercial nations of the world. And in building up that commerce I do not want it put back in our Diplomatic Service and conducted along the dollar-diplomacy route, but along the line of merit, as an arm of our commerce. I am opposed to mixing our diplomacy and business. I have many fundamental reasons for this, but I will not take the time to go into that now.

We have made an effort to reduce expenses in this bill without crippling the Government in the least. I do not believe that it is possible to make any radical reduction in expenses without hurting somebody. You may not hurt the public service, but you are going to hurt the fellow that holds the job, and it is going to take some little nerve to do it. I welcome my Republican friends into the ranks of economy. We have been preaching this doctrine for a century, and we are glad that we have converted you. In the campaign you are now making for economy I strike hands with you across the aisle and say that I will do everything in my power to help you reduce the expenses of the Government. [Applause.]

I was talking to a gentleman, whose name I will not mention, but he has served in the Cabinet with distinction and also in the Senate. He is not of my political faith. I met him a few weeks ago in a street car and we were riding down town together. He asked me how we were getting along in the House. I said "I am joining hands with the Republicans endeavoring to reduce expenditures in the Government activities; but," I said, "there is a great deal of difficulty about it." "Well," he said, "I know the difficulty that you have, because, as you know, I have served in the Cabinet and I have served in the Senate, so I know both ends of it. And let me tell you, I know of but one way to perform a surgical operation, and that is to cut, and when you cut it means blood. You will sometimes have to cut a nerve and somebody has got to suffer, but at least you ought to make the cut for the benefit of the patient; make the cut in the interest of the public service, make it for the benefit of Uncle Sam, for the benefit of the American people and the Government."

I agree with him; it takes a whole lot of courage. Ask my colleagues on the committee as to the enormous amount of pressure that is brought to bear on the committee. In addition to that, on the part of the Government comes the head of a department and says that you have done a great injustice. Now, I would not have any respect for a bureau chief that did not feel that his bureau was an important one and that if we did not give him what he asked for he would feel that he was being wronged, because it takes that kind of a spirit to make a good Government official. But you have got to exercise nerve and say no when the taxpayers are staggering under a heavy load. Another thing: When you make a cut that affects a constituent of mine, my constituent comes and tells me what a gross injustice has been done. I go to the committee and say you must not do that.

Take a man who is the head of a bureau. You cut his bureau and he goes to his Representative or to his Senator and complains that something has been cut out of his particular section of the country, say, down South. Suppose you have taken some activity away from my district, some activity from my State. I am immediately telegraphed to, and then I feel that I have got to get busy; if not, I am going to lose some votes. The result is that the interests in my section build fires behind me. These are some of the many things that you have to contend with in reducing expenses of the Government. In my country they will say, "Why don't you reduce them somewhere else?" and then the other fellow from some other place will say, "Why don't you reduce them down South?" In fact the South gets the hot end of it. These difficulties multiply when you endeavor to reduce the expenditures of Government all along the line. But let me say this: If these expenditures in Government are not reduced, if we do not exercise real courage and good judgment toward that end, mark what I tell you, the Government will continue to grow burdensome, and as the burdens of Government will grow greater and more people are covered into the salary rolls, and oppression and taxation rest more and more heavily on the masses of the people, socialism and anarchy—to my mind the most alarming tendencies of government—will rapidly increase. Not only that, but you will not find a man who believes in socialism, or who has in mind the idea that there should be a common ownership of property, who will object to any new activities on the part of the Federal Government, except those pertaining to the Army and the Navy. There is no new governmental activity that you can propose to a socialist that he will not instantly agree that he wants the Government to take charge of it, and why? Because the greater number of activities you have covered into the Government service, the more people you have who are themselves in sympathy with continuing those activities and adding others until there will be no room for private business. All will be done by the Government, which is socialism.

Gentlemen of the House, let us hasten to return to constitutional and economic government. I believe in that everlastingly sound principle of government—economy of public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened. Government should not and our own Government was not established to furnish employment for labor or to take care of labor, but was established to secure to labor what it earned and see that it had equal rights with all.

Not only that, but let us quit talking laboring classes. This is not a government of classes. Let us not create a class or classes. There ought not to be any system of commerce, any system of government, any system of organization of industrials that will bring about a laboring class and a capitalistic class. [Applause.] There ought to be no such divisions, and when you shall by arbitrary law, when you shall by any system of economics, establish an organization so that a man by such organization belongs to a particular class, because he sells only his toil, and you fix his status there by such organization, I do not care what you call him, I do not care what name you give him, you will in this Republic have established a class, which is dangerous to the Republic and, if not remedied, will destroy it. Therefore I do not want such divisions ever made in society in America. I want the boy born in poverty to know that if he is economical, if he is energetic, if he is honest, and if he will become efficient in any line of endeavor he will succeed. It is this knowledge, this hope, and this incentive that have made America the greatest nation on earth. I am unwilling that any modern organization or false doctrine shall destroy that hope in any boy's heart. [Applause.] I want it implanted in the heart of every boy able to understand, whether he be born in the hovels of a city or in a cabin of a rural district, that when he opens his eyes in this world he is opening them under a sky and in a country where he can know as he grows older that he has equal opportunities with everyone else. Let him have in his heart that everlasting principle that labor is honorable and that idleness is dishonorable.

Let it be instilled into his mind that he must become a worker and a producer in this world either with his hands or with his brains, and he shall become, by his own energy and the exercise of his own power, stronger every day, and he will be one of those who become the captains of industry, who wield influence in the communities in which they live, and who will finally direct the affairs of state. These are the men who make the great leaders of the world and have made America great. [Applause.]

I have no faith in the doctrine that every man is entitled to a living wage. Do not become startled or angry. I have voted for every measure that I could to advance the interests of labor. I do not believe in weighing the palpitating human heart in the same scales where you weigh a pound of bacon, nor am I willing to deal with labor as you deal with a mere commodity. I want to deal with labor as having a heart and a mind which can feel, something which has an entity, something which is a part of government, something that is a moving, thinking conscience. I would not let any man believe, however, that he is entitled to a living wage, for it is not true. No man is entitled as a matter of right to a living wage. He is entitled to all that he earns. He is entitled to all, by virtue of his skill and his ability, he is capable of earning. The man who can make the equivalent of 2 pairs of shoes a day ought not to have the same wage, although working to the best of his ability, as the man who makes 10, yet he may eat as much and wear as much. He is not as useful to society. I would not have that doctrine accepted in this country, because it makes for inefficiency. Why should a man become efficient if he earns no more than the inefficient?

That is the criticism that I have of our civil service in this country. I agree literally with the chairman of this committee that great reforms can be made in our civil service.

The civil service now means that he who lives under the civil service and is able to hold his position by the least amount of toil receives just as much as those who are efficient, simply because he has been in the service a certain number of years, and, therefore, is entitled to promotion or to an increase in pay. That is the wrong idea. I do not believe in that. Let us take this illustration: Suppose I had a farm and my neighbor had a farm. My neighbor gets up every morning and works hard. He builds fences, and digs ditches, and builds a nice home, and makes money, and becomes prosperous because he is energetic. I have the same sort of farm to start with, but I am not energetic and do not work as hard or as wisely. In the course of a few years my neighbor has a prosperous farm, one that pays good money, while mine does not pay. Would you say that the man who has a farm that is not well tended, the inefficient man, shall get just as much as the man with the well-worked farm? You would not believe that for a moment. The difference between the two is that the civil-service employee is attached to the pay roll of the Treasury and he gets just as much when he is a bad tenant at a desk and when he is inefficient as the man who is efficient, and I say that that is wrong.

That ought to be remedied. I do not believe that that idea ought to run through all the labor organizations throughout this country. I believe it ought to be always a question of efficiency, and efficiency ought to be rewarded. I am not justifying any capitalistic injustice. I think that a great deal of the unrest in this country may be traced largely to the selfishness and greed of mankind. I think we might with profit preach various sermons from our sacred desks occasionally from the text that "the love of money is the root of all evil." I believe that that is literally true. I believe if we studied and analyzed the evils of mankind we could trace back many of our disturbances and conditions to the love of money. In other words, the man who has a competency, who has an income more than he can expend, seems to love money greater than ever and desires it more than he did formerly. He becomes oppressive, and by using any special privileges that he may get or that come through the Government in which he lives he may simply enhance his opportunities to get more money. And so the conflict is going on as it is now between labor organizations on the one hand and capital organizations on the other.

I do not believe that that is a healthy situation for us. I think the public, what Carlyle called "the inarticulate mass, the unorganized mass," should be considered. We have a few thousand capitalists on the one hand and about 4,000,000 organized labor on the other, and here between them are 100,000,000 people standing mute, standing unorganized. They have no one to come around the committee room and appeal for them. As Carlyle said of them, they are inarticulate. They do not clamor around committee rooms, but you will find men of great capitalistic influence have their representatives here, and you will now find the labor organizations have theirs. The great public, the masses, have none. Gentlemen, that situation can not exist long, because you must do justice and equity not only as between the two but as to this third party—the people—as well. I believe the Government of the United States and the State Governments are stronger than the demands of either capital or labor, or of both combined, and capable of making both of them do right. Make both of them amenable to law. [Applause.] If you do not have this rule of law, you are either going to have some form of despotism or some form of Bolshevism.

I am nothing but an old-fashioned American; an old-fashioned Democrat, if you please. I believe in the Government and in the Constitution established by the fathers. I believe in the Government that was adhered to and upheld by George Washington. I believe in the Government that was loved and defended by Andrew Jackson. I believe in the Government that had its very origin in the principles announced by Thomas Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence, and I have no apologies to make. Under this Constitution we have grown from 13 small Colonies into the strongest and wealthiest people on earth. It has been the hope of all struggling people everywhere. Why shall we now depart from those principles? No; gentlemen of the House, it is our highest achievement when we can reestablish the Government upon those principles which for the duration of this World War were suspended. Let not these contending forces—selfish capital, on the one hand, and socialistic labor, on the other—destroy it. Each is endeavoring to use the powers of the Government for their own advantage. Let us say to both, "You shall be subject to law."

I have some uneasiness in my heart when I find a man who does not love a government by law. I believe as long as we have a government by law we should have the same rule to control all—labor and capital, rich and poor. Where you have no special privilege or special right that I do not have, where you have the same right to go into business that I have, where you have the same right to go into a profession that I have, and as long as the Government gives to each of us that right certainly it is up to each and every individual man by his own energy, by his own enterprise, by his own power to help himself. In other words, every man who lives under this flag of ours shall always have under the law equal rights. This is all any brave man wants. It is all any honest man would have. If he is not brave and honest, then he should be compelled to take nothing that the law does not give him. He should be made to do right. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let us adhere to these simple truths in dealing with every cent in the Public Treasury. When men clamor for high salaries and big appropriations they are asking us, the representatives of the people, to take from those very people, who honored us with their suffrage, money for their benefit, and not because they are prompted by the common good. It is our duty to fix salaries not for the benefit of the officeholder but for the good of the people. The clamor that comes from every officer and employee of the Government for higher salaries is sad commentary upon the state of mind of this favored class. Not one of them holds his position by compulsion. On the contrary, if one of these is discharged a wail goes up, and every possible influence is used to get restored upon the rolls of the Government. There are some exceptions to the rule, and those exceptions are always found among the best and most efficient employees. The officer or employee who is in love with the work is not after the salary only but takes pride in the service and is not thinking solely of pay day. They do not hold Congressmen in contempt who do not yield to their demands. Some people seem to think that the sole and only purpose of Congress meeting is to take from the people money and turn it over to them.

If we adhere to these simple truths we should deal with money in the Treasury as the money of the people, for there is not one penny in the Treasury that Congress does not take from some citizen who earns it with his hands or with his brain, and no man has the right to come to me and ask me to appropriate money out of the Federal Treasury for private use or private benefit of any man. He ought to convince me and the other Members of Congress that that appropriation of money which he seeks is for public use, and that the prime reason for the appropriation is that it is needed for public use, and the man who draws the salary is a mere incident and instrument of public use. Therefore when I find any unnecessary activity, however old the activity and however long it has been continued, it should be abolished. It is said that Jim Sherman when elected Vice President noticed that a man brought up a snuff-box and put it on the Vice President's desk. Jim said, "What are you bringing that up to me for?" The man replied, "It has been customary to do this always," and Jim said to him, "You may draw your salary, but do not bring that box back any more." You know, in the early days every Senator had at his desk a snuffbox, and it was the duty of an employee to keep those full from the big box at the Vice President's desk. Well, the habit of taking a pinch of snuff had ceased many generations before, but on account of the job they still held on to this old custom. I am afraid that the necessity for a great many activities of the Federal Government has long since ceased, but the jobs and the salaries are still there, and therefore we should have what my friend [Mr. KAHN] was prone to call a "snooping" committee—I did not like the word very much at the time, but I have become infatuated with it—that this legislative body should have a snooping committee, not for the purpose of playing politics or doing anybody an injustice, but for the honest purpose of ascertaining what is going on, and you would find that it would render a very important service. These departments are so big and so varied, and the number of people working for the Government so numerous, that many abuses may exist for years and never be known unless Members of Congress canvass the departments regularly.

My two Republican colleagues and I went down to a certain department of the Government. The man at the head of it is in favor with all of us. There is no more magnificent gentleman in the Government. He is a man of honesty, a man of integrity, and a man of ability. But we decided we would just drop down there unheralded; and so under the leadership of our chairman, who looks more like a farmer than anybody on that committee except Mr. WASON and myself, we walked into a certain department and went through five wings. There were 15 rooms altogether, and I think in them there were 1,000 or 1,200 people. We just went in. A fellow admitted us and we walked on through and looked about. I asked in the first room I went into, "Do you have about the average number that are now in here at work?" The reply was, "Yes." I counted the desks that were vacant and looked over the space and called the attention of my colleagues to it; and we went on through four of the wings without anyone knowing who we were. I believe I make a conservative statement when I say that half of the desks did not have anybody about them, and not more than half of the space was being used, and about half of those seated at the desks were apparently doing nothing.

Finally we got into a place where they had bonds. I do not know whether they took us for burglars or not. A fellow stopped WASON as we were entering. I do not know whether he thought Mr. WASON looked more burglarious than the rest of us or not. But he stopped him and said, "You can not get in here, because we have valuables." WASON, who had been suddenly stopped by this gentleman, said politely to that august personage with the uniform on, "We are Members of Congress." He said, "I beg your pardon," and turned him loose. We went out into the hall and our man in uniform disappeared. That department contained the busiest bunch of people you ever saw. They all seemed busy. Why such a difference? The chief was perhaps more strict.

I tell you that little story in order that you may know that there is exactly what my friend from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] calls loafing in these departments. It is not due to any fault of any Democrat either, because a majority of these bureau chiefs are Republicans, and have been here since I have been in Congress, and Mr. Taft was President when I was first elected to Congress. They are not confined to any party. You will find most of the chief clerks and bureau chiefs have been there for years. They are good fellows; but it is the system that is wrong. I do not blame these people. Congress is to blame. The system is all wrong. You may discharge all of these people and put in new ones, and in a few years the same condition will prevail. The Cabinet officers could do something, but if they do they are held up to severe criticism and even censure. One of our Cabinet officers has done his duty, but he is now the target for all sorts of unjust criticism. Even Congressmen and Senators engage in the crusade.

We passed through this House a few years ago a bill which provided that an efficiency rating should be kept, and if after five years' service they did not make a certain percentage they would automatically go out of the service, but if they made a certain rating they would be automatically advanced. Do you know what happened? The bill passed the House and the Senate, but the employees themselves got the bill vetoed. In other words, an efficient employee would welcome that sort of a proposition, because he is bound to be advanced, and advanced materially, in salary. But the inefficient did not want it, because if they fell below a certain standard of efficiency they would be automatically dropped. Therefore the conclusive proof must be that inefficiency prevails, because if the majority of the employees under the civil service had known that they could render efficient service they would have favored the bill.

Now, if you Republicans want to economize you might just as well get busy, gentlemen. I tell you what I want done, too. When the next Democratic House comes in, which will be at the expiration of this Congress, I want you Republicans to be as courageous as you gentlemen have been up to date during this session in reducing expenses. It is easy to reduce expenses when the other fellow is President and his crowd is in power, but not when your crowd is in power. My Republican friends never before stood for economy.

Mr. MADDEN. What difference does it make who is President? We are the representatives of the people of the United States, and we ought to represent them with courage and fidelity.

Mr. SISSON. I agree with my friend exactly. But the great trouble is that I found it a very much easier matter for me to get up and raise sand with Mr. Taft and his administration than it is to raise sand now. I believe the gentleman from Illinois finds the same thing.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Mississippi knows that it never made any difference to me who was in.

Mr. SISSON. I believe my friend is an exception to the rule, and I hope I am. I do not believe that my friend has any more of that kind of courage than I have.

Mr. MADDEN. I will give the gentleman credit for being one of the most courageous and economical Members of Congress who has served here during my time.

Mr. SISSON. I appreciate what my friend says very much. I am going to make this confession, that it was much easier for me to jump on the Taft administration than it is for me to jump on the Wilson administration.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And safer. [Laughter.]

Mr. SISSON. Safer, with my constituents back home; that is true. In other words, I have had a good many gentlemen who have run against me for Congress make the charge that I was not standing by the President. That is not a charge you like to have laid at your door.

But, my friends, I am going too far afield. However, I would like to do this: I want my good friends on the Republican side, when we Democrats come in next time, to continue to advocate economy. Do not quit as soon as the election is over. It has been a tenet of the Democratic Party from its birth to be economical, and, although we may elect by an overwhelming majority a Democratic President and a Democratic House and Senate, I want you to help us get the Government down to bedrock and help run it economically, as our party has pledged the people in the past it would do.

The present high expenses are due to the war and should not be a matter of partisan politics. When the United States is in trouble Brother TILSON, of Connecticut, and I are of one mind. Not only that, if I knew that by waiting 30 days or 60 days I could buy for $1,000 $10,000 worth of stuff that Pershing said "I need right now," do you suppose I would hesitate one minute? I would buy the stuff right now, at whatever cost, and send it to him, because if he needed it for the purpose of defending the line and preserving the lives of our boys, no Member of Congress would hesitate to give it to him, and Republicans and Democrats have always acted together.

War is willful waste. War is anything on earth but economy. War is destructive of all those things that make civilization safe in time of peace. Those rules which prevail in time of war would render intolerable the condition of the people in time of peace, and rules of war are one thing, and, thank God, the rules of peace are another.

Now, if we have gotten back—and I hope we have—to the rule of peace, let us get back to that economical side where the people back home can say, "Those people that we have at Washington are economically administering this Government," and then they will have confidence in you. Right at this hour there are many people who know we have a Federal Government who did not know it, except intellectually, before, but they are feeling it now, and when a man goes down in his jeans and pulls out three or four times as much tax as he paid heretofore, he knows it, and he complains. And if no other good results from this high taxation, I trust that it will teach the people back home that it does cost something to run this Government.

Now, I want to call your attention to only one or two other items and then I shall close. Reference has been made to The Adjutant General's Office. I think it is fair to say of The Adjutant General—fair to say of Gen. Harris—that no Adjutant General in the history of the Government has ever had imposed on him the problem which confronted Gen. Harris. He had to deal with 4,500,000 boys from all sections of the country. These rolls have to be made up; they must be accurate. They are the basis for the payment of insurance. They are the basis for any future pensions. They become a part of the history of the individual soldiers, and the United States owes it to each and every boy that there shall be no error; that there shall be no mistake in his name or in his record. He is entitled to have that correctly recorded.

Now, in addition to this enormous burden that he had, it was thrown on him practically at one time. I believe that everybody connected with that department will say that Gen. Harris, notwithstanding these complicated difficulties were thrown upon him, himself worked out a very much better system than had been worked out previously. As the testimony shows, Gen. Harris welcomed the Bureau of Efficiency in his department, and in the majority of cases he adopted the regulations which that department suggested to him.

There was a difference as to the amount of money that could be saved in adopting one of their recommendations, and I believe he declined to do that, but after coming before the committee, and after we had them together, Gen. Harris agreed to let the Bureau of Efficiency go through his department again. It is fair also to say that there was some little controversy between one member of the Efficiency Board and Gen. Harris, and they had a few words. But he said he was glad to have the members of the bureau there, that they were agreeable gentlemen, and he mentioned Mr. Brown by name. His difference was with another member of the commission.

The results show that Gen. Harris has worked a great economy, in that the method which he adopted cost the Government infinitely less money than it would have cost if he had not himself adopted new methods of economy and accepted the methods of the Bureau of Efficiency. I think it is fair to say that much respecting Gen. Harris.

I have already discussed the commercial attachés. I want to say one word with reference to the War Risk Bureau. I admit that there have been many mistakes, but when we take into consideration the fact that this is to-day the greatest insurance company in the world, that this insurance company has more names on its rolls than any other insurance company in the world, and that while other insurance companies have built up their business gradually and their growth has been by week and week and from month to month and from year to year, this was all thrown on it at once. There have been several changes in the management there, whether wisely or unwisely need not be discussed. The complaint was pretty great, and they have had, as I recall, three different men in charge of it.

Now, I do believe, and I agree with the chairman, that the present head of that department is an efficient man. I also agree with the chairman in the belief that he asked too much for publicity. As a matter of fact I did not think he needed any of that money for publicity. But it is fair to say that in my judgment this department is in better condition now—infinitely better condition—than it has ever been in before, and I believe that they are working out many of the tangles that they have been in in the past. It is a job which no man on earth wants. It is a job which no man in the world would willingly tackle, considering the confusion in which the department was. It is a job that has to be pushed onto somebody, and I think it ought to be said that they are doing much better service than could have been expected under all the circumstances. That is my judgment.

I do not know of a department or business where the whole earth, nearly, was thrown onto them in a jumble, where they had to build from the ground up, had to guess at the number of employees they should have. And it was nothing but a guess, and it is nothing but a guess even now, as to how many employees there are that are going to be dropped. But after it shall have been thoroughly developed, I believe that the present management will make a success of their work; that is, if they do as they have said to us in the hearings that they will do, that they will be glad to make report to us as to the number of people they have dropped; and it is fair to the committee to say that while we have made considerable cuts in the estimates, yet the cuts have been made along the line where those in charge of the work said the cuts would do the least harm, because there was not a single member of the committee who wanted to do this bureau any injustice at all.

In my judgment, after the whole field has been surveyed, I do not believe we have done injustice to a single department of the Government, unless you agree with me as to the Department of Commerce. If there has been any fault on our part, it has been, perhaps, that we have not cut some of the departments that might have been cut. But in those cuts that have been made we exercised the very best judgment we could; and in view of the condition of the Treasury, in view of the platform pledges of my party, in view of the pledges which you gentlemen are making and the statements which you are making, I believe that Congress could not do less than to show the people that we were making an effort to reduce the burdens of the taxpayers, that we were making an effort to make the burdens of the Government as light as possible; and in the future it is our duty to continue this until we shall be able to say to our constituents at home that we have brought this Government down to where the expenses are as light as it is possible to make them, and it is the duty of every Member of Congress to work to that end.

In conclusion, gentlemen, let me say that I feel that if Congress can get itself thoroughly committed to the idea that we are going to know what we are doing in the future, as nearly as possible, we are going to be a right busy bunch. The things we find out in these departments are always where somebody imagines that some harm has been done him. I will ask some of the older Members of Congress, Have you ever had any people come to you in the interest of the public service unless they themselves were affected? In other words, human beings in the departments are constituted like persons on the outside. They have the same motives, the same aims, the same ambitions. Their human nature is such that when a man wants a raise in salary he goes to the Congressman from his district and portrays how much too little he gets. If a bureau chief is hurt, he also goes to his friends. The result is that the extravagant side of the Government has thousands of tongues to plead for it, but economy and the interests of the masses of the people never have anybody to plead for them. So I say let every Member of Congress constitute himself a committee of one to look after governmental expenditures.

It will not only make you better men and better Congressmen but it will make you very much busier men. You will be criticized. A man never attained to heights of fame unless he had a difficult path to tread. If it were easy to be great, everybody would be great. The trouble about it is that the pathway is strewn with stones. It has precipices and thorns. There are heights to climb, and it takes a man of courageous brain and heart and determination to succeed. So it takes men of courage and determination to face the frowns of those people who would use the Public Treasury for their benefit. It takes a man of courage to say no to his constituents who want to see the powers of the Federal Government used in their own interest. Yet when he can put his hand on his heart and say courageously, "I shall not lose my intellectual integrity, but I shall think and act for the benefit of the American people under my oath of office," then he will be true to himself—

> And it shall follow as the night the day
> Thou canst not then be false to any man.

With this as our motto and our determination we would be able to reduce governmental expenditures, in my judgment, not only the 33⅓ per cent that Senator Aldrich said they could be reduced but I believe they could be reduced 50 per cent, and at the same time increase the salary of nearly everybody connected with the Government service, and have a better and more efficient Government service, and have a better and more efficient Government than we have to-day, for one-half of what we are now expending. [Applause.]

In view of the fact that the election is coming on, let us not endeavor to make any record for the benefit of the next election. I have not observed in my colleagues of the majority any disposition to cut these appropriations down to such a point as that they knew that there would have to be a deficiency appropriation in December. Therefore in the cuts we make we ought to try to make them wisely, but let us not play politics. There has been no politics in your committee, and for God's sake let us have none on this floor. Let us vote honestly for the Government's needs, and let us vote honestly to cut out that which the Government does not need, and take care of the needs of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. Has the committee found any difficulty in getting the cooperation of bureau chiefs in its efforts to reduce expenditures in the various bureaus?

Mr. SISSON. That is just as varied as human nature. As a rule, the bureau chiefs come before the committee with the determination to justify their appropriations. In some rare instances, like you find rare instances among men, they will tell you frankly that if you do not want this activity such and such a thing can be done. But to use an expression that is used a great deal in the Army service, "by and large," you get no help from the bureau chiefs.

Mr. MADDEN. So that, as a matter of fact, whatever reductions are made in the expenses have got to be made blindly?

Mr. SISSON. Not blindly, but without seeing perfectly. There is a little haze over your eyes when you do it; and there is this much about it—you know that every time you cut, while you make one bad cut in a hundred, the other ninety-nine have been good slashes, and ninety-nine out of a hundred does pretty well.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it is wise, then, for the committee to keep the scales of justice over their eyes and cut and cut.

Mr. SISSON. We have been doing that pretty well. Now, I have said to my friends privately—and I want to say it now publicly—if you will give me the chief clerks and the bureau chiefs in the Government, you may take the Cabinet officers and the President and I will run the Government. I may not dictate a little piece of legislation up here on the hill, but I will get out the estimates with my chief clerks and my bureau chiefs, and I will so shape things that you have either got to take a club and destroy my department or I will get what I want.

Now, you talk about the civil service. This is holy and sacred ground now. I like to use the other word that some of my friends sometimes use——

Mr. MADDEN. Sacrilege!

Mr. SISSON. Yes; it would be sacrilege, but I do not care whether Republicans or Democrats are in power, the man in a position to determine policies and to exercise discretion in regard to the conduct of affairs ought not to be under the civil service. I agree literally with Andrew Jackson. When you investigate the record you will find that he turned out fewer men in numbers than the men before him and the men after him, but here is what he did. He turned out the men in the high places, the men who shaped policies, the men who exercised discretion. And President Jackson said "That is the will of the people, because they have elected me to have a Democratic administration, and I can not be a good Democratic general if I have got Whig officers all around me."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman answer me a question? I am not going to get into any controversy about the civil service, but I would like to ask this question: Is there any man in Government service, inducted into that service under civil service rules, who can not be dismissed if the position that he occupies is abolished by the Congress refusing to appropriate?

Mr. SISSON. I think unquestionably you can refuse to appropriate.

Mr. MADDEN. That is the way to do it.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will stand up with us and vote with us, we will lead him in paths of economy.

Mr. MADDEN. I think you ought to cut a little more.

Mr. SISSON. We did not want to be too radical. I would let the civil service apply religiously to everybody that performs clerical services, but every man who has got a job where he exercises Republican or Democratic discretion I would not permit to hold office if I were President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. So that there may not be any misunderstanding, and I am free to say that I may have misunderstood the gentleman's last remark, does the gentleman from Mississippi believe that the heads of the bureaus ought to be changed every time there is a change in the national administration?

Mr. SISSON. I do. I think there can be no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is plain enough, but the Government would be in a turmoil because the heads of the bureau or the division would not know anything about the departments. It takes him four years to learn, and at the end of that time he would be turned out.

Mr. SISSON. If a bureau chief dies to-day some fellow steps in and takes his place to-morrow and there is not a ripple on the surface. I believe that if lightning to-morrow should strike the bureau chiefs and the chief clerks you would find in every one of these departments somebody who would take their places, and if I were a Democratic President you can bet your bottom dollar he would be a Democrat, or if I were a Republican President he would be a Republican.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; but that is not the way political appointments are made; they are not made from the inside, they are made from the outside. That was what was done in the old days, and it was the most extravagant Government that ever was conducted.

Mr. SISSON. There has not anything happened except gross extravagance and great inefficiency since the civil service has been established.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. After all, the gentleman will admit that up to the time of the commencement of the war the number of the Government employees in Washington had never increased in comparison with the increase of the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And that was because of the civil-service law.

Mr. SISSON. I will tell the gentleman what I think—if you take the expenses prior to the Civil War and the expenses for the last 25 or 30 years, I think the expenses have increased in the last 25 or 30 years with more rapidity than before.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The expenses of the Government; oh, yes; but not the clerical force in Washington.

Mr. SISSON. I have not made a comparison, but I know that the departments were conducted 25 years ago on an infinitely less proportion to the amount of money than they expend now dollar for dollar.

Mr. MADDEN. So the increased cost to the Government is the systematic development of extravagance.

Mr. SISSON. That is the size of it. I have analyzed it the best I could; take the members of the Appropriation Committee that have to deal with the pay rolls and you will find that that is the universal opinion of all of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I did not mean to consume an hour's time, but I thank you gentlemen for your kind attention. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would like to see, Mr. Chairman, if we can not agree on closing general debate.

Mr. SISSON. I have consumed an hour and 5 minutes. The gentleman from Indiana consumed 2 hours and 10 minutes. That leaves me 1 hour and 5 minutes to my credit. I think we can get along if I have 50 minutes in addition to that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have a request for two hours more on this side.

Mr. SISSON. I am sure that two hours will be all that we need, and I will be very glad to agree on two hours for general debate.

Mr. GARNER. You can not close general debate in committee.

Mr. SISSON. No; but we can come to some understanding.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Mississippi how much time he thinks is necessary yet upon his side?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, before the committee rose I suggested 2 hours to the gentleman, but since that time I have had a request for 20 minutes more. That makes 2 hours and 20 minutes on this side.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have had requests for additional time. I have requests for 2 hours and 30 minutes, unless I can get some of these gentlemen to reduce their time.

Mr. SISSON. If anyone on this side of the House should want to address the House, I should like to have as much time as is consumed by the gentlemen on the Republican side.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Suppose we agree on 4 hours and 30 minutes—2 hours and 20 minutes to be used by the gentleman and 2 hours and 10 minutes on this side.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact the gentleman from Indiana has consumed one hour and five minutes more than has been consumed by this side already. I would like to have this side have as much time as the other. If gentlemen on this side of the House should want to speak for a few minutes under general debate, I would like to be in a position to accommodate them. I do not ask any more time than is consumed on the other side.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. We have already consumed a day, or will have when we adjourn, in general debate on this bill. We ought not to consume another day in general debate upon the bill.

Mr. SISSON. We are not asking for as much time as the Republicans have had.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is no question but that gentlemen on the Democratic side are entitled to as much time as is used on this side. I am not disputing that. I think we should try to cut down the time on this side. I have asked for 30 minutes myself, but I am willing to forego all of that time. We must get on with these appropriation bills. I do not think it will do to spend two days on one bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have had requests on this side for 2 hours and 48 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. That includes the 30 minutes the gentleman agreed to give me?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Then take out the 30 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That would leave us 2 hours and 18 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman wants 2 hours and 18 minutes in addition to what he has already used, if he will give us the same time on this side, it will be agreeable to me.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have no objection to giving the same length of time.

Mr. MONDELL. Can we not cut that down and make it two hours on a side?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the only question in which the House is interested is that of taking up nine hours of general debate upon this bill. It might be that if we should wait 15 minutes longer and ring the bells we would have requests for 20 hours' debate by other Members who might come in. If gentlemen yield to all requests for time, there will be no end to general debate upon the bill. It occurs to me that six hours of general debate on this bill is more than the usual amount.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, I made a statement the other day that I thought we should not consume over a day in general debate on any bill. I am still of that opinion. At the time this bill came in I understood there was very little request for time. I realize that the time taken by the chairman of the subcommittee and by the ranking member of the subcommittee has been well spent in explanation of the bill, which has been splendidly prepared under their guidance. It does seem to me, however, that other gentlemen may very well for the time being forego the pleasure of addressing the House at length.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is one provision in this bill that is very important and which I would like to discuss for 30 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Why can not the gentleman discuss the bill under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MORGAN. Because there is not the time. There is a provision here for assessing the Federal land banks $300,000. That means assessing the borrowers, entirely changing the law. I would like to have 30 minutes to defend here what I think is the right of the borrowers under these land banks.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think, in view of the fact that the Federal land banks themselves are entirely in accord with the committee, that it would require more than 15 minutes' debate——

Mr. MORGAN. I am not speaking in behalf of the office-holders in Washington but I am speaking in behalf of the borrowers who have to pay these expenses, and I think we are entitled to at least 30 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi is perfectly willing to take the same amount of time in general debate on this bill that is taken on that side. Now fix your own time. The responsibility is on you as to how much time you are going to take on this bill. If you decide to take four hours, very well and good; if you agree to six or eight hours, why, very well; but the responsibility is upon you gentlemen in reference to fixing the time.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that we now have an hour and five minutes to our credit. Now, if we get an hour and 15 minutes in addition to that, it takes up all of the requests for time that I have. Now, if that will be satisfactory——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I think we ought to confine debate over on this side. I have requests for additional time for 2 hours and 25 minutes, and I think I am satisfied——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think there should be any necessity for four and a half hours additional debate on this bill. We are reaching a point on the program where we can scarcely afford to spend two days in debate on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SISSON. What are you going to take up next? You have no other appropriation bill ready?

Mr. MONDELL. We will have a bill ready before this is disposed of, and the railroad bill comes up on Saturday.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I understood the gentleman from Mississippi to say that he would be content to have as much time used on that side as has been used on this.

Mr. SISSON. No; I mean the entire time, and I say I have requests for 2 hours and 20 minutes. I am willing to take just as much time as the gentleman takes on that side. I have an hour and five minutes to my credit, and the gentleman can close debate, and I will apportion an hour and five minutes over here.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is going to be any prolonged debate, I am going to object to it, unless the committee is willing to stay here until 7 o'clock to-night and have part of the debate to-night.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As far as I am concerned, I will willing to stay here all night.

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let me see if I understand this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SISSON. I have consumed an hour and five minutes and the gentleman has consumed 2 hours and 15 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Two hours and 10 minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Now I have requests for 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman is willing to cut it down?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Our requests on this side are for 2 hours and 25 minutes additional time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DENISON, for the day, on account of illness.

To Mr. HUDSPETH, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. RAKER, for one day, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana submit a request?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am trying to agree upon the proposition to give an hour and a half for this side in addition to what we have.

Mr. SISSON. That would be two and a half hours. I have requests for 2 hours and 20 minutes, and of course the gentleman will give us just as much time as you take over there.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That has been the procedure always followed, that the same amount of time was granted to each side.

Mr. GARNER. I have never known an agreement to be made between two sides where the time is not equally divided.

Mr. SISSON. There is no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In round figures, then, we have an hour and a half on our side and you have two hours and a half on your side?

Mr. SISSON. That is all right.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided between the two sides, one hour and a half on this side and two hours and a half on the other side, the time on this side to be controlled by myself and the time on the other side to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time be divided, one hour and a half to his side, to be controlled by himself, and two hours and a half on the other side, to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. Is there any arrangement about sitting to-night to go with it?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To sit until 7, and begin at 11 to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. To sit until 7 o'clock to-night and meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the first request?

Mr. MORGAN. Reserving the right to object, I do not want to be contentious or interfere in any way, but I think that subject is entitled to 30 minutes of discussion. It is in the bill, and it is very important, and I think the gentleman ought to concede me that much time.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would be willing to concede it, but a number of other gentlemen will have to give up their time entirely; and I will say to the gentleman that ample opportunity will be given under the five-minute rule. So I do not think it will be neglected or slighted in the least.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns this evening it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California withdraw the point of no quorum?

Mr. NOLAN. I will withhold it long enough to permit the unanimous-consent request to be submitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the Department of Justice for expenses of United States courts and miscellaneous expenses of the department, fiscal years 1919 and 1920 (H. Doc. No. 655); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting transcript of proposed legislation for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Navy and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12607) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, to include members of the Regular Army Reserve and the Naval Reserve Force in the civil service preference therein provided, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 659), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill (S. 3451) authorizing and directing the United States Shipping Board to adjust and pay the claims of wooden-ship builders arising out of the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 660), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEHLBACH, from the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12608) providing for the employment by the United States Government of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States and prescribing the preference to be extended to them in filling clerical and other vacancies, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 661), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 495) for the relief of Walston H. Brown, sole surviving partner of the firm of Brown, Howard & Co., and of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 654), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 2300) for the relief of the estate of Henry A. V. Post, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 655), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BABKA, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9629) for the relief of the Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 656), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11572) for the relief of the John E. Moore Co., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 657), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12281) for the relief of the William Gordon Corporation, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 658), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12354) granting a pension to George W. Brown and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 230).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the activities of the executive departments and establishments pertaining to the public health and the amount expended on account of each of these activities, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting a schedule of useless papers devoid of historic interest on the files of the Department of Labor, and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying paper will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a certified copy of a joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Arizona, ratifying the Susan B. Anthony amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women, which will be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 796. An act for furnishing water supply for miscellaneous purposes in connection with reclamation projects; and

S. 2454. An act for the relief of certain members of the Flathead Nation of Indians, and for other purposes.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, so far as my recollection serves me this is the first time since my service began as a Member of this body when I have asked for time to make a statement which most vitally concerns my most immediate relatives and myself.

In the issue of the Washington Herald under date of February 18 there appeared an editorial which was evidently written for the purpose of doing me great harm. Similar articles have appeared in other papers. These articles have evidently all been inspired by either Mr. Hoover or Mr. Barnes, or by both.

On February 13 I addressed the Senate, giving my views with reference to the services of Mr. Barnes in connection with a very important industry. My criticism against Mr. Barnes was directed entirely against him because of the mistakes which I then believed, and which I still believe, he has made. I have criticized Mr. Hoover as food director. I have charged that during the war he committed a gross injustice against the farmers of this country. But instead of answering the criticism which I directed against these distinguished gentlemen, who in some parts of our country have been denominated as the "Gold Dust Twins," instead of answering the charges made against them they proceed to attack me personally, and the article in the Washington Herald and in the Baltimore Evening Sun of Tuesday, February 17, falsifies the record of my votes in this body in a most malicious manner.

Mr. President, I have here the RECORD. I was charged in these articles with having voted against the bond issues. I have here the vote upon the act providing for the first bond issue under date of April 17, 1917. The RECORD shows that I voted for it. I have the RECORD of the act of September 15, 1917, known as the second bond act. Upon that act there was no record vote. Upon the third bond act there was no record vote on the final passage of the act. On the fourth bond act there was no roll call or record vote.

I have the act known as the War Finance Corporation act under date of March 7, 1918. There was a record vote on the final passage of the bill and the RECORD shows that I voted for it. I also have the RECORD of the passage of the fifth bond act, and I find that there was no record vote on the final passage of the act.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that if I was present when any of these acts passed, in every instance when they were passed by a viva voce vote, I voted for them.

Mr. President, I have on several occasions stated in this Chamber that I wish to be understood that I have neither regrets nor any apology to make for the votes I have cast in this body, but I warn these people now, whether they are British agents or representatives of the millionaire clubs of this country, that when an attack is made upon me they must not falsify the official records.

I have never attempted to deny, and I never shall deny, that I voted against the declaration of war with Germany. I have never attempted to deny that I voted against conscription and that I voted against the espionage act, and the only statement that will be found to be true in the article of the Herald and other papers with reference to my votes is the reference made to the votes on the three measures which I have just mentioned. The charge that I voted against the bond bills and the appropriation bills is maliciously false. Again and again I stated upon this floor that I would vote for any amount of money required to most vigorously prosecute the war. I never made a criticism against a single appropriation made during the war. I did criticize the revenue bill, because I wanted to increase the rate of the tax imposed upon excess profits; but I was not alone in this effort; there were a great many Senators who voted as I did and who argued that it was a mistake not to increase the rate of tax to be imposed upon excess profits during the war. Later on the President of the United States asked that the tax in the following revenue bill be increased. I am not mentioning this as a criticism of those who differed with me, but I am making this statement simply for the purpose of showing the facts, and I say now that not one vote was cast by me against any bond bill or any appropriation necessary for the purpose of carrying on the war. On the contrary, the records will show that when a record vote was asked for upon a bond bill or upon an appropriation bill when my name is recorded it will be found as voting for it, and not against it. So far as I know there was no opposition to the appropriation of any amount of money needed.

Mr. President, if I alone could bear the burden of the malicious lies uttered against me by those papers I might do so without complaining, but I want the RECORD to show that the charges made in the articles referred to are absolutely false.

On the declaration of war with Austria it will be found that I voted for it. We were actually at war with Austria, and so long as we were actually at war with this nation I preferred to carry on that war in a legal and constitutional way.

These gentlemen who have succeeded in perfecting the most complete organization possible throughout the entire country manifest that they possess the cunning animal instinct of directing the people's attention from the questions at issue, but in that way, it seems to me, they plead guilty to the criticisms made against them.

I have studiously avoided, as I said on last Friday, bringing in any undue criticism based merely upon rumors. I had a great many reports sent to me, but I did not use them. I had the report of the grand jury in the State of Washington with reference to Mr. Howser, one of the vice presidents of the Grain Corporation, who was indicted by the grand jury in that State. But as an indictment is only a complaint or a charge, the charges may or may not be true, and for that reason I did not use it. I have not charged these men with being crooks or rogues, but I am reminded of what Theodore Roosevelt once said:

> I know how to deal with a crook, but I can do nothing with a natural-born fool.

And it might be interesting to these men to know that at the very time when I am charged as voting against these appropriations necessary to carry on the war, there were five Gronnas in the service; three of them were already on the battle fields of France. All of them came from the Dakotas; two of them were the sons of my oldest brother, who died several years ago, and who were supporting a widowed mother. One of them was only 17 years old when he entered the service; none of them had to be drafted. My youngest son entered the service before war was declared. They all entered the service as privates. One of them was promoted while acting as a doughboy to the rank of corporal; one of them was promoted to the rank of sergeant; and my youngest son was promoted on the field of battle to the rank of a first lieutenant in the Heavy Artillery. All of them have been honorably discharged. It is true that their lives were spared, but they came back shell-shocked and nerve-racked, and both their mental and physical abilities were impaired for a time.

Now, in simple justice to these boys who served in the trenches and upon the fields of battle, and who fought through the Verdun, Metz, and Meuse and other battles, until the armistice was signed—I say in simple justice to these boys who for months fought upon the fields of battle, and who saw strangers and friends torn to shreds—I ask that the records of this body be given as they actually are.

I repeat that my family did as much to win the war as any other family in this country. It ought not to be necessary for me to state that from a financial standpoint I did more than I was asked to do. But that is a small matter. I only did what every other patriotic American citizen should do; but I thought that this campaign of pro-Germanism was about over. I was in hopes that the abuse heaped upon thousands of good, patriotic citizens of German descent was about to end. I was in hopes that we were about ready to take up the question of reconstruction, and to make it possible for these boys to go on and help perpetuate this as the greatest Nation on earth in obedience to the wishes of the fathers. I was in hopes that it would be possible for citizens of English, of Irish, of Scandinavian, of Italian, of German, or of any other ancestry to get together as Americans and to work together as Americans for the benefit of the people of this great country, the United States of America.

Mr. President, I should waver in that hope if it were not for the fact that we know from the teachings of the immaculate Master and from the teachings of the great men who followed Him that, in the words of Solomon, "The lip of truth shall be established forever, but a lying tongue is but for a moment."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAPPER presented memorials of sundry citizens of Portland and of Norton County and Marshall County, all in the State of Kansas, and of sundry citizens of Collinsville, Okla., remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland presented a petition of Admiral John Rogers Post, No. 28, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maryland, of Havre de Grace, Md., and a petition of Hicks Post, No. 24, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maryland, of Easton, Md., praying for the passage of the so-called Fuller pension bill, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of Crockett Post, No. 30, American Legion, of California, praying for an additional bonus for ex-service men, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

FEDERAL LIVE-STOCK COMMISSION.

Mr. GRONNA. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which were referred Senate bill 2199 and Senate bill 2202, to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes, to submit a report (No. 429), accompanied by a bill (S. 3944) to create a Federal live-stock commission, to define its powers and duties, and to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and live-stock products, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. KING (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3943) to establish the standard and decimal divisions of the weights, measures, and coins of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

INTERNATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE.

Mr. FRANCE. I introduce a joint resolution, which provides for the reestablishment of peace with Germany and for the calling of an international conference dealing with the great problems which are not met by the treaty which is before us. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) providing for the reestablishment of peace and the calling of an international conference to formulate plans for international cooperation was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 159) providing for the reestablishment of peace and the calling of an international conference to formulate plans for international cooperation.

Whereas on the 11th day of November, 1918, the President of the United States announced the signing of an armistice between the United States and the powers with which the United States had been at war, the President at that time declaring "the war thus comes to an end"; and

Whereas it is most desirable that there shall be a prompt termination of the status of war by the formal legal reestablishment of peace between the United States and Germany; and

Whereas the peace treaty submitted to the Senate for ratification contained provisions for a new coalition of nations, of which the United States was to be a member, and called for a guaranty by the United States under article 10 of that treaty of the territorial integrity of the great empires of Great Britain, of Japan, and of France, and for other arrangements repugnant to the United States, which caused the rejection of that treaty by the Senate; and

Whereas there is a profound unrest throughout the world, due in large part to the failure of the Paris peace conference to formulate such plans for peace and for international cooperation, for the advancement of justice, liberty, and the general welfare, as would commend itself to the great liberal spirit of the age and the new enlightened conscience of mankind; and

Whereas the long-continued underproduction and rapid destruction during the war of the necessities and commodities of life, particularly of food, have resulted in a serious shortage, which makes imperatively necessary an immediate reorganization of all agricultural, industrial, financial, and commercial activities for the maximum production in all countries and for the distribution among the nations by the normal methods of trade and commerce of such food, necessities, and commodities; and

Whereas because of the close community of financial, industrial, and commercial interests of all of the nations of the world, the industrial and financial prostration and paralysis of Germany, Austria, Russia, and other recently belligerent countries of Europe, with the necessarily ensuing unemployment, impoverishment, and starvation of their citizens, with the threatened unrest and revolution in certain of these countries, are impeding the rehabilitation and are menacing the peace of the world and the stability of all government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the status of war with Germany, declared by the Congress by S. J. Res. 1, on the 5th day of April, 1917, be, and it is hereby, declared to be terminated and the full status of peace be, and it is hereby, declared to be reestablished.

2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and advised to make treaties of peace without annexations or indemnities and of trade and intercourse with the Republic of Germany, all matters of dispute between the two countries to be submitted for arbitration to The Hague tribunal.

3. That in pursuance of this resolution declaring the reestablishment of peace, all American troops now upon foreign soil shall be immediately returned to the United States.

4. That the President is hereby authorized and directed, by invitations to be sent out by him during the month of May, 1920, to invite the States signatory of or adherent to the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, of July 24, 1899, and their successors, and all other States since recognized or which may be recognized prior to the sending out of the invitation, to send three delegates each, and also two delegates in behalf of each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, respectively, of the various States having colonies, protectorates, or dependencies to assemble in conference at Washington, on a date in November, 1920, to be fixed in the invitation, to consult concerning the formation of a more perfect general concert and union, the reestablishment of general justice, the assurance of the general tranquility, the promotion of the general welfare, and the securing generally of the blessings of liberty to the peoples now living and to their posterity.

5. That the list of said States to be invited shall include the following: Argentine Republic, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Hejaz, Hungary, India, Italy, Japan, Jugo-Slavia, Luxemburg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Salvador, Serbia, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

6. That the invitations shall be expressly with the understanding that there shall be an international conference of the States, composed of three delegates from each of the States, and an assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, composed of two delegates from each of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, the international conference and assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies to sit separately but at the same time. The purpose of this international conference and of the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be the formulation of plans for international cooperation, but all resolutions agreed upon or instituted either in the international conference or in the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be of an advisory character, and any international or pannational organs or processes initiated or instituted shall be of a voluntary nature; and on the further understanding that this international conference and this assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies shall be the first of a series of periodical conferences of similar character, which shall establish a system of advisory correspondence, with continuation committees sitting in the intervals between the conferences to prepare for the international conferences and the assemblies of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies and to carry on the system of correspondence. The more specific objects of the international conference, the assembly of colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, and of the continuation committees and the purpose of the correspondence between the States participating shall be—

(a) To consider the common and mutual interests and the social and economic relations of the State and peoples of the world.

(b) To recommend projects of uniformity, reciprocity, or cooperation in the action of the States, respectively.

(c) To formulate a body of international law based on the security of the fundamental rights of the individual as the prime function of all Governments and for applying as between States the analogies of the laws of partnership and cotenancy, and as between States and their respective colonies, protectorates, and dependencies the analogies of the laws of conservatorship, guardianship, and trusteeship.

(d) To devise methods for the advancement of the peoples of colonies, protectorates, or dependencies from the status of dependencies to that of independence and to full participation in the international conferences.

(e) To promote cooperation among the more advanced nations for the improvement and advancement of the backward countries and territories, particularly those of Africa and parts of Asia, by the formulation of plans for the reclamation of waste land, for the utilization of natural resources, including water powers, for wise colonization, for the promotion of education and the spread of civilization throughout the world.

(f) To consider the problems of the congestion of some and the underpopulation of other nations and the unregulated competition between the more populous and industrial countries for the trade and raw products of the less populous agricultural ones.

(g) To study the problem of international finance, credits, and exchange, with a view to the prompt shipment on suitable credits, particularly into Russia, Germany, Austria, China, Africa, and any other agriculturally or industrially undeveloped or prostrated countries, of tools, agricultural implements, seeds, and other materials necessary to production, as well as foodstuffs, necessities, and commodities, for the purpose of encouraging a resumption of production which will be favorable to the rehabilitation of the world.

(h) To localize hostilities between States by cooperative policing of the high seas or otherwise and to take such action in case of such hostilities that the result of any armed conflict between States may be to increase the area within which the rights of the individual are effectively secured and to render more perfect the union of all the States for mutual aid and benefit.

(i) To make further provision for the pacific settlement of international disputes and for the settlement of those disputes according to accepted principles of law and by due process of law.

(j) To encourage the establishment, where stable governments do not exist, of constitutional republics or governments of such character as would make for that national stability upon which could be based a permanently peaceful international order.

(k) To promote amity and mutual understanding between the oriental and occidental peoples and to proceed with all possible means and speed to conciliate the people of Russia, China, India, Afghanistan, the Central Powers, and Turkey, in order that these nations or countries may not form against the western powers a hostile coalition which might menace the peace of the world.

(l) To consider the social and economic relations of the States and peoples of the world as naturally and necessarily united for mutual aid and benefit, and to concert measures accordingly.

6. That nothing in the programs or plans shall be contrary to the foregoing which, in the opinion of the Congress of the United States, should be regarded as the specific aims and objects of the conferences.

7. That the functions of the United States as the initiator and host of the international conference and the assembly of the colonies, protectorates, and dependencies, shall be in the charge of a committee, which shall come into existence in the month of April, 1920, and shall consist of the then Secretary of State as chairman, the then Secretary of the Treasury, the then Secretary of Commerce, two Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The delegation of the United States to the international conference and to the assembly shall be nominated to the President by said committee, and said nominees when approved by the President shall be appointed by him by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The said committee shall also suggest to the international conference and to the assembly a program—a plan for organization, a plan for the continuation committees, and for the system of correspondence.

8. That the general expenses of the international conference and of the assembly shall be borne by the United States; each participating State, however, paying the salaries and expenses of its own delegates and of the delegates in behalf of its colonies, protectorates, and dependencies.

9. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any sums in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the carrying out of the provisions of this resolution, the sum of $15,000,000.

10. That the provisions of this resolution shall take effect immediately after its passage and its approval by the President.

OBSERVANCE OF THE SABBATH.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some weeks ago I received a request to introduce a bill against Sabbath breaking. I desire to put into the RECORD, without reading, the letter preferring that request, my reply thereto, and a copy of the proposed bill.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NASHVILLE, TENN., January 1, 1920.

Hon. K. McKELLAR,
Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER: At the recent session of the Tennessee Annual Conference of the Methodist Ministers and Laymen a resolution was unanimously adopted urging the building of public sentiment and the enactment of State and national laws to stop Sabbath breaking, an evil now endangering our children, our people, and our Nation. We were appointed a committee by that conference to urge upon our President and Congress, and especially our Tennessee Congressmen, the enactment of laws to prohibit all professional baseball playing on Sunday, the operation of moving-picture shows and all theaters on Sunday, the publication of advertising in and circulation of all Sunday newspapers, the operation and using of all freight and passenger trains on Sunday, all trading on Sunday, and the carrying on of any vocation for profit on Sunday, emergency cases of charity and necessity only excepted. This action of our conference was based upon the commandment of our God to honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, a commandment we must keep if we would save our people and our Nation from destruction.

Acting under appointment by said conference, we have prepared and herewith hand you a bill to prohibit Sabbath breaking in so far as our Nation under its present Constitution has power to do so; and we respectfully beg you to introduce this bill in Congress and to do your utmost to have it enacted into law. We pledge you the hearty cooperation of our conference and, as we believe, of the Christian sentiment of America. This bill, if enacted into law, will stop all interstate trains and traffic on Sunday, will stop the circulation of Sunday newspapers through our postal facilities, and will stop all persons who act under authority of or under the employment of our Government from carrying on their ordinary vocations on Sunday. We earnestly beg your most prayerful consideration of this matter and your most zealous cooperation. As soon as the bill is introduced and referred to the appropriate committees in the Senate and House we shall be pleased to appear before them and state our reasons in full and to meet any possible argument or opposition that may be offered.

Assuring you of our best wishes and begging of you an early and favorable reply, we are,

Very sincerely, yours,

NOAH W. COOPER.
W. R. WEBB.
E. B. CHAPPELL.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

1. Hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person in the employment of the United States to work or carry on his ordinary vocation on Sunday.

2. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to operate on Sunday any freight or passenger train, or mail train, or any other train, or part of a train, on Sunday in the carrying on of interstate commerce, trade, or traffic of any kind.

3. It shall be unlawful for any post office to be open on Sunday or to deliver mail on Sunday; it shall be unalwful for any mail to be carried or delivered on Sunday by any employee of the United States, whether in city or country.

4. It shall be unlawful for any newspaper or other paper or publication published or purporting to be published on Sunday to be received, carried, or delivered as mail by any agency of the United States, in any post office, or over any route under the jurisdiction of the United States.

5. It shall be unlawful for any person or corporation engaged in interstate commerce or carrying on any business or vocation under the laws of or with the permission or license from the United States, or any of its agencies, to do or carry on any ordinary vocation or business on Sunday, the purpose of this act being to express our national determination to honor the Sabbath day and keep it holy, as God commands, thereby securing for all that opportunity for spiritual and bodily refreshment decreed by our Lord for the happiness of all men and the safety of all nations.

6. Any person who does any of the things above declared unlawful, or who procures or aids another in doing any of the things above declared unlawful, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished upon conviction by due process of law by a fine of not under $100 nor over $10,000 for each offense, and by imprisonment for not over six months, in the discretion of the court.

7. And any corporation that does or aids in doing these forbidden things shall upon conviction be fined not less than $1,000 nor over $100,000 for each offense, and upon conviction a second time for like offense shall forfeit its charter and franchise and be enjoined from operating in interstate commerce: Provided, however, That emergency instances of charity and necessity are not included nor punishable under the provisions of this act.

NASHVILLE, TENN., January 30, 1920.

Hon. K. McKELLAR,
Senate, United States of America, Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER McKELLAR: On January 1, 1920, our committee from the Methodist Conference by letter asked you to introduce a bill, prepared by us, to prevent national Sabbath breaking, in so far as Congress had power.

We regret not hearing from you. As chairman of the committee and for them I write to beg you to introduce this bill. We will support it and we feel sure it will have the support of millions. It is our God-given duty. We inclose you a copy of the resolutions our conference adopted, which you might use as a preamble to the bill. We are anxious to have your active support of this bill. It speaks, as we believe, the voice of Christianfity for the safety of our Nation.

Please kindly let us hear from you at once.

With best wishes,

Yours, respectfully,

NOAH W. COOPER,
Chairman of the Committee.

FEBRUARY 4, 1920.

Hon. N. W. COOPER,
McGavock Block, Nashville, Tenn.

MY DEAR MR. COOPER: Your letter of the 30th ultimo and also your letter of the 1st ultimo asking me to introduce a bill prohibiting passenger, mail, and freight trains from running on Sunday, and also prohibiting Sunday newspapers and all other vocations and amusements, emergency cases of charity and necessity only excepted, under the control of Congress from operating on Sunday, received and noted.

These letters should have been answered before. They have not, because I have been thinking about the proposition contained in them and have been making inquiries among Senators about the chances of passage of such a bill.

Again, I am in doubt whether this is the way to proceed in the matter. I am not in the least doubt about the question of Sabbath breaking, because I do not believe in Sabbath breaking, but I am in serious doubt whether a bill of this kind would afford a solution. I was born and reared in the Presbyterian Church, having been a member of that church practically all my life. I have all of the Presbyterian views about the Sabbath, but we Christian people in this country have stood by and have seen firmly intrenched as habits and customs of our people every form almost of Sabbath breaking. Even some of our ministers defend certain Sunday amusements like baseball, and many of our leading church members—probably the most of them—indulge in one form or another of Sabbath breaking.

The running of trains, freight and passenger, the use of the telephone and telegraph, the carrying of mails, riding and driving in automobiles, and to a more or less degree nearly every other kind of work or business or amusement, when deemed important or excusable, is done on the Sabbath. Indeed, the most of us have indulged in one or another form of Sabbath breaking ourselves. The great body of the public have become accustomed to these forms of Sabbath breaking.

Now, to undertake to restore an observance of the Sabbath by Federal law, without inculcating the wisdom and duty of Sabbath observance in the people at home, seems to me certainly to be the wrong method of approach. These movements must win public favor locally first and then spread, as notably prohibition and suffrage. In my judgment this movement for Sabbath observance should first take firm hold of the churches and the churches should take an unquestioned and firm stand. If they should become of one mind on the subject, the reforms that you speak of could be much better accomplished.

To introduce a bill in Congress to stop all interstate trains, interstate traffic, interstate freight, interstate news, interstate mail, interstate telephonic communication, interstate telegraphic communications, and Sunday newspapers would undoubtedly give a legislator very considerable notoriety, but it would not, in my judgment, and according to views expressed here, in the slightest degree change the ugly fact of Sabbath desecration. I have not suggested the matter to a single legislator here who has approved. All say that the bill would die in the committee, or could not in any event get anywhere in the Senate.

For these reasons it seems to me that it would serve no useful purpose now to introduce such a bill. I believe it would be much better to organize the churches and other local Sabbath-observance societies first, and if successful the movement would undoubtedly spread until action of the kind you suggest would be possible.

With great respect and best wishes and regretting very much to differ with you about the method of securing a much-needed and desirable observance of the Sabbath, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

WAGES OF COAL MINERS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have read from the desk, for the information of the Senate, a statement of Dr. Garfield relating to the wages of coal miners.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

"Dr. H. A. Garfield, former Fuel Administrator, in an article written for Farm and Home, declares:

"'The wages now paid to mine workers are sufficient. The opportunity that should be the mine workers' can not be secured merely by an increase in wages.

"'An average of $950 a year was earned by the lowest-paid miners working 180 days in the year, while for 200 days' work the average miner in the bituminous fields of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois earned $1,660 in 1918 and $1,800 last year. This is 'more by a considerable sum than the average net receipts of the farmer and many others who may or may not work 300 days or more in the year.'

"'The public ought not to be asked to pay more for coal. It is impossible to increase the wage of the mine workers without inciting the workers in every other industry, including, of course, agriculture, to demand an increase in wages. This would send the cost of living upward in a vicious spiral, which will in the end prove hurtful to the workingman. The purchasing power of the dollar, and not the number of dollars received, is the important factor.

"'The public is chief sufferer when the capital and labor engaged in the production of commodities necessary to the support of life fall a-fighting. In these cases certainly the interest of the public is vital, and therefore paramount. We may admit the right to strike on the part of labor and the right of capital to boycott, but in each case the right of the public to live is paramount, and will be asserted.

"'We now are called upon to contemplate an arrangement with a group opposing the Government which, however it terminates, is unsound in principle and a menace to our institutions.'"

Mr. BORAH. May I ask from whom that came? Who is the author?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Dr. Garfield.

Mr. BORAH. Is it a telegram?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; it is a statement made in a periodical to which he contributes.

Mr. BORAH. I merely wish to say at this time that that is a very inadequate statement of the wage situation with reference to the coal miners.

AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the commissioner of agriculture of Texas to Mr. Curtis, the editor of the Country Gentleman, in regard to Mr. Hoover's association as food administrator; also an editorial upon the same subject from Wallace's Farmer.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
STATE OF TEXAS,
Austin, February 3, 1920.

Mr. CYRUS H. K. CURTIS,
President Country Gentleman,
The Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR SIR: I have with much pleasure followed your editorials concerning the problems of the farmers and the Government in general, but it pained me to read in your Country Gentleman of January 31 an editorial backing Mr. Hoover for President, presumably as a farmers' candidate. I am sorry that this editorial appeared in the light of making Mr. Hoover a farmers' candidate and fear it will lessen your influence with the farmers of this country, which I very much regret, because the farmers need a great journalistic champion and have appeared to have much to hope for from your publications for that nation-wide support which agriculture as a nation-wide industry must have.

One can understand why the big packers, the grain, cotton, and other corporations—in fact, the middlemen in general and profiteers in particular, as well as certain European nations which were furnished American-grown food for less money than those nations could grow it themselves—would be anxious that Mr. Hoover be elected President. But I can not see how any man who is familiar with the acts of Mr. Hoover as Food Administrator and with the feelings of the farmers of this country could presume to boom him for President in the interest of American agriculture. The justifiable indictments which the producers of this country could bring against Mr. Hoover would be many indeed.

To begin with, Mr. Hoover based his administration as food dictator upon an assumption that the farmers of this country would not liberally support the war and its various activities, and that through political cowardice Congress would not make them do so. Following this assumption, he planned to have the middlemen make all the profits possible, expecting Congress to force them to finance the war.

Mr. Hoover did more to cause profiteering than any other one man. Profiteering is the greatest disturbing factor in the Nation's peace to-day, and the least talked about by officials who appear anxious to restore peace and plenty. Mr. Hoover's estimate of the patriotism of the American farmers was belied all through the war, and when Congress failed to make him dictator of prices he assumed the authority and used it to lower prices to the farmers and increase profits to the dealers.

He gave confidential advice to the big packers as to when they should buy hogs and cattle, and through the power of his office lowered the market at the time he advised them to purchase.

Under a period of time covering his administration green cowhides dropped from 14 cents per pound to 6 cents per pound, and certain brands of shoes advanced from $6.50 a pair to $12.50 a pair. I took this matter up personally with Mr. Hoover, and he claimed he had no authority to correct it. If he did not have authority to correct such glaring abuses, he should have had. He did not even use official pressure to make correction.

It must not be forgotten in this connection that he always found a means, even though he had to misrepresent the law, to hold down the price of the farmer's wheat and other farm products. The willful abuse of the authority conferred by Congress relative to the price of wheat is so well known and condemned throughout the Nation that it is not necessary to discuss it here.

Expecting a 16,000,000-bale crop of cotton, he held up the regulation of cottonseed prices until the market received the weight of the heavy movement of seed. Later, when rapid deterioration of the cotton crop showed that the 16,000,000-bale estimate was much too high, he waited until the importation of oriental oils were at maximum and then ordered regulations of cotton seed made at a time when oriental oils were at such maximum, causing American producers to meet this competition from the Orient. In this connection I wish to say that the importation of these oils from the Orient and elsewhere increased some 400 per cent during a four-year period of the war, a time when it was a nation-wide cry, headed by Hoover, that war-torn Europe was in dire need of both animal and vegetable fats. The ships were found to carry this oil to this country at an increased rate of 100 per cent per year, while ships could not be found to carry cotton to neutral countries, although neutral countries were badly in need of cotton and this country was all the time exporting fats to relieve Europe.

Mr. Hoover permitted thousands of cars of onions to rot in the fields of South Texas, thereby wasting food and hurting our growers. At the same time he shipped onions from the Atlantic seaboard to the Army camps at San Antonio and other Texas camps near the fields where onions were wasting; yet we had a constant cry of not only a shortage of food, but a shortage of cars.

This is a free country—or is supposed to be—and everybody has a right to their choice for President. But do not rub it in on the American farmers by putting Hoover forward as the farmer's candidate, when they know full well that millions of dollars of Liberty bonds, War Savings stamps, and Victory bonds held by other people, and for which other people get the credit from the standpoint of patriotism, were purchased with money which was unfairly taken from the farmer's pockets by Mr. Hoover.

You undertake to give Mr. Hoover credit for the increased acreage of wheat last year and relieve him of any responsibility for the decrease in acreage this year. The credit for whatever increase in the wheat acreage last year was due to a hope of profit, belongs to Congress and not to Hoover. The only credit he can claim is in his causing the intentions of Congress to fail, and thereby unfairly taking from the wheat growers what they were entitled to receive. He practically the same thing to the hog growers. His live-stock man sent word to the big packers that while the price fixed on hogs was a minimum price it would please Mr. Hoover if they would not advance much beyond the minimum.

It does not look well to see a great journal, speaking editorially, to make such comparisons as you make concerning the wheat acreage of last year and this. You must know that all the stimulus which the act of Congress created Mr. Hoover killed, and the reduction this year is due to disappointment and lack of profits on the part of growers, together with a shortage of labor, bad weather, and poor transportation facilities. In short, every influence Hoover brought to bear was negative.

Having in my official capacity made several trips to Mr. Hoover's office, and there met with representatives of farmers from all parts of the country, and having discussed his acts with official representatives of farmers since then, I feel confident that if Mr. Hoover's backers should be able to secure his nomination for President thousands of farmers in the United States would take the stump against him and the party who should put him up. The time has not yet come when the people of these United States want even a near-English subject for President, and Mr. Hoover, in environment and business, is practically an English subject.

Very truly, yours,

FRED W. DAVIS,
Commissioner.

[Editorial from Wallace's Farmer, Feb. 13, 1920.]

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH THE FARMER?

Under date of January 30, a press dispatch was sent out from Washington, which began as follows: "Indications of a widespread spirit of unrest and dissatisfaction among the farmers of the country so threatening as likely to disturb the existing economic structure is considered by Government officials to be revealed in more than 40,000 replies to a questionnaire recently sent out by the Post Office Department."

It seems that about 200,000 copies of a sheet containing questions for farmers to answer were sent out throughout the agricultural States. The farmer was requested to answer them and return them to the Post Office Department. When about 40,000 of these replies had been received the Post Office Department people became alarmed, and Mr. Blakslee, one of the assistants to the Postmaster General, went before the Senate Post Office Committee and told them about it, saying: "Such a condition at a time when the predominant cry is for production and still more production can not but constitute a grave menace." And one of the Senators said the replies seemed to have come from a bunch of Bolshevists.

The replies made by farmers to the questions sent out are exactly what any man who has been familiar with agricultural conditions would anticipate. They tell the story of the difficulty in getting farm help, of long working hours, of the low prices of some agricultural products as compared with the cost of production, and of the steady drift from the farm to the city, because the city offers easier hours and higher wages. They point out that while prices of farm products have been beaten down as far as possible, the prices of food products to the consumer have increased as well as the prices of practically everything the farmer has to buy. It is an old story to people who have been in touch with farm sentiment, but it seems to have come with a rude shock to the folks at Washington, and they have become quite excited about it.

This dispatch from Washington was played up in the daily papers of the United States under rather startling headlines. For example, it was given the first column on the first page of the New York Times, which is generally looked upon as the greatest newspaper in the United States, under the display headline, "Farmers' unrest a grave danger, officials find." Similar headlines were used by other dailies throughout the country. Even in the Central West, where knowledge of agricultural conditions ought to be expected in the offices of the daily press, we find such headlines as "Spirit of unrest among farmers menace to United States," giving the impression that the farmers of the country are in a dangerous state of mind.

When we use the word "unrest" in these days we involuntarily think of Bolshevist activities, or something of that sort. Now, the fact is that no class of people in the United States are so little tainted with socialistic and bolshevistic doctrines as are the farmers. The farmer is the great conservative force of the country. He is intensely patriotic, has no use at all for either the long-haired parlor Bolshevist who wishes to set up a government of free love, or for the I. W. W.'s, Socialists, anarchists, and other folk of that sort, who want to upset all forms of government and confiscate for their own use all forms of property. The farmer believes in stable government, in schools, and churches, and homes. He is the balance wheel, the stabilizing force. To the extent, therefore, that the dispatch from Washington gives the impression that the farmer is in a condition of unrest which might end in an effort on his part to upset established government, the dispatch is a base libel.

What, then, is the matter with the farmer? Why is he dissatisfied? Why have the farmers of the Central Western States organized themselves so thoroughly in the Farm Bureau Movement? Why have they raised such large sums of money to be used in promoting this movement and its purposes? Why is this organization being extended so rapidly to other States? Why has the National Farm Bureau Association been formed? What is the farmer going to do?

The answer is easy. The farmer is getting tired of being made the goat.

That does not mean that he proposes to make a disturbance, or try to overturn the Government, or start a new political party, or confiscate property. Nothing of that sort. It means simply that he feels that it is time he was looking after his own business interests; that he is determined to secure fairer prices for the things he has to sell; that he proposes to set up whatever business institutions may be necessary to help him to sell and buy to advantage. It means above all that he sees that it is time for him to study the business game and learn how to play it for himself, just as other people have learned to play it for themselves. And especially it means that he is tired of being double-crossed not only by other business interests but by people who are in places of authority in Government. He is thoroughly sick of Government price fixing and Government operation of railroads, and Government meddling in general.

If we were asked to name one man who is more responsible than any other for starting the dissatisfaction which exists among the farmers of the country, we would instantly name Mr. Hoover. What has Mr. Hoover to do with it? Well, here's the story:

When the United States entered the war there was every reason to believe that it would be a long war. With so many men withdrawn from production, a long war meant serious food difficulties.

Therefore the appeal was made to the farmers of the United States to produce food and produce abundantly. Especially was there need for increased pork production. Mr. Hoover said that a plentiful supply of lard and bacon was as urgently needed as a plentiful supply of guns and ammunition. But there seemed to be a question as to whether we would be able to produce as many hogs as were needed, because the price of corn was so much higher relatively than the price of hogs; that is, the farmer was offered more money for his corn sold as corn than he could get by feeding the corn to the hogs and selling it as hogs instead of as corn. Therefore the tendency was to produce fewer hogs and sell more grain.

When Mr. Hoover began to study this situation he found in the files of Wallace's Farmer certain studies on hog production which extended back for a period of over 30 years. He found there evidence to show that when hogs sold in Chicago for less than the value of 11.67 bushels of corn hog production decreased, and that when they sold for more than this hog production increased. So he decided to stimulate hog production by assuring the farmers that if they would produce hogs they would get a higher price relatively for their hogs than they would get for their corn as corn. He therefore announced, in November of 1917, that, so far as he could influence prices, he would try to make the hogs farrowed in the spring of 1918 fetch a price per hundredweight when ready for market which would be equivalent to the value of 13 bushels of the corn fed into them.

This promise made by Mr. Hoover was given the widest publicity. He printed it in pamphlet form and circulated it throughout the United States. The farm papers, the professors in the agricultural colleges, everybody who had a chance to talk to the farmer or write for him told about this promise and assured the farmers that, no matter what happened, if they would only produce more hogs they could be sure that they would get a price for them that would yield them more money than they could get if they sold the corn.

Farmers took this promise at its face value. They believed what everybody told them, and the result was that they very greatly increased the number of hogs. They regarded Mr. Hoover's promise as a promise of the Government—which, in fact, it was, because Mr. Hoover was acting for the Government—and they had full faith in Uncle Sam. They felt that he would make his word good. They had been losing money on hogs right along, but now they thought they could produce them safely at a profit.

The time came to make good the promise. The new price was to be applied to the pigs farrowed in the spring of 1918, which would go to market in the fall and winter of that year and the early months of 1919. What happened?

In October of 1918 it became apparent that Mr. Hoover did not propose to carry out his share of this arrangement made with the farmers. He announced that hogs would sell during the month of October for about $18 per hundredweight. This was about $2.50 per hundredweight less than he had promised to try to make them sell for. He also announced that a minimum price of $15.50 would be maintained on hogs, which would mean a loss of about $5 per hundredweight, based on the price he had promised. Shortly afterwards he announced a scheme upon which he proposed to try to make good the promise he had made. It was such a barefaced juggling of figures as is seldom seen and aroused widespread indignation throughout the hog-producing country.

If Mr. Hoover had said frankly that hog production had exceeded his expectations and that, much as he regretted it, he did not believe it would be possible for the Government to make good its promise the farmers would have felt disappointed, but they would have accepted the situation as a war loss. But when he tried to evade his promise by juggling the figures and at the same time pretended to keep it the farmers lost patience and they lost faith as well. They felt that Mr. Hoover, and through him Uncle Sam, was trying to make them the victims of a straight confidence game. It was a hard jolt. Mr. Hoover should not have made a promise if he had not intended to keep it. Having made it, he should have kept it to the letter or frankly acknowledged that he could not do so. He asked for hogs and he got them. He promised a certain price and then tried to get out of paying it, and succeeded, in part. Of course, he thought he was doing the right thing; that the end justified the means. But he was mistaken, and his mistake has caused a lot of trouble and will cause more.

That was really the beginning of what the daily press now calls "unrest" among the farmers. In the meantime, there were the efforts to beat down milk prices. Farmers who had been selling milk to the cities had been losing money right along, just as they did on hogs, simply because they had to pay prices for grain and hay that were higher than they would sell for in the form of milk. Consequently, milk production was decreasing and the price was going up. The Food Administration people, either directly or indirectly, tried to work the same game on the dairy farmers that they worked on the hog producers, and with the same result.

Then came the price drive, early in 1919, when prices of corn and other farm products were beaten down without cause, and the second and more successful price drive in July and August of 1919, when, led by Attorney General Palmer, everybody turned on the farmer and smashed him as hard as they could. The result was that the farmers of the country suffered the loss of millions upon millions of dollars and the consumers of the country got no corresponding benefit. Instead of dropping, prices to the consumer have advanced right along.

The farmer is less suspicious and more trustful than other people, but he does not need to be hit over the head with a sledge hammer more than two or three times before he realizes that something is wrong. He is thinking clearly now, all right. He sees that price making is a great, big game and that it is time for him to learn it. Heretofore he has been producing without asking any questions as to the prices he will get. He has been taking what the other fellow has been willing to give him. Now he sees that the price he gets for the things he produces is the important thing. Other people have been getting a price which covers the cost of production and, in addition, a fair profit. That is what the farmer is going to expect in the future. It may take him some time to get it, but he is going to get it or quit. He will have to.

The farmer furnished more than 25 per cent of all the fighting men in Uncle Sam's armies, and after the boys had gone to war the older men and the women and the girls and the children turned to and produced more food than ever before in all the history of farming in the United States. While other people were being assured of the cost of production plus a fair profit—and sometimes more—the farmer took his chances. He thought that he would be treated fairly. Anyhow, the farm folks felt that it was their country and their war and that it was up to them to do everything they could to win it, no matter what the results might be financially. While other people were working on an eight-hour-day basis at tremendous wage advances, the people on the farms were working from 12 to 16 hours. They did not complain about this; they just worked. Our soldier boys had to be fed and our allies had to be fed, and it was up to us to feed them.

But now the war is won and the treatment the farmer has received from other folks during the past year has not been pleasant. Almost everybody else has been letting up in their work, decreasing the number of hours, demanding increased wages, and getting them. But they want the farmer to continue to work on the war-time basis and reduce his prices to a peace-time basis. It won't do. The farmer does not propose to stand for it. He is not going to start any revolution nor anything of that sort. He is just going to study the business game and adjust his business to the situation. He is going to demand fair prices for his products and back up this demand by organizing and studying the game and learning how to get them.

The farmers of the corn belt mostly have made money during the past five years. On the whole, it has been a prosperous period for them. Prices generally have ruled high, although prices of live stock have been lower relatively than prices of grains, and consequently the live-stock feeder who has had to buy his grain has at times lost a great deal of money. Land has advanced tremendously in value and many farmers have taken advantage of this to cash in and retire.

In view of this generally prosperous condition, many people have difficulty in understanding why the farmer should complain. They do not see that the great increase in the price of land, the increase in price of farm labor, and everything else the farmer has to buy stimulates a condition which the farmer has very good reason to fear. If we could be assured of continued high prices for farm crops, the feeling of dissatisfaction among farmers would gradually evaporate. With prices as they have prevailed during the past two years there would not be much trouble in paying interest on the high-priced land or in paying rent. But there is every reason to believe that after 1920—and certainly after 1921—prices for farm crops will rule very much lower, and it will then be exceedingly difficult for any but the most skillful farmers to make money on present land values.

The cry from the cities and industrial centers is for cheap food, and our experience of the past shows very clearly that they are going to do everything they can to get it, and that without considering the farmer's cost of production. Most of the agitation against the high cost of living is directed against the farmer, and our officials, both State and national, as well as our Representatives in Congress, are susceptible to agitation of this sort from the cities. The effort will be made to bring in cheap grains and cheap meats from other countries, where land is cheap and living standards are low, and use these imports to beat down prices of stuff produced at home.

It is therefore because of fear of what is going to happen to him that the farmer is organizing to protect himself. He has learned something during the past three years. He sees very clearly that unless he can get prices for farm products which will be high enough to pay interest on the money invested in land and equipment, plus fair wages for himself and his boys, plus enough more to maintain the fertility of his land, our agriculture will decline. And throughout the corn belt there is the fear that we may have to go through the experience of the farmers of Pennsylvania, Ohio, and the Eastern States following the Civil War, when the flood of cheap grains and meats which followed the opening of this great western country simply smothered the eastern farmers, reduced immensely the price of their land, and compelled them to move west in large numbers.

If the Federal Government and the daily press could only be made to see this whole situation, there would be a fair chance to work out of it. Really it is a matter of greater importance to the Nation as a whole than to the individual farmer, because the latter can take care of himself. But we have had no national agricultural policy. No one in authority has seemed able to visualize just what has happened and what is likely to happen to our agriculture. So there is nothing left for the farmer to do but make a fight for prices that will enable him to maintain a sustaining agriculture and, failing that, to look after No. 1.

The people connected with the Federal Government and the people of the cities should not make any mistake in this matter. They should get it out of their heads that this unrest among farmers is a menace to established government. The fact is that the farmers believe in established government and love their country more deeply and will sacrifice more for it than any other class of people in the United States.

LANDS AT MILITARY POSTS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8819) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 16, 22, 28, 29, 30, and 31.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "at Camp Taylor, Ky., and in no event later than June 30, 1921"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following: "$236,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SELDEN P. SPENCER,
GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
IRVINE L. LENROOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JULIUS KAHN,
DANIEL R. ANTHONY,
THOMAS S. CRAGO,
S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator about Camp Bragg. Does that provision remain in the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. SPENCER. The provision relating to Camp Bragg remains in the bill just as it came from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 19th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 3371) authorizing Gorden N. Peay, jr., his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the White River.

SALE OF SHIPS (S. DOC. NO. 231).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a resolution passed by the Senate on February 14, requesting the President to inform that body "whether any, and if so, what, agreement or understanding exists between him and the officials of Great Britain concerning the disposition by the United States of America of the German ships which the Shipping Board is proposing to sell, or which were acquired by the United States after the termination of hostilities between said United States and the central European Teutonic powers."

The ships for the purchase of which bids have been asked by the Shipping Board were taken over by Executive orders issued pursuant to the joint resolution of Congress of May 12, 1917, authorizing the President to take over for the United States the possession and title of any vessel within its jurisdiction, under enemy ownership, or under the registry of an enemy country. The Government of the United States is not in possession of any ex-German vessels except those taken over under this resolution. Under an armistice agreement between the German Government and the allied and associated powers certain German vessels were taken over primarily for the transport of food to Europe, including Germany, and for the transportation of troops. Of the tonnage so taken over, certain passenger vessels were allocated to the United States temporarily for the purpose of repatriating American soldiers. When the transportation of our troops was completed, these vessels were all surrendered in accordance with the agreement under which they were temporarily allocated to this Government for such use.

There is not, nor has there been, any agreement or understanding between the President of the United States and officials of Great Britain concerning the sale of the ex-German vessels in possession of the United States, nor is there any agreement or understanding with respect to what disposition shall be made of those ships by the United States.

I believe the above information fully answers the Senate's inquiry. However, I am transmitting herewith a draft of a proposed understanding in regard to ex-enemy merchant tonnage to which I have given assent, subject to future action of Congress, as provided therein. Although this understanding, which recognizes American rights with regard to German vessels taken in our ports, does not relate to the disposition of such vessels by the United States, I am, nevertheless, transmitting it in order that the Senate may be in possession of all the information there is in any way relating to the vessels in question. I had intended to submit this to Congress at the appropriate time, after the ratification of the treaty with Germany.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
20 February, 1920.

HERBERT C. HOOVER.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the remarks of Mr. Hughes respecting Mr. Hoover, as published in the New York World of Thursday, the 19th of February.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HUGHES ACCLAIMS HOOVER IN GIVING CIVIC FORUM MEDAL—CARNEGIE HALL CROWD CHEERS AT HIGH TRIBUTE PAID HIM FOR DISTINGUISHED WAR SERVICE—ACCEPTS HONOR FOR ARMY OF MEN WHO HELPED HIM—WARNS AGAINST "DANGER OF PARTISANSHIP" IN DUTIES BEFORE US—SPEECHES BY OTHERS.

"Such a wave of enthusiasm as is rarely manifested by a New York gathering swept to its feet, cheering, an audience that packed Carnegie Hall last evening, when Herbert Hoover received from the hand of Charles E. Hughes the Civic Forum's medal for distinguished public service.

"When there came a lull in the tumultuous, prolonged applause, Robert Erskine Ely, director of the Civic Forum, called for three cheers, in which every member of the gathering joined.

"The recipient of the tribute was manifestly moved. Color flooded his face as he thanked the donors of the medal, declaring that he felt it was meant as much for the great body of Americans who have helped him in his tasks as for himself.

"'In this tribute,' he said, 'there should be recognition of my colleagues throughout the whole United States, who gave their services, first that Belgium might be preserved, and then that the life of Europe might be maintained down to the signing of peace.

"'The years of contact I have now had with my countrymen in bitter trial have demonstrated that there are thousands equal to leadership. There is, indeed, a definite and fine sense of voluntary sacrifice throughout the whole American people, which has been developed in this war to a degree never before equaled in the world.

DANGER OF PARTISANSHIP.

"'It has the one fine quality of self-sacrifice. It realizes that service is the underlying element of democracy. We are confronted with many and complex problems, and it is our duty to guard against the danger that selfishness and partisanship will overwhelm our sense of duty to the greatest number.'

"Mr. Hughes, chairman of the meeting, in his opening address, said that in paying tribute to Mr. Hoover's merits 'we are seeking without reference to class, without regard to party or to politics, to honor a great civilian hero of the World War.

"'Long before America realized her duty in the great struggle,' he continued, 'she was profoundly gratified that, in the person of Hoover, her humane sentiment was finding expression in an organization of unsurpassed effectiveness for the relief of Belgium. Hoover, as administrator of relief, was at once financier, diplomat, and statesman. He came into contact with the Governments of the Allies and with the despotism of the Central Powers. At all points he was ready, equipped, firm, fearless, and adequate.

"'It would have been impossible for any human being, or any conceivable group, to have handled this gigantic undertaking to the satisfaction of everyone. But no one doubted that to that task Hoover brought the best ability anywhere available. And, later, Europe recognized his preeminence as an organizer, in selecting him to administer the vast sum appropriated for feeding the war-stricken peoples, and as a member of the supreme economic council of the Allies.

HUGHES RECOUNTS RECORD.

"'In the midst of men of valor, men of exceptional talent, men of affairs, and those skilled in large enterprise, there is one who stands out with a unique reputation because of the rapidity with which he was able to formulate wise plans and the extraordinary degree of success with which he executed them.

"'His record prior to the war was that of successful enterprise in many lands. When the hour struck the man was ready. It is a source of peculiar pride that we recognize in him whom we honor to-night those gifts which, found to be invaluable during the war, especially illustrate American ability and character in the field which opens the greatest promise in time of peace.

"'The Americanism of Hoover is shown in every deed, in every utterance. His achievements dignified the Nation and established prestige for the American name abroad which even the mistakes of diplomacy can not obscure. He bears a name illustrious because of remarkable achievements; but, best of all, it is a name untarnished, expressive not only of exceptional ability but of the simple life of a modest citizen.

A STIMULUS TO AMBITION.

"'In truth we are here not so much to honor him as to recognize our duty to appreciate great public service and to stimulate, especially among the youth of our country, the most worthy ambition. It is well for America that we give honor not simply to military and naval heroes, not only to distinguished officers of State, but to a man of the people, who served his country with honor by the most notable service to the world.'

"Other speakers were President Ray Lyman Wilbur, of Stanford University, Mr. Hoover's alma mater; Horace Vaughn Winchell, Mr. Hoover's predecessor as president of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers; President Aurelia H. Heinhardt, of Mills College, Calif.; and Henry Morgenthau, former ambassador to Turkey.

"The Civic Forum medal has been conferred only three times previously, the other recipients having been Alexander Graham Bell, Thomas A. Edison, and George W. Goethals."

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12046) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 16, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out at once the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged, sick, and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines," approved March 3, 1919, the limit of cost of the acquisition of the site and uncompleted building and completion and construction of the hospital buildings at Cook County, Ill., authorized by said act, is hereby increased from $3,000,000 to $3,500,000, and for the purpose of carrying the foregoing authorization into effect there is hereby appropriated the sum of $500,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this amendment involves a matter which heretofore has received a great deal of attention. It is a subject which became involved in a rather labyrinthine way, so that it became very difficult to adjust. This hospital was authorized by a special bill providing hospitals for soldiers. It was begun after the authorization of the expenditure of $3,000,000, and in fact was nearly completed, when, by reason of the practical closing of the war, the Secretary of War turned the whole matter of hospitals and the care of sick soldiers after discharge over to the Public Health Service.

A hospital prepared for soldiers differs from a hospital prepared for the Public Health Service, and many changes were necessary to be made in the construction of this hospital. The contract was originally signed by an officer of the Army, who was relieved from that particular position soon afterwards, and before the return of the Secretary of War, who was then in France. The Secretary of War failed to sign the original contract because of his absence, and the matter was being turned over to the other organization. The Public Health Service from time to time has varied in its recommendations. So the matter was left where the Secretary of the Treasury was unable to complete the hospital properly under the original contract, and it seems was unable to effect a new contract with the builders. The Committee on Appropriations was then appealed to for some changes in the language of the law in order to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed. Therefore, in a former deficiency appropriation bill, an amendment was included. That, however, proved ineffectual, and in the appropriation bill preceding this one—that is, the first urgent deficiency appropriation bill—another change was carried. Now comes at this time the amendment which I have offered, and which, as it was presented to the committee, carried numerous other provisions.

The committee refused to go further in this matter unless there was agreed upon an absolute settlement which would not exceed certain boundaries. Not having received anything up to nearly the closing hour of yesterday, nothing was included in the bill in reference to the matter, but last night came the information from the Secretary of the Treasury that an agreement had been arrived at. This morning the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has been in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury for a half hour and has gone over the entire matter from A to Z.

The Secretary assures me that if the amendment, which I submitted to him, is adopted he will struggle yet to complete the hospital for the uses of the Public Health Service for the amount originally agreed upon, but that it can not be done without arranging beforehand a list of changes, which he proposes to do under a renewed contract.

Mr. President, I will ask that the proposal which I hold in my hand may be read at the desk. It involves a question sent from the Secretary of the Treasury to the contractor and also submitted to the regularly employed attorney of Mr. Shank and Mr. Hines, who have furnished the money with which to build the hospital.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paper presented by the Senator from Wyoming will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Will your people agree to sell the site and complete the buildings known as the Broadview Hospital, Chicago, Ill., according to the revised plans and specification for $3,000,000, minus the $73,770.87, plus an amount sufficient to cover any increases in wages and cost of materials over the schedules prevailing in the market in Chicago October 16, 1919, found by the Supervising Architect, with the understanding that the absolute final cost, including said sum of $73,770.87, shall not exceed $3,500,000, with the further understanding that the cost of the project shall be reduced by such amount as may result from cheapening expedients agreed upon?

Copy of the agreement signed February 19, 1920.

Answer. Yes.

SHANK & CO.,
By GEO. H. SHANK, President.

Yes.

WILLIAM S. BENNET,
Attorney for the Owner.

NOTE.—If not, for what sum will your people sell the site and complete the buildings according to the plans and specifications, without any qualifications, provisos, or reservations whatsoever?

Mr. WARREN. The signatures to that communication are those of the contractor and of the attorney. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when this matter was before the Senate on a former occasion I recall that the then Secretary of the Treasury, now the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], very vigorously opposed the purchase of the so-called Speedway Hospital. I think that the opposition of the Secretary would have triumphed in this matter had it not been for the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. We have such great confidence in him that when we understood that he was for the proposition I know it abated very much of the opposition that existed in regard to this matter.

Mr. President, there have been a number of communications sent to me from various sources, some in favor of this proposition and some violently opposed to it. Some of the statements which have been made were to the effect that a gross fraud was being perpetrated upon the Government; that the building would not provide the number of beds which had been represented; that the cost was entirely disproportionate to the advantages and benefits to the Government. One statement made to me by a person who claimed to have made some investigation was to the effect that each bed would cost, as I remember, $3,000. Another gentleman, who claimed to have some knowledge of this matter, reported to me that there had been some scandal in connection with the purchase of it, and it was charged—and an investigation, as I recall, was had—that a large sum was paid by way of commission to the person who sold this project. There have been so many charges and countercharges in regard to this matter, Mr. President, that I shall be very glad if some further explanation can be made in regard to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Utah invites me to an explanation respecting this amendment.

Some months ago I introduced in the Senate a resolution to investigate the necessity for Government hospitals required to make provision for the treatment of sick and disabled soldiers. As a result of that investigation the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to acquire the hospital involved in this amendment and a number of other hospitals at different places.

During the course of the investigation it appeared conclusively from the evidence that some seven or eight subordinate authorities of the War Department had signed a contract with the Shank Co. for the construction of this hospital. The contract contained the usual emergency clause contemplating procedure immediately with the construction. The Secretary of War, however, had not signed the contract. He himself was then, if my recollection serves me correctly, in France, and Assistant Secretary of War Crowell was Acting Secretary of War. The evidence upon the part of some four or five witnesses was to the effect that a real estate agent in the War Department had approached the owner of this property on one occasion, and his attorneys on another occasion, and asked for a fee of $100,000 as a consideration to recommend the adoption of the project. The evidence further tended to show that he claimed the project would not be approved without his favorable recommendation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator that that charge was made by the owners of the property themselves.

Mr. ROBINSON. The owners of the property refused his proposition and filed affidavit with the Secretary of War charging the employee in the War Department with this breach of duty and alleged criminal conduct. The affidavits were referred, very properly, to the Department of Justice for investigation and action. I know nothing of what has occurred since that time in connection with the charge.

I point out to my friend, the Senator from Utah, that the evidence tended to show that the request for a fee of $100,000 came from an employee of the Government; that he claimed to be a real estate agent in the city of Chicago, and claimed a fee because of his occupation there, being engaged at work in the War Department for a nominal consideration. So far as I know and so far as the record shows, that is a fair statement of the transaction referred to in connection with the fee. The hospital project has been investigated some five or six times by the War Department or representatives of the War Department, and without exception the report has always been that this hospital—and I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], who is familiar with the subject, to this statement—is not only the best hospital available for the Government's use but that it provides accommodations cheaper than any other hospital which the Government has been able to obtain or has in prospect; that it is a modern, up-to-date, fireproof hospital, furnished at a less cost per bed than the frame fire traps that have been used elsewhere throughout the country.

That is the undisputed evidence in the matter. The subject has been gone over a number of times by Congress, and it ought to be disposed of now. In the general hospitals act, which was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as a result of the resolution of investigation which I mentioned in the beginning of my statement, was contained this language:

SEC. 7. By the construction of new hospitals and sanatoria, to include the necessary buildings with their appropriate mechanical and other equipment and approach work, including roads leading thereto, for the accommodation of patients, officers, nurses, attendants, storage, laundries, vehicles, and live stock on sites now owned by the Government, or on new sites to be acquired by purchase or otherwise, at the places hereinafter named.

Then, omitting a proviso which gave the Secretary of the Treasury discretion to select better sites or hospital projects at less cost, the act provides:

(a) At Cook County, Ill., by taking over the land and executing the contract for the construction thereon of hospital buildings specified therein of a certain proposed contract executed by the Shank Co., August 31, 1918, and in accordance with such contract and the plans and specifications, identified in connection therewith August 31, 1918, by the signature and initials of Brig. Gen. R. C. Marshall, jr., Construction Division, Quartermaster Department, United States Army, by Lieut. Col. C. C. Wright, and the Shank Co., by George H. Shank, president, at the cost stated therein, namely, $2,500,000, with such changes in said plans and specifications as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury to adapt said specified buildings to the needs and purposes of the Public Health Service, at a total limit of cost not to exceed $3,000,000.

(b) In carrying the foregoing authorization into effect the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to execute the contract with the Shank Co, hereinbefore specified, with such verbal changes as are made necessary by a change in the contracting officers, and to assume all obligations in said contract contained, and to purchase materials and labor in the open market, or otherwise, and to employ laborers and mechanics for the construction of such buildings and their equipment as in his judgment shall best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of cost herein authorized.

Under that provision the Secretary of the Treasury did not close up the matter; and when the urgent deficiency appropriation bill was passed, approved December 24, 1919, after a full discussion of the matter then, this provision was inserted:

HOSPITAL AT BROADVIEW, COOK COUNTY, ILL.

That so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes" (Public No. 5, 66th Cong.), as reads as follows: "The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to acquire and complete immediately the hospital at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., authorized and appropriated for by an act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines,' approved March 3, 1919" (Public act No. 326, 65th Cong.), is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed immediately to acquire the uncompleted hospital building at Broadview, Cook County, Ill., and the site thereof, consisting of 320 acres, more or less, and to cause the work on said hospital building to be completed and the five proposed auxiliary buildings to be constructed in accordance with plans and specifications transmitted to the Shank Co, July 15, August 16, and September 23, 1919, and the appropriation therefor contained in the act entitled 'An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers,' approved March 3, 1919, together with such further changes in said buildings as may be found necessary or desirable."

Thus it appears that in three separate acts of Congress this matter has been gone over, and the Secretary of the Treasury has been instructed to acquire this property and proceed with its completion: First, the general hospitals act, approved March 3, 1919; second, the urgent deficiency appropriation act, approved June 30, 1919; and third, the urgent deficiency appropriation act, approved December 24, 1919.

As the matter now stands, the existing law not only authorizes but requires the acquisition of this property. It requires the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed with the completion of the hospital. The amendment which the Secretary of the Treasury has submitted, through the chairman of the committee, authorizes an addition to the limit of cost of $500,000. The Shank Co. binds itself to complete the entire project in accordance with the revised plans within a limit of $3,500,000, and the Secretary hopes that it may be completed for less than that sum; but it is necessary, in order to avoid the possibility of a deficiency arising, to accept this amendment. I think it ought to be accepted. The matter has been held in abeyance long enough. It has been investigated over and over, not only by authorities in the War Department but by the committees of the Senate, including the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which reported the original hospital act authorizing the acceptance of this project.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I wanted to ask my friend whether or not the maximum sum named now will include the purchase of the 160 acres to which he has referred?

Mr. ROBINSON. My information is that it will.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee on that subject?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the $3,500,000 will cover the cost of acquiring the 160 acres of land?

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely; and I want to impress upon the Senator, further, that I have the most solemn assurance of the Secretary himself, within the last hour or hour and a half, that under the offer and acceptance which was read from the desk they are bound to furnish this land and to complete this project under the original contract, with such changes as may be agreed upon, and the Secretary hopes that it may not exceed the $3,000,000, or not exceed it very much; but he is unable to make any promises, and he is unable to get any contract, unless there is latitude enough and longitude enough to cover these needed changes from the original plans of the Army to the Public Health Service. And I am not sure but that the land may be 320 acres instead of 160 acres.

Mr. KING. The Senator also should include the word "altitude."

Mr. WARREN. So I think the question and answer cover the ground completely.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Before the Senator takes his seat, let me ask whether the amendment contemplates the appropriation of $3,000,000 in addition to the money which was carried by the hospital bill of last year?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. This is in express terms $500,000, or so much of it as may be necessary, in addition to the $3,000,000 appropriated in the special hospital bill long ago.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether this amount will complete the five buildings to which the Senator referrred in his remarks a few moments ago?

Mr. ROBINSON. My understanding is that it is intended to carry out this project, with such modifications as have been agreed upon. I agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that the arrangement is a good one for the Government. I think the project in the beginning was the very best that has ever been submitted to the Government, and that is the conclusion that has been reached by all the committees that have investigated it. No one who ever went into the subject, in so far as I know, reached any other conclusion than that it was both the best and the cheapest hospital facility that the Government has acquired or can secure. The limit of cost has been heretofore fixed at $3,000,000. This amendment simply raises the possible limit of cost by $500,000, which is necessary to meet the changes that the Secretary of the Treasury finds are required in order to make this hospital available as a Public Health hospital. The Senator understands that it was originally begun as an Army hospital.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator advise us what the original cost of the hospital was when it was designed as an Army hospital?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it was $2,500,000. I am not sure about that.

Mr. KING. So that this increases it $1,000,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. The total increase from the original plans, perhaps, has been a million dollars.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know whether or not the number of beds in the hospital will be larger under these new plans than under the old ones?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I can not state as to that. My information is that a large portion of this new work is in connection with the buildings to which the Senator has referred, which are required for the accommodation of the employees of the hospital, and are not themselves immediately connected with the main hospital building.

Mr. KING. While this is perhaps not germane, can the Senator advise us of the reason for the acquisition of so many hospitals by the Public Health Service? Let me premise that question, before the Senator answers it, by a statement.

During the war, as the Senator knows, a large number of hospitals—some temporary, and some of very great value—were acquired or erected by the Government. We had in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 men, or nearly that number, at one time in our cantonments and ports and military reservations throughout the United States. In order properly to care for this vast number, of course, a large number of hospitals were necessary. In addition we now have a large number of soldiers' homes, which may be converted at very little expense into suitable hospitals, some of which are scarcely inhabited, because the old soldiers are fast passing away.

It has occurred to me, and that suggestion has been made by many, that with the hospitals that the Government owns, plus the old soldiers' homes, there is no necessity for these additional hospitals, and that the demand which has been made, or the suggested demand, of $85,000,000 for Public Health hospitals is wholly unwarranted and wholly unfounded. Can the Senator give us any information in respect to those matters?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not feel sufficiently informed at this time to undertake a detailed and accurate statement regarding the Public Health hospital program, but in so far as the particular project under consideration is concerned Congress has determined in three separate acts that the Government should acquire this hospital, and the liability of Congress under those acts already has been fixed. Now, undoubtedly the settlement of the matter which is comprised in the amendment sent to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury is the very best for the Government that can come about. I do not agree with the Senator from Utah, if I correctly understood the implication of his statement, that the existing hospital facilities are adequate for the requirements of our returned soldiers; and while I have not been into the subject fully, I think the Senator will find that other facilities than those already authorized will be required by the Public Health Service as the years go by, but whether that be true or not this is the best proposition that the Government has had. The Government, at enormous comparative cost, has acquired a number of frame hospital buildings subject to fire, exceedingly dangerous to occupy. This hospital is absolutely fireproof. It is badly needed, according to all of the information which has come to me, to meet emergency requirements; and if there is any criticism that can fairly be made of the course that this matter has pursued, it is to the effect that the Government has been too long deprived of the use of this very valuable hospital, which it has committed itself to acquiring by three separate acts.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the Senator from Utah that when this committee, of which I was a member, made its investigation the first thing it did after concluding its hearings was to ascertain what Army hospitals might be turned over to the Public Health Service. The Secretary of War and the Public Health Service could come to no agreement, and finally the committee compelled an agreement by which the Secretary of War turned over a number of the Army hospitals to the Public Health Service, and that was done in that legislation. In addition, this hospital was provided for. A bill had come to the Senate from the House appropriating, I think, $9,000,000 and we reduced that appropriation by several million dollars, taking the Army hospitals and this hospital; but the committee, realizing at the time that additional appropriations would be necessary for the Public Health Service, refused to do it at that time, with the idea that as time went on there might be other Army hospitals that might be turned over to the Public Health Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 9, insert the heading "Bureau of Efficiency" and the following:

To enable the Bureau of Efficiency to perform the duties imposed upon it by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 1, 1919, $20,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. I ask the Senator from Utah to state a little more particularly the object of the proposed amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I can do it in very few words, Mr. President. The Bureau of Efficiency was requested by the Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of War, the Director of Finance, and the Quartermaster General to make a survey of those departments, with a view of eliminating unnecessary employees, as far as possible, and also to make recommendations with reference to certain work which was considered as a duplication. That work was done at a cost of $20,000. It has saved to the Government already $250,000. I will say to the Senator further that the report also recommended changes in the Quartermaster's Department that will save $5,000,000 a year to the Government.

Mr. STERLING. It is for work already done?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; for work already done, and at the request of the Secretary of War, the Assistant Secretary of War, the Director of Finance, and the Quartermaster General.

Mr. STERLING. As it is for work already done I shall make no objection. I thought it contemplated an appropriation for future work.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate be reconsidered by which the amendment on page 29, beginning in line 24, down to and including line 2 on page 30, was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to that.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee reported, on page 29, line 24, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum of $75,000, in addition to that now provided by law, shall be available for the compensation of necessary employees serving at the seat of government.

Mr. SMOOT. My President, I desire to say just a word in explanation of the reason for my request. The appropriation of $75,000 proposed to be made by the amendment is for the employment of additional clerks in the District of Columbia. Officials of the Department of Justice came to my office this morning and stated that the money has already been spent. The appropriation for the detection and prosecution of crime for the present fiscal year amounted to $2,600,000, and of that amount there was a limit of $140,000 for the employment of clerks in the District of Columbia. This $75,000 does not increase the appropriation, but it does allow the $75,000 extra to be used for the hiring of clerks in the District of Columbia out of the original appropriation of $2,600,000.

I am going to take occasion at this time to say, and I hope that the heads of the departments will take notice of it, that when Congress makes an appropriation for the employment of clerks in the District of Columbia or for any other specific purpose the departments must recognize the fact that that is the amount of money which is to be expended for the purpose named and for no other, and if there is to be a deficiency they ought to come to Congress before a deficiency is created. I know the heads of departments in the past have paid no attention to the amount appropriated, and that is why we have one, two, three, and four deficiency appropriation bills every year.

I hope that the departments will understand from now on that deficiencies must cease and that when we make an appropriation Congress means that the amount of money appropriated shall be expended for no other purpose than that named in the bill. I recognize from what was told me this morning by the officials of the Department of Justice that the money has already been expended, and the appropriation, of course, was made not for this purpose but for another purpose entirely.

I ask that the amendment be agreed to as submitted by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 25, insert:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

For the preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1920, $3,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are some economies which are more extravagant and wasteful than any form of expenditure, and this which I am trying to remedy is one. There are ships lying at all the yards in urgent need of repairs, some of them serious repairs and others repairs which will become serious if neglected. If these repairs are neglected and the ships are allowed to lie untouched, it will end in a necessary appropriation many times larger than the one now proposed.

I can speak from personal knowledge only of the yard at Boston, but the condition which exists there exists at all the yards. There are half a dozen ships there, two dreadnoughts, as I remember, absolutely in need of immediate repairs, and if this sum is not given it will be necessary to lay off, not the extra force caused by the war, but the men mostly of long service who were there in the prewar period; that is, to reduce the force of the yard below normal. It is always a bad and an expensive thing to break the organization of any great plant; and that would be another cause of expense.

This and several other similar appropriations were asked for very urgently by the department. I have introduced an amendment to cover only the Bureau of Construction and Repair. I have arbitrarily reduced in my amendment even the amount they requested from $3,250,000 to $3,000,000.

The official statements in regard to it will be found in the letter from the Secretary of the Navy sent in January 22, 1920, and the details in regard to it which I do not wish to take the time of the Senate to read. This is needed proportionally at all yards. The total sum is very small compared with the work that remains to be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite the Senator's attention to the naval appropriation act approved July 11, 1919. I find that the appropriation there is a little less than I had carried the figures in mind, but the Senator will remember that the naval appropriation act carried considerably more than $400,000,000. I find on pages 20 and 21 of that act, under the head of "Bureau of Construction and Repair," that we appropriated $31,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. I was aware of that.

Mr. KING. I had no doubt that the Senator was aware of it.

Mr. LODGE. I happen to be on the committee, I will say to the Senator, and I am not wholly ignorant about the subject, although not as wise as I should like to be.

Mr. KING. I am delighted that the Senator advises me of the fact that he is on the committee. I ask the Senator if the $31,000,000 which was appropriated is not sufficient?

Mr. LODGE. It is not sufficient.

Mr. KING. The committee at that time, after full investigation, determined that $31,000,000 was sufficient for the Bureau of Construction and Repair; and it seems to me that we ought not to be called upon at this time, particularly in view of the fact that we will soon have a general appropriation bill, to make a further appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. We cut the construction and repair item very low, as I thought, as we did all the appropriations. The fact is, to deal with the subject for a moment in a large way, we are in the same danger now that we were after the Civil War. The country then made up its mind that we were never going to fight again—that we never should need a Navy again—and the Navy was allowed to run down year by year until we practically had no Navy except a few old-fashioned wooden ships. By that treatment of the Navy after the Civil War, and the total neglect of it which followed for many years, the country was put to enormous expense to rebuild it when the inevitable rebuilding came.

There is no economy in it; on the contrary, as I have already said, it is worse than a wasteful expenditure to make economies of this character. Every day that those ships lie at the yards the bills for repairs increase, because a ship that is in that condition deteriorates very rapidly.

We ought to dismiss the idea that the Navy is not going to be a great expense to the country. It must be, because its defense and its safety lie in the Navy. Setting aside all the safety that is promised us in the league for the moment, I think grave dangers still exist, and that the country ought to be thoroughly protected on both oceans. To cut down the Navy as is proposed would leave us in a condition, to my mind, of extreme danger. I am not advocating extravagant appropriations at all; but the Navy, both in building and in personnel, must be kept up, and to that we must make up our minds. There are plenty of things that we can cut, and I have favored cutting, and that can wait, but the Navy must always be dealt with.

In this particular case I think it is extremely poor economy, as I have already said, to make this reduction. I do not know that there is anything more which can be said. The ships are there; they need repairs of all classes. There are two dreadnoughts, as I said before, in the Boston yard alone. They are scattered about at all the yards. I think you will find it the case in every yard in the country, that the ships are lying there; and the kind of cutting that is apparently being attempted elsewhere is reckless and not intelligent, to my mind. It is saving at the moment, only to add a great deal more at a later day, just as we have dropped off a part of the railroad indebtedness. It makes a better appearance in the year's total appropriations. I see no economy in it whatever.

The way the thing comes about is the cutting of appropriation bills which ought to carry enough for the year. Then comes a deluge of deficiency bills, which is the most expensive way of legislating that there is. It arises from unwise reductions in the great bills which ought to carry, except for unforeseen emergencies, all the appropriations needed for the year.

The naval bill last year was cut too much, according to my idea, and that we should have a deficiency here and there does not surprise me. But I think that applies to all appropriation bills. We are all anxious to reduce the appropriations as much as we possibly can, and no one will do more in that direction than I.

In this particular case it is cutting off the most important service of the Government, for the Navy is more important to the Government than any other service. Owing to our isolation as a continent, it is the great bulwark of defense that we must always keep at the highest efficiency. It is the one place where there ought to be no serious reduction beyond the cutting off, of course, of the extraordinary war expenses, which will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars.

We ought to keep the Navy up. The first thing in keeping the Navy up is to keep the ships which we already have in repair. I know of no worse place to make a cut than in this particular direction. Thirty-one million dollars was appropriated. It was allotted among the bureaus as usual. They were called on to speed up in the summer for reasons given by the Secretary, and that led to a reduction of the allotment now. This is simply to keep them along for the present, and I think it is a very meritorious and a very important addition that ought to be made.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I can not add to the larger aspects of the question that have been indicated by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], but it seems to me that it is a cheeseparing policy to allow the ships of the American Navy to lie rotting at the wharves for the want of a small appropriation to keep them in condition for use, if there is occasion to call upon them for use. I am perfectly certain that not only at the navy yard at Boston but on the Pacific coast and elsewhere the conditions are practically similar to those in my own State at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

I do not look upon a ship myself as simply a mute and inanimate thing. It has a personality; it has a character; and these wounded veterans of the American Navy that are now at the various navy yards of the country are sentimentally entitled to be kept up and maintained.

It is false economy, Mr. President, to disorganize the personnel, to dissipate the organization at these great yards, because of the lack of an appropriation to carry on the work. In the Philadelphia yard I happen to know that the organization has been cut down to practically an American basis; that the 1,200 or 1,500 men who will be thrown out of employment if these ships are not to be taken care of and repaired are the cream of the large organization that it was necessary to maintain during the war in order to meet the demands made upon that yard. They have been substantially reduced to the men who own their homes in the vicinity of the yard. If we are going to be called upon to carry out a large naval program, it would not be many months after this organization had been dissipated before we would be compelled to call for a reorganization, and the private establishments of the country would have absorbed the highly intelligent artificers who have done this wonderful work.

So for the reason that it is a good factor of preparedness, that it is good sentiment, that it is good horse sense to put in the stitch in time which saves nine, I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will prevail.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, of course I recognize that the Senator offering this amendment and those associated with him on the Committee on Naval Affairs have a greater knowledge of the subject as a whole than have I or the other members of the Appropriations Committee. I think, however, I will not say in defense but in the interest of the Senator offering the amendment and of the Committee on Appropriations, I ought in a few brief sentences to state the difficulties that might follow in arranging this legislation, so that the members of the Naval Committee may know what those difficulties are and may shape their debate accordingly.

The Secretary of the Navy requested of the House of Representatives some $9,000,000. The House committee reported $400,000 for certain purposes; in the House $800,000 was put in; and $9,000,000 was attempted to be provided, as a whole or in separate items. Several points of order were made at different times as to some of the items, and were sustained, and as to others they were overruled, and the question went to a vote of the House. The bill was before the House for some two weeks. The subject came up, as properly it should, early in the consideration of the bill. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations there finally thought that he ought to refer the subject to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. I desire to read a few lines from the debate in the House merely to indicate what the difficulty was. The chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House first stated that there was plenty of money; that there were $21,000,000 unexpended; but he further said that he had taken the matter before his committee, that it had been considered there, and he said:

> Here is the motion that was made and the one that was carried:
> "Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the chairman of the committee inform the House that we think it wise to remove the limitation so as to authorize the appropriation—

It was sought to provide these amounts, first, instead of by direct appropriations, by transfer of appropriations previously made and then discontinued. However, the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is an original proposition to appropriate the amount of money named, which, as he says, is less than the estimate. Of course, it is entirely in order. To finish the reading, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the other House continued:

> as recommended, of an additional expenditure of $400,000 for technical help in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and that it is further the sense of the committee that other appropriations sought by amendments that have been offered are not needed and will not be needed until after July 1, 1920, when they will be cared for in the regular appropriation bill."

And this resolution in the Naval Affairs Committee was agreed to, with but two votes opposing.

Of course, after that the Members who were interested in the various navy yards proceeded with the debate. I shall not quote anything further, but the debate is in the RECORD for Senators to see.

The chairman of the committee made some further observations which tended, of course, to block any amendment which might be offered and which will make it rather difficult, as will be observed, finally to enact this legislation, whatever we may do in the Senate. He made the claim that there were now, I think he said, 92 navy yards, which were twice as many as we needed, except during the war; and he stated that the commandants at those yards had exceeded their lawful authority, and after the Secretary had apportioned and allocated the money they went on and spent whatever they saw fit. He noted one navy yard, that at Newport News, to which the amount of money allocated was $30,000 a month, and he stated that the commandant at that yard had spent $88,000 a month, an excess of $58,000 per month over the $30,000 authorized to be spent. He went on further to state that dreadnoughts and other large vessels and all other warships could be repaired entirely and completely inside of the amount already appropriated and available, and that many of the "old tubs," as he termed them, and other craft that were not useful in war, and, in fact, that ought to be scrapped instead of repaired, could surely wait.

I submit the remarks of the chairman of the House committee without any prejudice on my part in order to show the condition with which the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is confronted. While the committee did not report any of this legislation, I feel that if it is presented by members of the Committee on Naval Affairs they should know, and perhaps they have already read, what was said and done in the other House, and especially by Members of the House who are also members of the Naval Affairs Committee of that body.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has referred to the statement made by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, in which he stated the department had plenty of money on hand for the work that must be done in taking care of the ships of the Navy. He stated, I think, that they had $21,000,000 on hand. That statement was made on the 4th day of February, there remaining five months of the current year up to July 1. The total appropriation for the current year, as stated by Chairman BUTLER, for taking care of navy yards and for expenses necessary for taking care of ships, and so forth, was $84,000,000, covering appropriations to the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Steam Engineering, Supplies and Accounts, and Construction and Repair. Five months before the end of the current year $63,000,000 of that $84,000,000 had been spent, leaving only $21,000,000 with which to take care of the other five months. The expenses during those five months are not estimated to be lower proportionately than the expenses were during the first seven months.

The Navy Department, when it furnished its figures to the House committee, asked not for $9,000,000, but for $18,000,000. That sum was cut down by the Appropriations Committee of the House, and with the consent of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, to, I think, $9,300,000. That amount was in the bill which was passed by the House of Representatives last September. The Senate later turned that appropriation down when it came before them.

The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], instead of asking for the $18,000,000 originally asked for, or for the $9,300,000 to which it had been cut down in September, merely asks for $3,000,000 for the purpose of overhauling and taking care of the ships that are laid up in our navy yards. With that small appropriation it will not in any way be possible to take care of all of the ships which ought to be taken care of. Only a small amount of work can be done with it, but some of the work can be done with that amount of money.

I had a talk yesterday with Admiral Coontz, the Chief of the Bureau of Operations, and he told me that for every month the overhauling and repairing of a ship is postponed 5 per cent is lost; so that if the overhauling is postponed four more months, or from now until the 1st of July, 20 per cent will be lost; that is, if it would cost $100,000 to overhaul a ship now, it will cost $120,000 to overhaul the same ship four months from now.

As I have said, this small appropriation can not take care of all of the ships which must be taken care of, but it can provide for a certain amount of work. One of the things that it can do is to provide battleships which are now under repair, or which now should be under repair, for the annual cruise of the midshipmen of the Naval Academy. There are 1,800 of these midshipmen, and in making their annual cruises about 300 are placed on each vessel. If this money is appropriated it will enable the department to get ready six of the battleships which are now tied up in navy yards.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator tell the Senate what was done with the $60,000,000 that has already been expended this year for repairs, and why we are in a condition where we have not battleships enough to provide the annual cruise of the midshipmen after the expenditure of $60,000,000 for repairs?

Mr. HALE. That money was used in the regular course of taking care of the ships and yards. We have 15 dreadnoughts in the Navy and 14 predreadnoughts. Of the 15 dreadnoughts, 12 are now in commission and cruising with the fleet, 3 are under repair. These 3 are all in Pacific waters. Of the 14 predreadnoughts which we have, only 1 is in commission, all of the others being under repair. It is estimated, as I have said, that with the $3,000,000 proposed to be appropriated we can provide ships for the midshipmen, and we can do something in providing destroyers and tenders and hospital ships and other ships which are necessary to keep the fleet running.

It seems to me it is a very small amount of money which is asked for. We shall have to pay for the work directly, if we do not now get the $3,000,000 for use in repairing ships. We will save $600,000, on the basis of the figures I have already given, if the money is appropriated now, rather than allowed to go over until July. I believe the amendment is a reasonable one and I hope it will be carried.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield again I should like to ask whether, in his judgment, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, it should cost us more than $80,000,000 to keep our Navy in repair?

Mr. HALE. The estimates, I believe, for the coming year have been cut down from $84,000,000 to $70,000,000, and as we get nearer and nearer a peace basis I presume they will be further cut down.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the Senator from Wisconsin state where he got the figures $60,000,000 and $80,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I got them from the Senator from Maine just a moment ago.

Mr. LODGE. The amount appropriated for the repair of ships was only $31,000,000.

Mr. HALE. I was including all the various items for this purpose.

Mr. LODGE. The larger amount included engineering and maintenance.

Mr. HALE. I stated in my remarks that the estimate I gave included everything that was used in the Navy in connection with the taking care of the ships.

Mr. LODGE. That is the aggregate estimate for yards and docks and the estimate for engineering, and so forth. This item is only for repairs, and the appropriation for repairs was $31,000,000.

Mr. HALE. The Senator was not in the Chamber, I think, at the time, but I stated in my remarks that the estimate that Mr. BUTLER made in his speech in the other House of $84,000,000 covered all of those things.

Mr. KING. I gladly pay tribute to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] for his splendid service upon the Naval Affairs Committee, and I recognize his superior knowledge, growing out of his long service, as well as his great ability, with respect to matters connected with the Navy. I join with him in the statement that it is important that we should have a strong Navy. It has been the view of our statesmen in the past, and I am sure it will be in the future, that we shall have an efficient Navy, one that will protect the interests of our country. Some persons insist that we shall have the largest and strongest Navy in the world. Whether that view prevails or not, it is important that the future security of this Nation be assured, and it is obvious that under the conditions now prevailing in the world we can not do other than maintain an efficient Navy. I believe in a small standing Army and in a Navy that can defend this country against the assaults of any foe, but, Mr. President, the Senator's observations, as well as the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], would convey the idea to a person not acquainted with the appropriations which have been made that we had been guilty of a "cheeseparing" policy in the last appropriation bill and during the past few years in dealing with the Navy.

I was in error a moment ago when I said that the last naval appropriation bill, passed in July last, carried between four hundred million and five hundred million dollars. I remember now that I made some observations at the time the Senate passed the bill, stating that, in my opinion, the bill ought to carry less than five hundred millions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. It seems to me that in view of the tremendous burdens under which the Government was staggering, growing out of the war, and in view of the fact that we needed some little time to assemble the data which the war produced and learn the naval lessons which it taught, we could with safety to our country reduce the naval bill to approximately five hundred millions for the fiscal year. I find that we actually appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30 of this year $616,096,838.88, and in addition to that we authorized contracts to be entered into aggregating $64,463,000, so that, as a matter of fact, the appropriations made and authorized were nearly $700,000,000. Senators can not say that we were guilty of "cheeseparing" when here was an appropriation of that prodigious sum for one year.

Senators will recall that only a few years back the appropriations for all departments of the Government were not much in excess of $1,000,000,000, and now in peace times we appropriated nearly $700,000,000 for the Navy alone. I do not think, Mr. President, that it can be truthfully said that Congress dealt in a niggardly way in the last appropriation bill with the Navy.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, does the Senator think that appropriations are now to be measured by the same yardstick that was applicable before the time the President kept us out of war?

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, I do not think that the question submitted by the Senator necessarily called for the Senator to put a sting into it.

Mr. KNOX. Oh, no——

Mr. KING. And a thrust at the President of the United States, because he did keep us out of war with Mexico. The Senator could have asked his question without bringing in the President or the policy of the President.

Mr. KNOX. The conditions are essentially different now from what they were at the time to which the Senator refers, when the total expenses of the Government were in the neighborhood of $1,000,000,000.

Mr. KING. Of course they are; I concede that; conditions are different; I concede that the appropriations for the Army and for the Navy and for the various departments of the Government may not be as they were in the halcyon days of the past. We have outgrown any sort of provincialism with which we might be charged and have become a world power; and we have not only become a world power but we will perforce be compelled to be "the" world power, not only materially but morally; we are going to lead the world, and because of our primacy we will be compelled, of course, to maintain a great Navy and perform the duties and obligations that our exalted station demand. We can not, in the language of the scripture, "hide our light under a bushel." This Nation is as "a city set upon a hill," and its light will shine to illumine the world. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] referred to the League of Nations.

I am not going to be led into a discussion of the results which will follow the establishment of a union between the nations of the earth. Let me express the hope that a League of Nations will be established, one that will meet the aspirations of the lovers of peace and those who have faith in the future of humanity, and will remove from the backs of the laboring men of the world the burdens of taxation which will be imposed upon them by maintaining huge navies and great armies. But, Mr. President, I want to call attention briefly to some of the items in the naval bill passed in July, 1919, and I do it not by way of criticism but to repel the idea that the Senate has been niggardly in dealing with the Navy.

Inviting attention very briefly to the law providing appropriations for the current year, I find here an item for activities in the District connected with the Navy amounting to $5,100,000.

Aviation of the Navy, $25,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. That was far too small.

Mr. KING. I pass by hurriedly many of the smaller items.

Bureau of Navigation, $9,000,000.

Gunnery and engineering exercises, and so forth, $350,000.

Outfits on first enlistment, $9,000,000.

Supplies for seamen's quarters and for the purchase of other articles in the several navy yards, $1,500,000.

Ocean and lake surveys, $155,000.

Naval training station, California, $225,000.

Naval training station, Rhode Island, $350,000.

Naval training station, Great Lakes and maintenance of same, $850,000.

Another naval training station at St. Helena and naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., $310,000, including general care, repairs, improvements, and so forth.

Naval Reserve Force, $50,000.

Receiving barracks, $100,000.

Naval War College, Rhode Island, $90,950.

Naval Home, Philadelphia, pay of employees, and so forth, $144,000.

The next item carries a large sum—the Bureau of Ordnance. For that we appropriated $25,000,000. That item cares for naval ammunition depots, torpedo stations, naval ordnance plants, maintenance of proving grounds, powder factories, torpedo stations, gun factories, ammunition depots, naval ordnance plants, maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles to be used at ammunition depots, and so forth. As I stated, there is $25,000,000 for that.

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $2,500,000.

Naval gun factory at Washington D. C.: Improved machinery for existing shops, $500,000.

Torpedoes and appliances: For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, to be available until June 30, 1922, $1,000,000.

Torpedo station at Newport, R. I.: For labor and materials, general care of and repairs to grounds, buildings, and wharves, boats, and so forth, $200,000.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. PHELAN. Do I understand that the Senator is reading the bill which is now embalmed in the law providing for expenditures for the fiscal year? And may I inquire if it is his purpose to criticize the items?

Mr. KING. It is not embalmed. It is a living, vital bill, and $600,000,000 and more are taken out of the Treasury of the United States by reason of this very active and puissant thing which the Senator says is embalmed.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I only desire, for information, to know if the Senator is not reading from the statute—that is, the law which is in existence at the present time? I only desire to know if he is criticizing the items.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ask him; do not ask me. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KING. I had yielded to the Senator from California.

Mr. PHELAN. I notice the discussion in the House under date of January 4, and I have in my hands, by the courtesy of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, a letter, dated February 14, from the Secretary of the Navy. We are debating the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] providing for only $3,000,000. The Secretary says:

I wish to call your attention to the inclosed copies of statements of Admiral Coontz, Chief of Naval Operations; of Admiral Griffin, Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering; and of Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, pointing out the military necessity for a deficiency appropriation of $9,300,000.

I am writing you in the earnest hope that your committee will authorize these appropriations, so that the ships of the Navy, which cost many millions of dollars, may be cared for and that it will not be necessary for the Navy Department to discharge the skilled men who are needed at our navy yards for the repair of these ships.

During the war our navy yards were so busy with other craft that it was impossible to make the changes and repairs that are now absolutely necessary if the ships are to be kept in a military condition.

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

He refers to Admiral Coontz, in charge of operations. The admiral says in his report:

The present unsettled conditions throughout the world demand that the ships of the Navy be kept in efficient condition for action, and the number of ships now capable of operating effectively in case of emergency is dangerously small.

And Admiral Griffin, in order to show the actual peril of the country in case of emergency, says in his report:

Even if appropriation requested—

That is, the $9,000,000—

is granted it will not be possible to complete the repairs now in sight during the fiscal year. Much of the work must extend well into next year, and the vessels be unavailable for that period.

So, on the reports of our highest authorities, men interested only in the maintenance of the Navy as a perfect fighting machine, we are, it appears to me, under compulsion to adopt at least the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts or abandon the Navy and expose ourselves to emergencies. I will leave it to the Senator from Utah to say whether we are exposed to emergencies. The world is in an unsettled condition. We have not adopted any program for disarmament. We have not settled disputes among the nations; in fact, we are engaged in new disputes among the nations, and on the Pacific coast there is a matter of extreme emergency, to which I will call attention later—to-day or to-morrow—on account of the invasion of the western coast by aliens representing a warlike power. I can show, from expressions in their vernacular journals, their own home journals, a warlike spirit and hostility toward the United States. I say that under these conditions we can not, in justice to ourselves and to the country, in justice to the peace of the world and the safety of the Republic, weaken our first line of defense; and the authorities here on whom we must rely say that this appropriation is necessary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to my good friend from California that perhaps the Secretary of the Navy and admirals may differ, and admirals may differ among themselves, as they did with respect to the Sims controversy. I do not know that they all agree with the attitude which is taken by the distinguished Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PHELAN. That is in a field quite outside of the operation and maintenance of the Navy. It introduces a personal element, and these gentlemen are amenable to the weaknesses of human nature, which is the meanest thing about most of us.

Mr. KING. But the Senator must not attempt to put me in the attitude of being opposed to an adequate Navy. I have repeatedly said that I was in favor of an adequate and efficient Navy; that the situation which this country occupies upon the Western Hemisphere and its primacy in the world, demand that it shall have a great Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence. The point I am trying to make, however, is that we did make a very large appropriation, nearly $700,000,000, for one year for the Navy. That year will not expire until June 30 next. Out of that sum, obviously, there ought to have been sufficient to properly care for the ships that we have on hand; and let me say here, before I yield to my good friend, that I think it would be a most admirable thing if the Navy Department would dispose of a number of obsolete vessels of a type below the Utah standard. Senators will recall that Great Britain is disposing of many of the ships that have come through the war; they are obsolescent, out of date, inadequate for the strain which the future will put upon them. If we would get rid of some of our old craft and turn our attention toward the construction of vessels which the experience of the war has demonstrated to be necessary for our defense, I am inclined to think that the policy would be a wise one.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. HALE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Washington allow me to ask the Senator from Utah just one question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. I am compelled to leave the Chamber. That was the only purpose I had in asking the question at this time. I will, however, make the inquiry at some other time.

Mr. HALE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. KING. I now yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. My purpose in rising was to say that we have substantially 960 ships of all kinds now in the Navy, and that it is proposed, when we reduce matters to a peace basis, to get rid of about 500 of those ships, and already an attempt is being made to do that.

Mr. KING. I was aware of that fact, and my only implied criticism was that we ought to act a little more promptly. I have the impression that it would have been economy if we had disposed of some of the smaller vessels, those not needed in the Navy, during the year 1919.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator that it ought to be done as soon as possible.

Mr. KING. But, Mr. President, when the Senator from California spoke about an "embalmed bill" I was proceeding to read from a vital and living law.

We appropriated in this bill $7,500,000 for the maintenance of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and that includes many matters of repair.

For contingent expenses, Bureau of Yards and Docks, we appropriated $150,000.

Then came public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks, hospital construction, and so forth, under which head we appropriated $275,000, $250,000, $540,000, $1,900,000—those items are for the navy yards at the various places, and their improvement—$800,000, $225,000, $1,225,000, $223,000; then follows an entire page of large appropriations relating to the navy yards and their repair, preservation, and improvement.

For the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery we appropriated $7,500,000 and $1,000,000, and for other purposes growing out of or cognate to that matter we appropriated $1,700,000.

There was appropriated for the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, under the heading of "Pay of the Navy," $164,203,000.

Provisions for the Navy, more than $42,000,000.

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $15,500,000.

Freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $3,000,000.

Fuel and transportation, coal, and so forth, in connection with the Navy, $12,000,000.

For the Bureau of Construction and Repair, including the repair of these vessels, we appropriated $31,000,000.

Improvement of construction plants, $200,000.

Bureau of Steam Engineering: For repairs, preservation, and renewal of machinery, auxiliary machinery, and boilers and naval vessels, yard craft, and ships' boats, and so forth, $30,000,000.

I shall not take the time to call attention further to these pages of appropriations. I only challenged attention to them for the purpose of not permitting the impression to be deduced from this discussion that the Navy had not been adequately cared for in the last appropriation bill. It does seem to me that out of the nearly $700,000,000, if there had been proper conservation, there would be an adequate amount to care for these vessels. It would seem from the representations which are made that the funds have been diverted for other purposes and that needed repairs upon these vessels have been neglected. That being true, it is quite likely that we ought to make this appropriation, but it would appear that those who have administered the law and handled this huge appropriation of nearly $700,000,000 were delinquent in failing to properly care for the vessels needing repairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Fernald	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary
Capper	Gay	Jones, Wash.	Moses
Chamberlain	Glass	Kellogg	Nelson
Colt	Gore	Kenyon	New
Culberson	Gronna	Keyes	Norris
Curtis	Hale	King	Nugent
Dial	Harris	Knox	Overman
Dillingham	Harrison	Lodge	Page
Edge	Henderson	McKellar	Phelan
Elkins	Hitchcock	McLean	Phipps

Pomerene	Simmons	Thomas	Warren
Ransdell	Smoot	Townsend	Watson
Robinson	Spencer	Trammell	Williams
Sheppard	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are absent on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not know the bill had been reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate. Will the Senator allow the question to be put on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. KING. Very well.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise for information, and should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. I invite the chairman's attention to the item on page 5, $500,000 to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act of 1913. Was the appropriation which was made in the last appropriation act expended to continue its survey of the valuation of the railroads of the United States?

Mr. WARREN. It was provided, as the Senator knows, many years ago that there should be certain sums expended. A year ago, when this regular amount came to the committee, they cut it down. One or two of the commissioners came before the committee, explaining that there would soon be railroad legislation and that it was important to finish that work. I felt very much like grilling them quite extensively, and did so, as to the importance of the work and whether it was up to date, and whether, when they had surveyed something 10 years ago—some terminal or something of that kind—they were not far afield as to the value. I was assured by Mr. Prouty, who had it in charge, that they were keeping entirely up to date with it; and so we put back a portion of what we had left out. I dare say that is the cause of a deficiency.

Furthermore, as the Senator knows, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], in charge of the railroad bill, has made almost constant and heavy and hard calls on the commission, and has needed this kind of a report on the work of which we are speaking.

Mr. KING. I was familiar, of course, with the bill and with the appropriation which was made when we had the general appropriation bill before us. It seemed to me that the amount carried was more than adequate for the current year, and I am astonished that a deficiency should be asked for at this time.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish me to understand that he thinks the commissioners, at the critical time when this railroad business was coming to a finish, should be unduly crippled in their work?

Mr. KING. Speaking for myself, of course, I think the act of 1913 under which the work is being done is an absurdity. It will be of no particular value. The attempt to value the railroads of the United States under an act passed in 1913, with their fluctuating values and changing conditions, will, in my opinion, prove unavailing. Already, where valuations have been made in certain particulars, they are contested in the courts, and any valuation that may be made by this commission or any other commission will not be a finality. The matter will go to the courts and the courts will have to pass upon the value of the railroads, whether they are taken over by the Government or not.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to assure the Senator, to comfort him in some degree, that I felt very much the same about the early valuation work, and on the committee in the earlier years I have opposed large appropriations, but I became convinced toward the end of it that, we having expended a very large amount of money, if we were to get any benefits whatever, it would come at the end, picking up the back work and bringing it up to date, which I believe they have done. I consider that the amount which has been expended lately has, of course, been of great importance.

Mr. KING. The work will cost at least $22,000,000, and I do not know how much more, and when it is done, I repeat, it will be of but little value, because whenever the value of the railroads is called up into question, whether the Government is seeking to take over the property or otherwise, a judicial tribunal will be resorted to, and even if the findings of this commission are given prima facie value they will not be conclusive and they will have but little weight before a court or jury.

I invite the Senator's attention to page 9, to the item of additional employees for the Coast Guard. I wish to say to the Senator that with respect to this matter members of the Coast Guard came to me some time ago and insisted that the personnel had been so depleted by resignations that the organization was unable to do its work. It would seem to me that having made provision in the general appropriation act for a certain permanent staff and a large part of that staff having resigned, if additional employees were brought into the service they would simply take the places made vacant by resignation. Can the Senator explain why this appropriation for additional employees is called for?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am going to reply to the Senator to the best of my knowledge, but I know he will be good enough to let me suggest to him that I wish he would consult the hearings when these matters are called up. I hold in my hand the evidence taken on the House side as to all these items.

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator that I have examined that volume.

Mr. WARREN. I have also a volume of smaller size, containing evidence that was taken before the Senate committee, which the Senator has not examined.

Mr. KING. I have examined it, but not fully, because it is not humanly possible to become familiar with all the reports and testimony which the various committees submit.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator must have examined it in a very cursory manner, because it has not yet been printed in due form more than 48 hours. Of course, it is more or less tedious to take up these items, but I am very glad to answer the Senator.

As to the matter of the Coast Guard, as the Senator knows, there have been changes in that entire arm, and it has been consolidated with the Revenue-Cutter and Life-Saving Services. It appeared entirely natural on account of some losses that have been sustained that we should give them the help at this time which this item provides. The Senator will notice that it is only from February 1 to June 30 of the current year.

Mr. KING. I shall not move to strike out the item, but I am not at all satisfied with it. I think it is unwarranted. I also believe, Mr. President, that the appropriations found on page 10 of the bill, $1,000,000 for pay and allowances, $245,000 for rations or commutation, $145,000 for fuel and water for vessels, and so on, and $104,000 for outfits, and $130,000 for traveling expenses, are improper in view of the fact that ample provision was made in the former appropriation bill, and further because in the bill which was passed the other day, and which I think was retroactive—I may be in error in that regard—the salaries of the officers of the Coast Guard were increased 31 per cent. If that was not retroactive, then, of course, my last criticism would not be well founded.

Mr. WARREN. The bill for that matter has not yet passed.

Mr. KING. Oh, no; but it probably will pass.

Mr. WARREN. I am informed that the House on the Navy part, which covers the items, absolutely refuses to consider the bill as we sent it to them.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether the item of $1,000,000, lines 1 to 5, on page 10, is compensation in addition to that which was provided by law and which was carried in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator understand that there are over 6,000 men regularly attached to the Coast Guard, and some 16,000 more have to be taken care of? Again, I say that we have to look out for the change that is taking place. The House did not allow by some $600,000 what the department estimated and recommended, and the Senate committee did not raise what the House put up to us.

Mr. KING. It is very difficult to attack——

Mr. WARREN. It is a very expensive department, but as the Senator knows, it has been employed during the last years in the defense of the part of the Nation that had formerly been looked after by the larger craft. It is used now for life-saving and revenue-cutter purposes.

Mr. KING. There is one other item to which I wish to call the Senator's attention. It is on pages 34 to 36—$500,000—under the head of "Lighthouse Service." Is that a deficiency, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; it is.

Mr. KING. Were there any contingencies that arose which led to such a great deficiency?

Mr. WARREN. As I think the Senator knows, there has been more activity in the Lighthouse Service in the last two or three years than formerly, and we have added from time to time different lighthouses.

The matter of deficiencies, which the Senator, I hope, abhors as I do, and which formerly we were able to confine to close quarters, has gone away beyond all bounds during the war, and, of course, it is a laborious and painstaking process to get it back to a proper equilibrium, because a great many of the expenses that really are war expenses occur in getting well and getting over the war and getting things back into normal shape. For instance, we had a case a few moments ago where the Senate, by a large majority, voted for $3,000,000 for the repair of ships in addition to what had already been given.

Mr. KING. There are a large number of items that are found in the bill which I think are wholly unwarranted.

Mr. WARREN. In the Lighthouse Service I notice by the hearing that there are some 6,000 persons employed.

Mr. KING. I am aware of that fact, and am aware of the splendid service rendered by the personnel in that agency of the Government. The only point I am making is that in the last appropriation act, as well as in the former one, very liberal amounts were carried, and it was assumed that with the increased personnel made necessary by conditions the appropriations were ample for the service. The point I am making is that in so many of these executive agencies of the Government, after committees have carefully gone over the estimates furnished by the departments and by the Government agencies, and Congress has made appropriations which it deemed adequate, or at least such as the Government was willing to expend, we are confronted within a short time by deficiencies, and still more deficiencies, and still additional deficiencies, right in the teeth of the statute which forbids the creation of these deficiencies. I admit that in some cases governmental agencies would cease to function if they did not create deficiencies, and perhaps the emergency may be at times so great as to warrant an infraction of the letter of the law if not the spirit of the law; but the persistence with which deficiencies are created, it seems to me, calls for some strong action by Congress and now and then a rejection of the demands which are made for appropriations to meet expenditures which have been incurred by officials of the Government in violation of law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that the appropriations for the current year which were asked and recommended by this department totaled $4,000,000. The appropriations provided amounted to $3,500,000, and there have been, as I have stated, some necessary additional expenditures. In this case they asked for $800,000, and the House cut it to the amount set forth in the bill. The members of the Senate committee carefully considered every item of this bill; they examined the statements made before the House committee, as well as examining witnesses themselves; and the committee can see no reason at the present time for cutting down the amount which the House has provided in the bill. I hope the Senator's remarks along this line and others which he so ably submits will be carefully read by those who are Members of the House as well as listened to by Members of the Senate, for I should like all to be fully imbued with the growing feeling in the Senate that the way to cut down expenses is to cut them down.

I think the Senator from Utah knows that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and his committee are engaged in the very work of cutting, as is evidenced by the pending bill. When we brought the bill to the Senate it contained nearly $3,000,000 less than the amount provided by the other House, which amount had been arrived at after the closest kind of scrutiny, and after the House leader and many other Members managed to get declarations in the press from day to day as to how much they were going to save and what they were going to do, and with the two parties over there vying meanwhile with each other in their proclamations of intended economy and making speeches of all kinds in favor of economy. The House committee decided it had cut to the very bottom in the bill which the House sent over to us.

Since the bill came to us from the House it has been very much in the position of one running the gantlet of the Indians. The man might live to get to the end, but he would be badly disfigured. I repeat, we have made a cut of nearly $3,000,000 in the House bill.

Of course, as chairman of the committee, I am powerless, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the other House is powerless—when the committees have reported bills containing appropriations to the respective Houses—to prevent Representatives and Senators from proposing and the two bodies from adopting amendments.

So in this matter, since the Senator from Utah does not offer any amendment and probably does not intend to offer one and should not, I am glad to have a full expression from him. I hope his views in favor of economy and the cutting of expenses are sympathized with by Senators on the other side of the aisle, as I know they are sympathized with by those on this side of the aisle.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not wish my friend from Wyoming to think that any criticism in which I have indulged is intended as a reflection upon the Appropriations Committee. I think the work that committee has done upon the pending bill entitles it to the commendation of the Senate and of the country. I think the chairman of the committee has performed valuable service and has done what he could to promote economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government. I am sure that he will find upon this side of the aisle a determination to reduce the expenses of the Government and to relieve the taxpayers of the country of the burdens pressing upon them. Indeed, I want to state to the Senator that if the Republican side does not practice greater economy than it is doing, there will be many criticisms from this side of the Chamber, as well as from the country, and earnest efforts to place the affairs of the Government upon a sound and economical basis.

With all of our cutting we have got to do more cutting, and with all of our economy there has got to be more Spartan economy, or else we shall be compelled to increase the taxes or resort to a bond issue. With our decreasing imports and our decreasing exports, and with the slowing down of business which inevitably will result, there will not be the volume of taxes flowing into the Treasury that we have beheld during the past three years. With a lean Treasury and with constant demands made upon it, I am sure we shall have to seek other sources of taxation or resort to bond issues. We must do neither. We ought to reduce the taxes in every way possible, and, of course, we ought to reduce the expenses in every possible way.

Mr. President, before resuming my seat I wish to call attention to the fact that on yesterday during the discussion with respect to the appropriation made with respect to the enforcement of the prohibition law and the laws passed under the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] made certain statements as to the large sum which would be required to enforce the law. My good friend from Wyoming said that he thought it would cost $50,000,000 annually to enforce the prohibition law. I stated that, in my opinion, it would be a scandal and an outrage to appropriate the sums mentioned by the Senator and by my colleague [Mr. SMOOT] for the enforcement of that law; that a system of espionage would be established which would be resented by the American people. I think the statements made by my distinguished friends, however, as to the amount asked by the Treasury Department and the officials of the Government for the enforcement of the law were not quite accurate.

The facts are, Mr. President, that the Treasury Department made an estimate of $4,000,000 for the enforcement of the national prohibition law by the Internal Revenue Bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921. It made an estimate of $750,000 to enforce the act of December 17, 1914, governing the sale of opium, and so forth. That estimate is the same as the amount provided by Congress for the enforcement of that act during the present fiscal year. These estimates total $4,750,000.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill reported to the House February 18, 1920, provides a combined appropriation of $4,500,000 for the enforcement of both acts.

Mr. President, I feel that in justice to the Treasury Department and to the officials of the Internal Revenue Service this statement should be made, so that it may not go to the country unchallenged that there has been so large an amount as that stated yesterday demanded for the enforcement of existing statutes relating to Federal prohibition. I feel sure that the Secretary of the Treasury will exercise a vigilant care over the officials of the Internal Revenue Service, and that the officials in that service will, while administering the law faithfully and well, practice the most rigid economy.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that in connection with the larger figures which I gave I did not say that that amount had been demanded. I gave it as my prognostication of what it would cost. I did not refer, nor did the senior Senator from Utah, to the cost to the United States Treasury of the revenue which we lost, $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 per annum, obtained through the taxation upon liquors.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that I understand the last observation of the Senator from Wyoming, but our discussion did not relate to the loss to the Treasury of internal-revenue taxes derived from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The discussion related only to the cost of enforcing the prohibition laws enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. I gave the high figure, which I hope the Senator from Utah and others, with me, will be able to prevent being reached, as the maximum, but I think it will be larger still when we come to reckon, which we did not mention yesterday, the loss of revenue. However, it may be worth all that it costs, I will say to the Senator, if it thoroughly succeeds in putting an end to the curse of drunkenness caused by the thousands of bars and common saloons with which our country has been burdened. I wish for an absolute cure, and quickly; but I want the Congress and the public to know that it is no child's play in which the Republic is engaged in its effort to stamp out the long-standing alcoholic vice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota in the chair). The question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary be authorized to correct all totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	Lenroot	Sheppard
Ball	Gore	Lodge	Shields
Borah	Gronna	McKellar	Simmons
Brandegee	Hale	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Harris	Moses	Smoot
Colt	Harrison	Myers	Spencer
Culberson	Henderson	New	Sterling
Dial	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Thomas
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Trammell
Elkins	Kellogg	Page	Warren
Fernald	Kenyon	Phelan	Watson
Frelinghuysen	Keyes	Ransdell	Williams
Gay	Knox	Robinson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is present.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business in public executive session for the purpose of considering the German treaty.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD—I will not read it—a very interesting statement from Lord Bryce which appears in the Manchester Guardian. It is in regard to the condition of Europe to-day. Lord Bryce is one of the strongest supporters of the league that I know, but he makes no reference whatever to the league as a solution of the difficulty.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT EUROPE IS TO-DAY—DISAPPOINTMENTS AT THE PEACE CONFERENCE—AMERICA'S SEEMING INDIFFERENCE DUE TO LACK OF KNOWLEDGE AND NOT OF GOOD WILL.

(Lord Bryce in the Manchester Guardian.)

"Few people in Great Britain realize what is the present situation in continental Europe—how unforeseen and how menacing. This is much more the case as regards the people of the United States. Its people, too, are occupied with urgent domestic questions, some of them novel, many of them perplexing and disquieting. They have little time to spare for studying Old World questions. The information, moreover, which their press, alert and ably conducted as it is, supplies to them about what is passing in Europe and the Near East is not sufficiently full and exact to enable them to grasp the present situation in all its intricacies.

"What is that situation?

"During the years from 1914 to 1919 nearly everyone expected that the tempests of war would be followed by a season of fair weather. The exhausted peoples to whom repose at last had come would turn gladly back to the pursuits of peace. The conference of the allied and associated powers would set itself in a high and impartial spirit, sobered by the terrible crises through which we have been passing, to remove the causes which had brought about the catastrophe of 1914, to soften down national animosities, to enable the nations to make a fresh start on better lines of thought and feeling than those which had prevailed before and had brought disaster with them. * * *

"Many allowances must be made for the embarrassments which beset the conference, for the discordance of views, for the atmosphere of revengeful passion in the midst of which they had to work, for the incessant interferences by a press whose wires were liable to be pulled by all kinds of interests, for the complexity of most of the problems presented for solution. There was nothing in history sufficiently resembling the situation of 1918 to warn the conference against some at least of the rocks and shoals through which their course lay.

"But, whatever allowance must be made, it is plain—hardly any well-informed man now doubts it—that the conference has failed to solve the problems presented to it. I write not to criticize, but to set forth the facts as they now stand. The prospect of future peace and a restoration of normal conditions is dark. There are no elements of stability in the settlement. Things are in many respects worse than they were before the war. New causes of strife have in many places been added to those which previously existed; and it is not to the war only, but the action of the conference also, that this is due. The redistributions of territory have in some instances glaringly disregarded the principles of nationality and self-determination. New 'irredentas' are being created. The provisions made for the protection of minorities are of doubtful efficacy and have been reluctantly accepted by some States. The authority of the conference has more than once been openly flouted. The indemnities and reparations to be exacted from the defeated powers go beyond the terms of the armistice and are such as they can not possibly discharge under the conditions imposed. The Allied Powers have overreached themselves and would get more if they had insisted upon less.

"We in Britain are only beginning to realize what all these things mean and how deeply our own welfare is involved. Need we, then, be surprised that the American people have not yet been awakened to the facts of the position?

"How the imminent perils which we see are to be faced is a large question which I do not venture even to approach. That is beyond my present purpose, which is only to repeat that Englishmen must not hastily assume that America is indifferent in this crisis. The people of the United States are only now beginning to be reminded by some of their wisest and most respected men of what has only recently dawned upon ourselves. Let Englishmen who have thought America cold or unsympathetic understand that it is not want of sympathy but want of knowledge that is answerable for their apparent aloofness. Some things familiar to us are unknown to them. They do not, for instance, understand how there comes to be in some quarters a strange recrudescence of tenderness for the unspeakable and irreclaimable Turk. They have not grasped the fact that the 'Irish question' is no longer one between Great Britain and Ireland, but between sections of the Irish people in Ireland itself.

"The new world is still a long way off the old world. The picture of Europe as we see it to-day is veiled from Americans by the mists of the Atlantic. As it took many months in 1914 and 1915 to make the causes of the war plain to those who dwell beyond the Alleghenies, was it to be expected that the condition in which the war has left Europe should be immediately realized so far away? No one who has known America for half a century, or indeed for a far shorter time, will ever doubt American idealism and American sympathy."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is what is known as the amendment to reservation No. 1, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment is printed, of course, and all Senators understand that the purpose of the amendment is to give Congress the right alone to give notice of withdrawal, and the same right is formally conferred upon the President by the amendment. I have already explained it to the Senate at some length, and I have no desire to go into it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I want to say a few words on a subject which, it seems to me, should be made plain at this time.

I had supposed that the Democratic attitude on the treaty and its ratification had been pretty well established and that Senators on this side of the aisle had demonstrated conclusively their attitude. From the very first every effort has been made on this side of the aisle to promote ratification and secure it at the earliest date. Going back over the discussions of the last session, I call attention to the fact that the time of the Senate was consumed chiefly by those opposed to ratification, and the supporters of the treaty consumed something less than 27 per cent of the time, as I remember the actual figures.

Coming down to the date in November when the votes were finally taken upon the resolution of ratification, I call attention to the fact that the Democratic Senators, finding that ratification without reservations had become impossible, yielded that point and offered reservations of an interpretative character, and when those were rejected the position on this side of the aisle was such that we asked for time within which it might be possible to secure a compromise of the differences. When the motion was made to reconsider the vote by which ratification had been rejected we supported the motion to reconsider. When, then, a motion was made to lay upon the table this effort at reconsideration we voted against the motion to lay upon the table, and it was laid upon the table by the votes of Senators on the other side of the aisle against our protest, and when Senators on the other side of the aisle stated that the treaty by that vote was dead and placed in its coffin here in the Senate we declared that it was not dead. It was from this side of the Chamber that action was taken for the purpose of bringing the treaty again before the Senate for consideration. It was on this side of the Chamber that the initiative occurred for creating the bipartisan conference, in order that compromise might be considered with a view to ultimate agreement; and when that bipartisan conference met it was from the Democratic side—always from the Democratic side—that offers of compromise were made, and it was from the other side that rejections always came.

Finally, when the bipartisan conference broke up because of the unyielding disposition on the Republican side, it was from the Democratic side of the Chamber that notice was given that we proposed on the 10th of February to call up the treaty for reconsideration. When that action had been taken by us the forced action was then taken by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who then stated, on February 2, that he would call up the treaty on February 9, and we concurred in his effort. We gave unanimous consent to his action, and the treaty was brought before the Senate again with our full concurrence and support.

Yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding this attitude on the part of the Senators on this side of the aisle, I find published in a Washington paper this week an article which reads in part as follows:

> Some of the Republican friends of the peace treaty with Germany in the Senate to-day expressed the opinion that Senator HITCHCOCK, the administration leader, and probably the President, are bent on forcing the treaty into the campaign.
>
> One of these Senators said the Democrats find themselves on the defensive without an issue in the coming campaign.
> "I can not help feeling," he said, "that the administration leader has reached the conclusion the controversy over the peace treaty will perhaps give the party a fighting chance for victory next November if it becomes an issue."

Mr. President, we are not afraid of the issue in the campaign, but we do not propose to be placed in the attitude of preventing or delaying ratification of this treaty if it can be brought about. The country demands ratification, and it demands that Senators yield to each other in order to effect a compromise and bring about ratification. We are ready. We have gone more than half the way, Mr. President—far more than half the way. Forty Senators upon this side of the Chamber have authorized me to present to the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber alternative propositions of compromise—not a single proposition, but alternative propositions. We have invited you to choose one of those and present it to us, and we have guaranteed to accept it—a compromise on article 10, which is the only serious difference between us at the present time that seems insuperable. We are ready to take either one. One was the reservation framed and formulated in the bipartisan conference, composed of Republican and Democratic Senators, the joint handiwork of Republican and Democratic Senators, almost agreed to. We are willing to take that. In substance and in language it is very similar to the Lodge reservation on article 10. We are willing to take it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DIAL in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What is the difference between the bipartisan reservation and the Lodge reservation? What is the difference in principle?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not insist just now upon diverting me. I am willing to answer the question a little later.

We are willing to take that reservation. We are willing also as an alternative, if that is not acceptable to Senators on the other side, to take the reservation on the same subject proposed by former President Taft, a Republican leader with a great Republican following and a great independent following in the United States to-day.

I ask to have the two proposed reservations to which I have referred printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIPARTISAN CONFERENCE RESERVATION.

"The United States assumes no obligation to employ its military or naval forces or the economic boycott to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any other article of the treaty for any purpose, unless in any particular case the Congress, which under the Constitution has the sole power to declare war, shall by act or joint resolution so provide. Nothing herein shall be deemed to impair the obligation in article 16 concerning the economic boycott.

MR. TAFT'S SUGGESTED RESERVATION.

"The United States declines to assume any legal or binding obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose; but the Congress, which under the Constitution has the sole power in the premises, will consider and decide what moral obligation, if any, under the circumstances of any particular case, when it arises, should move the United States, in the interest of world peace and justice, to take action therein, and will provide accordingly."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, those are the two propositions on article 10 that we present to you. The only criticism that has been uttered upon those propositions from the other side of the aisle since they were presented is that both of them are so close to the Lodge reservation that it is unreasonable for us not to take the Lodge reservation. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], in his speech the other day supporting the present Republican attitude and criticizing the Democratic attitude, made this statement:

> I defy any Senator to point out to me any substantial difference between the so-called Lodge reservation to article 10 and the so-called Taft reservation to article 10. There is no difference whatever in legal effect between these two, which the Democratic Members say they are willing to support; and they say they are willing to support either one of two which they propose and the Lodge reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the only criticism that can be offered to our tender of compromise is that we have made a tender which so closely corresponds to the Lodge reservation that to most Senators there is no difference between them, is it not complete proof that we have done all that we possibly can on this side of the Chamber to bring about ratification?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Nebraska agree with the statement of the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not fully.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator explain wherein they differ?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator, however, that neither of these propositions for compromise which we have submitted is agreeable to me. I do not like either reservation, either the one presented by ex-President Taft or the one formulated in the bipartisan conference. They are both obnoxious to me. I could only accept either under the most severe tension in order to bring about a compromise. Either one involves a great sacrifice to me, and I am sure to other Senators upon this side of the Chamber. But when we have gone so far as to present two alternative propositions which your own Members declare so closely resemble the Lodge reservation that they can hardly be detected from the Lodge reservation, we certainly at least are not open to the charge that we are attempting to bring the treaty into the next campaign as an issue between the parties. On the other hand, we have gone nine-tenths of the way toward meeting the public demand for a compromise and a settlement; and it is on the other side of the aisle that the responsibility exists for refusal to go the one-tenth of the way necessary to bring about a compromise.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator please give us his view of the difference between the two reservations proposed by the Senator and the Lodge reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I observe a great curiosity on the other side of the aisle to get me to analyze these propositions, and I am not disposed to yield to it. Senators on the other side of the aisle need no guardian and no assistance. We here on this side have united, 40 Senators strong, and have presented to you an offer of compromise which you admit is nine-tenths the same as the Lodge reservation.

Mr. LODGE. Nobody has admitted that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from North Dakota admitted it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from North Dakota may, but——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And other Senators who have spoken to me have declared that if we could take those two compromises, we could take the Lodge reservation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand, then, from the Senator from Nebraska that this is the only compromise that the Senator will accept and that he will go no further?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think that question is hardly a considerate one to come from a Senator who does not go at all, and who never offers to compromise in the slightest degree; and I want to say right here——

Mr. BORAH. I want to be fair with the Senator. I am trying, as an onlooker in Vienna as between reservationists, to find out really where the difference is, in order that I may be guided in my conduct in the future with reference to this matter. I do not know what the views of the Senator are with reference to the two reservations as distinguishing them from the Lodge reservation. I do not know whether his view is that there is a chimerical difference or a substantial difference, whether it is a question of principle or a mere question of language. I should really like to know, as a Senator, whether or not the Senator believes that there is a substantial difference, a difference in principle, inhering between the two propositions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I appreciate the Senator's curiosity as to my beliefs, but I think they are like "the flowers that bloom in the spring"; they have nothing to do with the case.

The situation is this: The Senate is in deadlock over the treaty ratification, and it has been in deadlock for months, and there is a widespread public demand to have a settlement, and that demand is for a compromise. Forty Senators on this side of the aisle have declared their willingness to go nine-tenths of the way toward securing a compromise. On the other side of the aisle the attitude is that the very Senators who have criticized the President of the United States and charged that he had brought to the Senate a treaty which he had negotiated and had taken the unreasonable position, as they declared, that he would not consent to the dotting of an "i" not to the crossing of a "t," stand here now, 49 strong, refusing in the all-important case of this reservation on article 10 to dot an "i" or to cross a "t." They defy the public opinion of the United States, which demands a settlement, and they assert that there will not be one iota of change in this all-important reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want the country to understand that on this side of the aisle there is no disposition to make this great subject a football of politics, but that we will go to all lengths, even to the sacrifice of our preferences and the sacrifice of our opinions, toward working out a compromise. When we have offered that compromise, as we have in an alternative form, one of the forms written by the former President of the United States and a great Republican leader to-day, and the other one formulated by the bipartisan conference of Senators, we have done our duty at least, and we have presented to you the question whether you propose to meet the public demand and get the treaty ratified. We are not in a position to be charged with an effort to bring this matter into the political campaign that is now impending. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator from Nebraska take the position that the construction of the proposition which he presents to the Senate is of no importance to the Senate or the country? He has presented a proposition here of which he himself is unwilling to give his construction.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not necessary that I should analyze for Senators on the other side of the aisle these two propositions. They have generally in the past been able to get along without my advice. I will not be diverted from the issue. The issue is whether you on that side of the aisle propose to adhere to your proposition that you will not make any offer of compromise and that you will spurn every offer of compromise that we make, even when we go nine-tenths of the way. If you are willing to do it, all right, we will accept it; but I object to having this side held responsible if the treaty is brought into politics.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the Republican leader, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], has proposed sundry changes in various reservations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that is very true, and I will instance one of them. The first one is now before the Senate. The change will hardly be denominated by anyone a compromise. It is more obnoxious than the original provision. The original provision was that the United States could withdraw from the league by means of a concurrent resolution. That was the original provision, and many Senators voted for it under the delusion that a concurrent resolution might possibly be adopted by Congress and that the President might be entirely ignored in the matter; but when Senators looked up the matter and found that the concurrent resolution would probably have to go through the White House and receive the consideration of the President they changed their course; and now they have brought in an amendment providing that the Congress alone, by a majority vote of each House, or the President, may withdraw from the league. In other words, they have now provided in this amendment so that it will require the constant concurrence of the President and the Congress in order to keep the United States in the league, and if either branch of the Government should decide to go out of the league that action could be taken by that branch, and we might have a quarrel between the two branches of the Government as to whether we would stay in or go out of the league.

Is that a compromise, Mr. President? That is only making matters worse than they were before, and it is nothing in the nature of a compromise.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is that the only compromise which was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was not a compromise at all. I would hardly say it was. I do not care to quibble with the Senator over what was offered. I will say that as an instance of what we get as a result of that effort at a bipartisan conference is to bring in as the very first amendment a much more obnoxious provision than was in it before, and it is a provision which is going to throw the league question into the very next campaign if we now ratify the treaty.

Suppose we ratify the treaty? Suppose we ratify it by some compromise and include this proposed amendment by the Senator from Massachusetts, allowing either the President or the Congress to take us out of the league upon giving two years' notice. Is it the plan to elect a President of the United States who will do that thing, and thus achieve the ratification of the treaty and our withdrawal from the league? Is it the plan to throw the issue into the next presidential campaign as to the personality of the candidate to be elected? It may be or it may not be, I do not know, but it looks at least as though that might be; but certainly it is an obnoxious change even in the already objectionable Lodge reservation, because it provides for a division of the Government of the United States.

The Government of the United States does not consist of the Executive alone nor of the legislative branch alone, and all solemn acts attaining great importance should have the concurrence of the Executive and the legislative branch. Neither the Congress alone nor the President alone should have the power to take the United States out of the League of Nations after this great struggle to enter it. It will be a solemn enough matter to decide whether we shall go out to have it passed upon by the Congress and the President, and not by either one alone.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is it not a fact that under the original reservation that was adopted by the Senate in November the President alone could withdraw the United States from the league?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the Senator is mistaken. Is it not a fact——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not, but that reservation we voted against. That reservation we did not approve. In our opinion it should require a joint resolution to take the United States out of the league, a resolution passed by a majority of each House and approved by the President of the United States. That is the sort of a notice which we think should be given. That is the sort of a notice which unites the Government of the United States and expresses the will of the American people beyond any qualification.

Mr. President, I had not intended this afternoon to say anything more, but I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an Associated Press telegram from Chicago showing that the National League of Women Voters, which has recently held its great convention in Chicago, adopted a resolution demanding the immediate ratification of the treaty, and that they defeated a provision to include the support of reservations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WOMEN FAVOR LEAGUE—PASS RESOLUTION WITHOUT CLAUSE CALLING FOR RESERVATIONS—OPPOSE MILITARY TRAINING—MAUD WOOD PARK, OF BOSTON, ELECTED HEAD OF NEW SUFFRAGE ORGANIZATION—AMERICA WARNED OF ILL-CONSIDERED ATTEMPTS TO MEET PROBLEMS OF RADICALS.

CHICAGO, February 18.

The National League of Women Voters, after adopting a resolution opposing universal compulsory military training, refused at the closing session to-day to reconsider its action. The motion to reconsider was defeated, following spirited argument.

A resolution indorsing the League of Nations was passed after a clause calling for reservations had been stricken out. The resolution reads:

"Resolved, That we urge adhesion of the United States to the League of Nations with the least possible delay."

The next national meeting of the league will be called by the board of directors. The league succeeds the National American Woman Suffrage Association, which dissolved after fighting for woman's right to suffrage since 1869.

CHAMPIONS OF FREE SPEECH.

At to-day's session rights of free speech, free press, and free representation were emphatically supported. The women declared their opposition to any attempts to use violence against the Government, but warned that "ill-considered attempts to meet this difficulty" imperiled the real liberty of American citizens.

Proper provisions for education and for increases in the pay of teachers were urged.

Maud Wood Park, of Boston, heads the league, according to the result of an election by the board of directors of its officers, who are also the officers of the whole organization. Mrs. George Cellhorn, of St. Louis, is vice chairman; Mrs. Richard Edwards, of Peru, Ind., treasurer; and Mrs. Solon Jacobs, Birmingham, Ala., secretary.

The league sent a telegram to the women of Washington State encouraging them in the fight for ratification by that State of the nineteenth constitutional amendment.

FEAR "PRUSSIANIZING EFFECT."

A school for women voters, to continue a week, will open to-morrow.

Opponents of universal military training declared it would have a "Prussianizing effect" on the country, and urged the need of strict economy in governmental expenditures. Dr. Ethel Hurd, of Minneapolis, advocated adequate military preparation.

Mrs. Fletcher Dobyns, of Chicago, who led the fight for military training, said that such a system was necessary to insure the safety of the Nation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I also present for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations a resolution adopted by the Men's Club of St. Pauls and St. James Methodist Episcopal Churches of Niagara Falls, signed by about 100 members, demanding the immediate ratification of the treaty without reservations; also a similar resolution adopted by the Ministers' Association of Albion, Ill., for a similar purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the important thing is the action that the Senate shall take in the immediate future regarding this treaty. Past history perhaps is not very important, but there are some statements made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that should not go unchallenged, particularly the statement he made that throughout the months of debate there was a spirit of compromise on the part of the Democrats but none on the part of the Republicans. The fact is, as the Senator well knows, that he himself, up to the very moment when the vote was taken, prior to the adjournment in November, refused to consider any proposition of compromise. He was repeatedly approached during the early portion of the controversy as to whether he would consider reservations, and he declined to do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not put me in that attitude.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the truth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; it is not an accurate statement. I know what my position was. I, of course, talked with many Senators. I am charged with the responsibility of leadership on this side on this question. I declined to consider the subject of reservations until we got through with the subject of amendments. I said, "We will cross that bridge when we come to it." That is all I told anyone. I used that language repeatedly not only to Senators but to newspaper correspondents.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We saw what was coming. We realized that reservations were inevitable, but we declined to involve them in the fight that we were making to defeat all amendments to the treaty.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true. It merely confirms the statement I made that the Senator's language always was, when he was approached with reference to compromise, that he would cross that bridge when he came to it. But that bridge did not appear to the Senator from Nebraska until the final vote upon the treaty that laid upon the table the motion to reconsider. He was invited to present a proposition after all amendments had been disposed of, before the final vote was had upon the treaty, and he refused to do it.

One step further. The Senator from Nebraska states that this matter has been reopened, and the bipartisan conference was held upon the initiative of the Democrats and not upon the part of the Republicans. I do not charge the Senator from Nebraska with stating that which he knows to be false, for he probably was not aware of the fact that the initiative taken by the bipartisan conference came from the Republican side of the aisle and not from the Democratic side, and it came because while it was well known to the Senator from Nebraska and to the country that the Republican side of the aisle could not consider any change in the substance of the reservation to article 10, nevertheless many, many Democrats came to the Republicans here informally and suggested that the matter be reopened for further consideration; and they knew that the Republicans could not and would not change the substance of the reservation upon article 10. It was upon the suggestion of Republicans that the bipartisan conference was held, although the Senator from Nebraska may not know it.

We might as well be entirely frank about it, Mr. President; the fact is that there are enough Democrats upon the other side of the aisle who, if they will cut loose from the leading strings of the President of the United States, will be in sufficient number to secure the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Until now I had some kind of an idea that I myself was entitled to whatever credit there may be in the suggestion of a bipartisan conference. It may be that it originated upon the other side of the aisle; I can not speak about that; but long before it assembled I myself suggested it to a number of Senators upon the other side of the aisle. It may be that I did not originate it, but I certainly had as much part in the origination as anyone on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin tolerate an interruption?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] introduced a resolution proposing the creation of a committee to be appointed by the President of the Senate, representing both sides of this Chamber, for the purpose of advising a compromise, and that Senators on this side of the aisle supported the proposition and the Senators on the other side of the aisle voted it down. Later on the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] introduced a similar proposition, which was pending here at the time it was supplanted by the bipartisan conference. So all the initiative for a conference and for a compromise occurred upon this side of the aisle.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Nebraska utterly forgets what he just said. What was it the Senator said with reference to the bipartisan conference and the initiative coming from that side? Does he not remember that he made the statement that after the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table he made the statement that this side said that the treaty was dead? That was after the resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. This is something that occurred subsequent to that.

The Senator from Nebraska undertook to have the Senate and the country believe that after the adjournment, and when this session began, the initiative came from the other side of the aisle. Now, I do not want to be personal, and I shall not go into it to any extent, but I am going just far enough to state just how it did come about. The fact is that the Senator from Nebraska throughout this controversy, since he has been willing to negotiate, has never evinced the slightest desire to negotiate upon a line that would secure a two-thirds vote to ratify the treaty, but his whole effort has seemed to be to pick off two or three or four Republicans in order to give that side a majority and put the onus on the Republican side for defeating the treaty in spite of the Democratic side. That has been his object apparently and not the object of securing the ratification of his treaty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Have we not offered to the other side and is there not pending now a proposition of compromise by which we furnish 40 votes and invite you to furnish only 24?

Mr. LENROOT. A proposition the like of which I undertake to say no Senator has ever before seen, a proposition advanced by a Senator where he refuses to tell the Senate and the country what, in his judgment, his proposition means. He has declined two or three times to-day to do so.

The Senator from Nebraska was very busy trying to pick off four or five Republicans in order to make a majority for reservations without the slightest regard to securing a two-thirds vote. That is what the Senator from Nebraska has been busy about. There are some of us who have been busy trying to get a proposition which will secure a two-thirds vote. The Senator from Nebraska has been apparently utterly indifferent to that proposition, but many of his colleagues have not. There are many of his colleagues who sincerely desire to get together upon some proposition that will secure a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he has been busy upon this side of the aisle in trying to get any votes in favor of a compromise?

Mr. LENROOT. I have talked with many Senators.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, the Senator has talked with many, but what effort has anyone on the other side made to get anyone upon this side of the aisle to support the compromise proposed upon the other side? Senators upon this side of the aisle have labored quite assiduously with Senators upon the other side of the aisle to get a two-thirds vote. I have not discovered that any great amount of persuasion from the other side to this side has been indulged in.

Mr. LENROOT. Possibly the Senator from Montana has been so unfortunately classed among those irreconcilables with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that he has not been talked with so frequently as some other Democratic Members who appear to be more reasonable. I myself think that the Senator from Montana does not belong in any such class. I believe that the Senator from Montana does desire a ratification of the treaty, but I have had no evidence that the Senator from Nebraska does. He does desire to secure a majority vote for certain reservations, and apparently he will be entirely satisfied if he secures that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator admit that I have been instrumental in making an offer of compromise?

Mr. LENROOT. I will answer that question when the Senator will give his construction of the compromise that he offers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit another question? Has the Senator from Wisconsin offered any compromise?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is it?

Mr. LENROOT. One that either has been offered or will be offered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has it been offered?

Mr. LENROOT. I will be very frank with the Senator from Nebraska. In so far as the substance of the reservation to article 10 already adopted by the Senate is concerned, there can be no compromise of the substance of that reservation. We may as well understand that very plainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought that was probably it. What about the substance and the meaning of the fourteenth reservation?

Mr. LENROOT. The substance and meaning of the fourteenth reservation as it is now prepared was practically agreed to in the bipartisan conference, including the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Was it as much agreed to as this bipartisan proposition which we are now putting up to the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. More so, because the Senator well remembers—so long as we are going into what occurred in the bipartisan conference—that after we discussed the proposed changes in the fourteenth reservation for one entire afternoon, it was suggested and agreed that it seemed very clear that we would come to an understanding upon that, and we might pass to something else, and we did. No such agreement was ever made with reference to the reservation to article 10.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the Senator does not state that we came to an agreement. He says now that we might come to some agreement upon it. I want to say to the Senator that his obduracy as to the fourteenth reservation is almost worse even than his obduracy as to the reservation to article 10.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Nebraska never offered a change in reservation 14 in conference except the one that was finally agreed to—except the original proposition that he had offered many times.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, no; the Senator from Nebraska offered at least three propositions in connection with the reservation referred to and all were rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. To reservation 14?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To reservation 14. None of my propositions to amend reservation 14 were accepted.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no recollection of that; but the Senator knows that we had practically come to an agreement as to the fourteenth reservation, and it was passed over with the understanding that there would be no difficulty as to that reservation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I deny that we came to any more of an understanding as to reservation 14 than we did as to the reservation to article 10.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that six out of the eight members of the committee had practically come to an agreement on the reservation to article 10? Does the Senator say that he, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and myself did not urge the modification of the reservation to article 10 which had been submitted here by Senators on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. LENROOT. I do not.

Mr. NEW rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to finish. The Senator from Tennessee will remember that in the very midst of the discussion upon the reservation to article 10 I suggested that the Republican members of the conference should retire to another room and discuss the matter, which they did.

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite the contrary, Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. And while they were in that discussion, we were informed by our Democratic colleagues that we might as well adjourn until the next day, which we did.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was quite the contrary. My recollection about that is very distinct. As I recall, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], with the acquiescence, at least, of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], thought that the modification ought to be agreed to; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, suggested a conference; and that thereafter the matter fell through.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator's recollection is not accurate.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. NEW. I simply wish to say, in answer to what the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has stated, that his recollection, at least as to the attitude of the Senator from Indiana, is wholly wrong. The Senator from Indiana never acquiesced in anything of the kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then the Senator from Indiana misled me in what he said and did on that occasion.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask if there was a stenographic report of the meeting?

Mr. LENROOT. There was not. Of course, it is fair to state of both sides that everything which was done was tentative, and it was so understood.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that it was all tentative; but there is not any doubt in the world that the only two who did not agree in substance on that occasion to that which had been reported as having been agreed upon by the majority of the conference, as I understand, were the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, to complete the history as to the initiative, inasmuch as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has made the statement that he did, this is exactly what occurred with reference to the bipartisan conference: There were negotiations going on informally between different Senators—Republican Senators and Democratic Senators—and finally matters reached a state where a Republican Senator suggested that certain Democrats see the Republican leader, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and ascertain if an agreement could not be made for an informal bipartisan conference. The Democrats acquiesced in that suggestion; they did see the Senator from Massachusetts; and as the result of that the bipartisan conference was held. That is the history of that conference. Perhaps the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] were not aware of the facts as they existed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has just stated with emphasis that there can be no change in the substance of the reservation to article 10. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is correct; that, in fact, if there is any change in substance the treaty can not be ratified. I presume that is precisely what the Senator meant. My information upon the matter with reference to this side of the Chamber is that there will be no yielding upon the substance of that reservation; but the Senator from Wisconsin knows that and understands that situation better than I do.

If there is to be no yielding upon the question of substance, then if we continue this debate any longer or continue the consideration of the treaty here before the Senate any longer, we shall be continuing it on a question of language, a question merely of verbiage. The Senator from Nebraska, as I understand, is equally positive that there can be no yielding to the Lodge resolution as it now is; that if the Lodge reservation stands as it is now written, so far as substance and principle are concerned, the opponents of the reservation will vote for the defeat of the treaty in case the reservation is attached.

I am gathering this information as best I may from the debate, because I am not familiar with what happened in the bipartisan conference and have not seen the procès verbal of that conference. However, if that is the situation, then to continue this treaty here any longer is simply to kill time and deprive the Congress of the opportunity of transacting business which ought to be transacted.

So far as I am individually concerned, I need not restate my position, but I am concerned in some matters of legislation here which are of great importance to the country. Unfortunately, I presume, we on this side of the Chamber will be held responsible for those measures if they are not passed. I think, therefore, it is well for those who are leaders on the opposite side of the Chamber to consider whether or not they are willing to continue the discussion of the treaty upon the mere question of a change of language.

There must be something in the Lodge reservation, as a matter of principle, to which the Senator from Nebraska seriously objects. I do not believe the Senator from Nebraska would hold up the treaty upon a mere question of language. Either there is something in the reservation to which he objects as a matter of principle or else this controversy will resolve itself into a question of which party can get the greatest advantage here in the Senate Chamber for the campaign. You are either fighting over a principle which neither can yield or you are sparring for political advantage.

I do not think, Mr. President, there is any possible way to keep the treaty out of the campaign, whether we ratify it or not. The Republicans in New York met in convention on yesterday, and the action of the Republicans of New York, by reason of the power and leadership of the State, is generally quite indicative of what will probably be the action of the party. It is at least an indication of what we may expect in the campaign. Instead of keeping the treaty out of politics, instead of keeping it out of the campaign, the Republican leaders in New York put it in the very midst of the political controversy. It is now so far in the campaign that it can never be kept out of the campaign. While we talk of keeping it out of the campaign it intrudes itself into the campaign and takes a foremost and dominant position. Under the declarations made by the Republican leaders of New York, even if we should ratify the treaty to-morrow it would be the one issue, the dominating and controlling issue of the campaign of 1920. I will demonstrate that to Senators by a single paragraph and by the resolution which, as I am informed to-day, followed this paragraph.

The Republican leader of New York said:

> I hope the treaty will be ratified with the reservations long before the presidential election. That will be done if the President permits it. If that is not done, then that is what I think the Republican Party ought to stand for.

That is, the treaty with reservations; but Mr. Root continued:

> Immediately after the 4th of March, 1921, a Republican President should urge upon the society of nations the reform of the league covenant, so as to make it establish the rule of public right rather than the rule of mere expediency, so as to make the peace of the world rest primarily upon law and upon the effectiveness and enforcement of the law.

If this treaty should be ratified with the Lodge reservations either as they are written or as they may be modified in the matter of language, nevertheless, as has been stated now by the Republican leader of the greatest State in the Union, so far as political power is concerned, the first hour of the first day of the first year of the Republican administration should be made sacred by initiating a new conference for the purpose of rewriting the league covenant. The treaty would be in the very midst of the campaign, would it not? It would be the one issue in the campaign, and not only would it be in the campaign but it would call into activity every foreign element in the United States, fighting not upon an American issue but upon what they conceive their rights should be under a League of Nations with reference to their friends in the Old World. However we may view it, therefore, we must face the situation as it is.

A year ago to-morrow the debate began in this Chamber on the League of Nations and the treaty. We are no nearer a settlement to-day than we were a year ago to-morrow. We have perhaps even more feeling and more antipathy toward the programs than we had at that time, because they were not then so thoroughly developed. We are within three months of the nomination of a President of the United States, and you can not any more keep the treaty out of the campaign of 1920 than you could stop midway over Niagara Falls after you had started. So, Mr. President, if we hold this treaty here for another week or another month, and debate it on the question of party advantage or mere verbiage, we are throttling legislation which ought to be passed and taking that responsibility upon ourselves before the country.

Not only does the Senator from Nebraska say that there can be no acceptance of the Lodge reservation as it now is, as I understand his argument, but it is inconceivable that the President of the United States could accept the Lodge reservation after his statement and after all he has said in regard to this matter. If the Lodge reservation is put on in substance and in principle, although we may change the language—the President has said it cuts the heart out of the covenant, that it destroys his handiwork, that it is utterly worthless for the purpose of building the peace of the world—can or will he accept it? Will Woodrow Wilson be the man to take a league that according to his own ofttimes repeated statement would be worthless, a fraud, a deception, a cowardly surrender?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has not the Senator from Idaho seen repeated statements in the press by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that there must be substantial concessions upon the reservation to article 10 before he would agree to that reservation?

Mr. BORAH. I understand that is the position of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He has been repeatedly quoted to that effect in the press. I do not know whether or not it represents his view.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that that is the only legitimate inference which we can draw from the Senator's discussion here to-day. He says he has traveled nine-tenths of the way, but that the other tenth is the part which does the business; the other tenth is what effectuates the change in substance and principle. If the Senator from Nebraska did not regard that one-tenth as about as sacred a thing as is connected with this debate, he would yield it. In what position will the Senator from Nebraska and his party be in the campaign if he goes before the country saying, "I went nine-tenths of the way, but the other tenth did not amount to anything; the reason I did not yield the other tenth was simply a question of pride of authorship," or something of that kind. He will not undertake to occupy any such position as that. When we get into the campaign that one-tenth will swell into such proportions that it will far excel the nine-tenths, because under that one-tenth will be covered up the question of the life or death of the league in the view of the Democratic Party. What is this one-tenth? What does it cover? Will not the able Senator from Nebraska tell us? Is the one-tenth the principle, or is the one-tenth the pride?

The Senator from Nebraska has not been the leader of the other side of the Chamber for a number of months without Senators on both sides of the Chamber understanding his adroit leadership. If the Senator from Nebraska will rise in his place now and state to his colleagues and to the country that there is no difference between the Taft reservation and the Lodge reservation except a question of verbiage, he ends his fight upon this proposition. If he rises in his place and says there is a difference in principle, then he makes it impossible to ratify the treaty, under the declaration of the Senator from Wisconsin. What is the use of keeping it here before the Senate? We can afford to be frank; take a lesson from the irreconcilables and state exactly your position. [Laughter.] If the one-tenth does not mean anything, let us know it; if it does mean anything, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, let us have it; we can fight it out then. Let us know what this debate is about. We will confine our discussion to the one-tenth, if Senators opposing the reservation will tell us what the distinction is; if they do not tell us what the distinction is and do not tell the people what the distinction is, it is altogether probable that we will not be able to agree at all.

I opine, Mr. President, that there is considerable bluffing, not upon the part of any particular Senator, but upon the part of all, about not fearing to go into the campaign. The Senator from Nebraska says, "We are not afraid to go into the campaign with that issue; we are not afraid of the popular disapproval of our position." It is a new thing in American politics to see such heroic striving to keep away from the issue which is going to make you sure for another four years. I venture to assert that if you go into the campaign with this issue, when it comes out of the campaign it will be stripped of reservations either mild or drastic.

I have had the honor since this campaign opened of speaking to 42 mass meetings upon the question of reservations and upon the fundamental principles which are involved in the league covenants. The audiences go to sleep upon the question of reservations. They say, as an old farmer over in Iowa said to me, "The question of reservations is a question of dispute between international lawyers. We do not know whether this 'unless' means the same thing as 'until,' or vice versa; but we do know that we do not want to be entangled and enmeshed in the affairs of Europe, and we do not want to be embroiled in her concerns, with which we have no interest."

If you get into the campaign, that is the question upon which you will fight out the campaign. When you stand before a popular audience, you will not stop to discuss the question between one word and other. There will come up from the people who are sitting before you, "What we want to know is whether or not you are in favor of mixing us in European affairs at all? We do not care whether you go in face foremost or back in, but are you going in?"

Let me give you an illustration. There has not yet been a candidate for the Presidency of the United States who has declared himself upon this question who has not declared, openly and without equivocation, that he is opposed to any league which in any way modifies the traditional foreign policy of the United States. Gen. Wood says, "I am in favor of the league, but I am opposed to modifying in any way or trammeling or embarrassing in the least the attitude of the United States in her relationship with foreign powers."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment.

Now, tell me, my friends, why it is that those who are getting ready to ask for the suffrages of the people of the United States are careful to advise them, in language which can not be misunderstood, that "I am opposed to modifying in any way the doctrines of Washington or the doctrines of James Monroe"? They have already felt the ground swell coming up from the popular voters that those two principles they will not sacrifice. When Mr. Hoover declares his position for a league—the candidate of the New York World for the nomination upon the other side—he declares the same thing: "I am for a league, but one which will protect absolutely the traditional foreign policy of the United States."

When Mr. Lowden declares his position he says:

> I am for a league, but I am opposed to the United States hampering herself in any way in her dealings with foreign powers.

In the name of common honesty how can you write a league without sacrificing the traditional policy of the United States? When they get into the campaign they will say to the people: "That is our position." Very well. If you can not have a league without doing that, then I am opposed to it, and before the campaign has proceeded 30 days your league will have disappeared like the mists before the sun.

I addressed a letter to Mr. Cox, of Ohio, and asked him point-blank: "Are you in favor of ratifying this treaty as it came from Versailles?" He has been about 20 days reflecting upon that question. He has not replied. I am waiting with considerable concern and deep anxiety to know how he is going to answer that question. It was put in a little different language, because I gathered knowledge as I went along by reading the statements of Mr. Lowden and Gen. Wood, so I put the question directly. You upon the other side of the Chamber will not nominate a candidate for President who will declare before the people of the United States that he is for this league without reservations.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it would be useless to nominate him.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly—perfectly useless. Therefore, let us get down to the real meat of this proposition. If you gentlemen, representing your convictions, do not propose to yield, let us take it into the campaign. There the people will settle it. If the Senators upon this side have gone as far as they propose to go, if they believe that to go further would sacrifice the independence and the sovereignty of the United States, then there is only one tribunal which can ever settle this question, and that is the electorate—the only tribunal which should settle it, the only tribunal which in the last analysis should settle it.

But they say: "That makes it a football of politics." How do you settle questions in America except in elections? We do not have plebiscites. We have no method of settling questions by discharging the ministry and going to the country. We have no means to settle these questions except through the expression of those whom the people choose as their representatives. It is the only way known to the American Republic. It was the system which the fathers built—a representative Republic, assuming that when a man was elected he would carry out the pledges made to the people. Are not the people themselves as capable of determining whether or not they want to be embroiled in the affairs of Europe as they are of determining a tariff question? Has the Monroe doctrine ever been considered a foreign question? Is it not a domestic question? Have not the Republican Party and the Democratic Party so declared time and time again? If you will look at the platforms of the Republican Party since 1850, you will find no less than three times, when three of the greatest Republican leaders in the history of our party were running, they not only declared for the preservation of the Monroe doctrine but they declared for the maintenance of Washington's policy and against all entangling alliances with foreign powers. No one has ever heretofore considered it as unfit for party politics for the American people to have the right to say whether or not they should be embroiled in European concerns. As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] says, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was an issue time after time.

But there is another phase to this proposition which we may as well face, and that is this: Who makes the issues in the campaign? Suppose that both sides of the Chamber here should resolve that this should not be an issue in the next campaign. Suppose we should ratify the treaty and then agree among ourselves and either by resolution or public statement declare that it is now taken out of party politics and should not be an issue in the campaign. Who controls the issues in the campaign? Why, that audience sitting down there in front of the speaker control the issues in the campaign. They will determine what issues they will pass upon, and the speaker will have to conform to their views—either for them or against them.

Imagine a Republican candidate for President writing a letter of acceptance and keeping silent upon this question of the treaty! He would be driven from the stump in 10 days as a shameless moral coward, and if there is anything in the world that the American people will not forgive it is moral cowardice.

Suppose a Democratic candidate should accept, and should keep silent upon this treaty, what would become of the followers of Woodrow Wilson in that fight? If you want to know, ponder a minute upon the situation of Mr. Lansing at the present time. He would be retired into innocuous desuetude if it was within his power by votes to do it.

The issue is now made. It has gone to the country. You can not mislead nor misrepresent it to the people. We may hold it here for a week or a month or two months, and discuss questions of verbiage; but the great proposition is now before the American people, and there it will remain until under the genius of the American Republic the great tribunal which determines its destiny passes upon it. Upon the ides of next November the death knell of the treaty will be read in the result or else we will go into the league with the backing and the public opinion of 110,000,000 people.

What is it worth if we do not do it? As I had the honor to say to a distinguished Englishman a few weeks ago, "What is your treaty worth until the American people pass upon it?" These gentlemen should study the genius of American institutions. This treaty is a piece of white paper until the American people get behind it. Without their moral support it is utterly worthless. How many of these gentlemen who are now asking for ratification would not retreat if the great mass of the American people were to denounce it?

We conform here sooner or later to the only king that we know, and that is the king of public opinion. If we want to get into this league and stay there, if we want to make it permanent, if we believe in it and believe that it should be permanent, then we want the judgment of the American people as a people behind it.

I hold no brief for the President of the United States; neither do I hold any brief against him personally, although I am against his proposition. Notwithstanding that fact, one must have a very deep admiration for the man in the White House, who, notwithstanding the adverse circumstances under which he fights, has notified the world that this treaty and league must stand as they are written, and has refused so far to yield a single inch upon that proposition. It does not prove that the President is right, but it proves that he has faith in his proposition. It proves that he has the invincible faith of Peter the Hermit, who would have reformed the world in another way. It proves that he is unwilling to shirk going before the American people with this matter. And if the President of the United States, after having declared his position in the unmistakable way that he has—that this, and this alone, will satisfy the demands of the world and compose the world's strife—yields upon questions of principle and substance, his place in history will descend to that of sheer expediency instead of statecraft. It is all right for these trimmers and compromisers who write in here to talk about yielding, but the President can not yield with honor that which he has declared would destroy his league. It is equally true that men who have said that certain reservations are the least that will protect the rights of our people can not yield without betraying their country. As for the irreconcilables, their position is known to all—they will never yield. Why take further time therefore? Let it go to the people; let those decide it upon whose shoulders its stupendous obligations must rest.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, during the course of the discussion in which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] recently participated, a question was raised as to the accuracy of a statement made by Baron Goto, of Japan, and published in the Washington Post of April 20, 1919. The statement made was as follows:

> In an astonishingly frank interview Baron Goto declared that Japan considered herself the spokesman of all oriental peoples, and, having already obtained the support of President Wilson, would not give up her fight for racial equality.
> "Both President Wilson and Col. House voted with Japan for racial equality at the peace conference," Goto said.

In the interest of the truth of history, I stated at that time that I was in possession of information which seemed to deny the accuracy of Baron Goto's statement—if, indeed, it had ever been made—and since then I have confirmed my view, and I promised at that time to lay it before the Senate.

The Japanese representatives at the peace conference, led by Baron Makino, as the Senators will recall, in March, 1919, asked that a resolution be passed, first by the conference and then by the council, granting racial equality as a principle between nations—a proposition which, upon its face, seemed to commend itself to idealists and philosophers; but when subjected to the test of practical application and experience, the serious character and purpose of the resolution at once became manifest. Therefore, at that time I took it upon myself to address the American delegation in Paris, at the same time informing the western Representatives in Congress of the fact and inviting them to participate in the protest. The first telegram I sent to the American representatives read as follows:

"MARCH 20, 1919.

"Japanese demand for free immigration and other privileges has aroused Pacific coast. Evidence of Japanese coming over border and contemplated land purchase by Japanese company in Mexico near California State line and enormously increased Japanese agricultural aggression have alarmed the people. These problems are domestic, and league constitution should under no circumstances concede Japanese demand. Japan now excludes Chinese coolies and has recently deported 500 such persons from Japan."

The second telegram, dated March 23, was addressed to Lansing, Secretary of State, as follows:

"Any declaration in constitution on 'race equality or just treatment' may be construed to give jurisdiction to league over immigration, naturalization, elective franchise, land ownership, and intermarriage, and should be avoided. An affirmative declaration that these are domestic questions should be made in consonance with established American policy. Believe western Senators and others will oppose any loophole by which oriental people will possess such equality with white race in United States. It is vital question of self-preservation."

At the White House conference President Wilson declined to answer the direct question as to how the American representatives had voted, the council having decided to keep confidential its proceedings.

Acknowledgment, however, was made to me by Mr. Lansing, without indicating what action had been taken by our representatives, but it was given in the press that, while the Japanese resolution received a majority of votes, it was lost for failure to receive unanimous approval. Who, then, refused unanimous consent? The facts were brought out by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in quoting extensively from the book of Dr. Dillon. Dr. Dillon tells us of the circumstances surrounding the action of the conference when this matter was brought up. These are his words:

"Then came the burning question of the equality of nations. The Polish delegate arose and opposed on the formal ground that nothing ought to be inserted in the preamble which was not dealt with also in the body of the covenant, as otherwise it would be no more than an isolated theory devoid of organic connection with the whole. The Japanese delegates delivered speeches of cogent argument and impressive debating power. Baron Makino made out a very strong case for the equality of nations. Viscount Chinda followed in a trenchant discourse, which was highly appreciated by his hearers, nearly all of whom recognized the justice of the Japanese claim. The Japanese delegates refused to be dazzled by the circumstance that Japan was to be represented on the executive council as one of the five great powers, and that the rejection of the proposed amendment could not therefore be construed as a diminution of her prestige. This consideration, they retorted, was wholly irrelevant to the question whether or not the nations were to be recognized as equal. They ended by refusing to withdraw their modified amendment and calling for a vote. The result was a majority for the amendment. Mr. Wilson thereupon announced that a majority was insufficient to justify its adoption, and that nothing less than absolute unanimity could be regarded as adequate. At this a delegate objected: 'Mr. Wilson, you have just accepted a majority for your own motion respecting Geneva; on what grounds, may I ask, do you refuse to abide by a majority vote on the amendment of the Japanese delegation?' 'The two cases are different,' was the reply. 'On the subject of the seat of the league unanimity is unattainable.' This closed the official discussion."

So there is no doubt about the action of the conference, but there was a doubt raised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] as to the vote of the President. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] drew the inference from the statement of Dr. Dillon that the President voted with the minority; in other words, that his vote, as I am led to believe, with the vote of Lloyd-George, prevented that unanimity which was necessary to carry the resolution.

But how did the President vote? The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has called our attention to an article by Mr. Patrick Gallagher, who is a well-known authority on Far Eastern affairs. After his return from a prolonged residence in the Philippines and China he became associated with the Far Eastern Review, of New York City. He attended the peace conference to report on the eastern angle of the discussion, and since his return has affiliated himself with the Far Eastern Syndicate, with headquarters in Washington. In an elaborate article in the issue of the magazine Asia, of September, 1919, Mr. Gallagher bears this testimony:

"Every nation represented at the meeting, with the exception of the United States and Great Britain, supported Makino's amendment through their spokesmen on the commission for the League of Nations."

The Makino amendment was that providing for the acceptance of the principles of the "equality" of nations and the "just treatment" of their nationals. The previous demand for bare racial equality which had been made, was, he states, trimmed down to read, "acceptance of the principle of the equality of nations and just treatment of their nationals." He goes on to say:

"I notice frequent assertions in the newspapers that Makino's amendment was 'defeated by a narrow majority.' That is utterly incorrect. It was carried by a sweeping majority, including China. Dr. Koo, very properly, made one of the best speeches supporting the Japanese baron. Racial and national equality suffered defeat at the hands of Woodrow Wilson, at the behest of Lord Robert Cecil. After everybody had spoken, Baron Makino asked the President if his amendment was adopted.

"The President said, 'No. That requires unanimity.'

"In plain words, Baron Makino and the Japanese were tricked out of their just rights and a sweeping victory in the commission on the league of nations. The Japanese were seriously annoyed. The younger Japanese newspaper men, who were present in Paris in strong force, were openly angry."

Of course, if the President stated, as generally understood, that unanimity was necessary, that doubtless was the rule of the council in matters of importance.

The writer of the article is apparently pro-Japanese and is putting the Japanese case. He seems to speak with authority, and, of course, his statement bears out my contention that the President voted with the minority and hence defeated that unanimity which was necessary to carry the amendment.

I have also the testimony of a distinguished correspondent, Ray Stannard Baker, who has written a series of articles on the business of the conference. He says, briefly:

"The Japanese felt strongly regarding the defeat in their effort to obtain the racial recognition clause in the covenant, and at once in some of their extreme newspapers there began a sharp attack on President Wilson as the cause of their discomfiture. The Osaki Mainichi Deupas, for example, referred to the President's 'dangerous justice,' and charged him with being a 'female demon,' a term vividly denunciatory to the oriental mind. Whatever happened at the conference, the President had to take the lion's share of the blame for it."

Again, I find in the Living Age of November 22, 1919, taken from the Chus Koron of October 6, 1919, an article by Ryutaro Nagai, the following:

"The Anglo-American spirit in question was clearly seen at work during the early progress of the peace conference, as when the British and United States delegations united in supporting the Chinese claims against the Japanese. It was, indeed, only when Premier Orlando went home in resentment at President Wilson's opposition to the Italian acquisition of Fiume, an event which gave occasion to all the anti-American element to ventilate itself, that through the mediative efforts of Mr. Balfour the Anglo-American combine at the conference was persuaded to allow Japan's contention. All this while Premier Lloyd-George caused the newspapers under his control to attack Japan for what they represented to be her aggressive policy in the Far East.

"Again, it was England and America who were most solid in their opposition to Japan's racial-equality proposition, so much so that the combine winked at the unfair ruling of President Wilson, who declared it lost, although it was supported by 12 votes against 6."

Because the council enjoined secrecy, as before noted, the President, in answer to Senator JOHNSON's direct question, said he was not, at the time of the White House conference, free to give the information. But since then the news has been circulated by correspondents and publicists. The most convincing statement was given to me, for my information as a Senator, by one in a position to know. I will respect the confidence by withholding the name of the writer, but in view of the circumstances I do not see why the Senate should not possess this authentic statement, which is as follows:

"I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of November 21, 1919, in which you ask to be advised as to the action of the American commissioners at the Paris conference with respect to the Japanese demand for 'racial equality.'

"In reply, I hasten to assure you that the Japanese demand for a 'racial equality' clause in the covenant of the League of Nations was never brought up for discussion or vote at any plenary session of the peace conference, although it did form the text of a statement (inclosed herewith) made by Baron Makino at the plenary session of April 28, 1919. It was, however, introduced in a meeting of the League of Nations commission on February 13, 1919. On that day President Wilson was not in attendance at the meeting, and at the request of the representatives of several powers, other than the United States, the clause was withdrawn by the Japanese delegate without a formal vote being taken upon it. At a subsequent meeting of this commission on April 11, 1919, the Japanese delegate proposed a general statement as to 'national equality' to be embodied in the preamble of the covenant, which was rejected after the taking of a formal vote. This vote showed that certain powers were in favor of the proposed amendment to the preamble, but no count was taken of the negative votes. The United States did not vote for the amendment, and President Wilson, who was presiding at the meeting, ruled that inasmuch as the amendment had not received unanimous support it had been rejected. This was the last attempt made by the Japanese representatives in Paris to obtain formal recognition of either 'racial' or 'national equality.'"

So there can be no manner of doubt that, notwithstanding the statement attributed to Baron Goto published in our RECORD last September, and, according to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], uncontradicted, that it is clearly a fact that the American representative in the person of the President, possibly in connection with Lloyd-George, defeated the Japanese proposal for racial equality.

My informant inclosed a statement by Baron Makino at the plenary session of the peace conference, April 28, 1919, after he had been defeated.

Baron Makino explains the grounds for the amendment proposed by the Japanese delegation to the commission with a view to secure recognition in the covenant for the equality of all nations and of their subjects. He said:

"I had first on the 13th of February an opportunity of submitting to the commission of the League of Nations our amendment to the covenant, embodying the principle of equal and just treatment to be accorded to all aliens who happen to be the nationals of the States which are deemed advanced enough and fully qualified to become members of the league, making no distinction on account of race or nationality."

Then he discussed the principle, and he continues, referring to the vote:

"On the next day"—that is, on the 14th day of February—"when the draft of the covenant was reported at a plenary session of the conference without the insertion of our amendment, I had the privilege of expressing our whole-hearted sympathy and readiness to contribute our utmost to any and every attempt to found and secure an enduring peace of the world. At the same time I made a reservation that we would again submit our proposal for consideration."

In closing, he said:

"I feel it my duty to declare clearly on this occasion that the Japanese Government and people feel poignant regret at the failure of the commission to approve of their just demand for laying down a principle aiming at the adjustment of this long-standing grievance, a demand that is based upon a deep-rooted national conviction. They will continue in their insistence for the adoption of this principle by the league in future."

Here Baron Makino serves notice that he shall not abide by the decision, and, therefore, we must be prepared, in case the proposed covenant of the league is adopted, to meet that demand from time to time, unless we expressly and specifically take jurisdiction of such subjects from the league.

I voted for reservation No. 4, proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr LODGE], in order that Baron Makino might not find the league a tribunal to which he could appeal. The Lodge reservation reads as follows:

"The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the League of Nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power."

Of course, we have always contended, irrespective of the reservation, that questions of immigration and the like were domestic in their character and wholly and exclusively within the jurisdiction of a sovereign country, but it did no harm to emphasize it or to interpret, if you please, the meaning of the language of the covenant, so far as we were concerned, and while the power was in our hands to determine finally the question of jurisdiction.

We can not submit to any foreign tribunal the domestic question of who shall come into our country and enjoy its privileges.

In a country which deals generously with matters of a political character, involving equality and liberty, it may almost seem harsh to those not familiar with the facts to deny equality to any nation or to any race or people. I said that Lloyd-George had joined with President Wilson according to the evidence, and he joined because the Australian Commonwealth and New Zealand and Canada and South Africa, and all the great tributary colonies of the British Empire, were of one mind on the question of denying equality to the Japanese on account of what it implied. In practice "equality" meant for the white race the abandonment of its standards and tended to destroy the very ideals which had been concretely established. By the submergence of the white race their standards and ideals would go with them. There would remain only Japanese domination. We receive their diplomats, their travelers, their students, in our homes and in our schools on terms of equality, and all their nationals already in the country of every class enjoy the equal protection of the laws and have equal access to the courts. What is the equality they seek?

It is not a question of personal equality as between man and man that is involved at all in this discussion. It is that legal equality under which the Japanese would claim the right freely to come into the United States, or into Australia, if you please, just as do the nationals of any other country; it is that equality under which they would claim the right of naturalization, just as the nationals of other countries, of citizenship, of the elective franchise, of intermarriage, and of the holding of land.

By actual experience we find that we can not admit that equality involving all these things, because these aliens are capable of displacing the people who are now upon the soil, the white men and women who have pioneered the land, developed it, in mine and field, reared their institutions, political and social, and who, when the time comes, contribute their sons to fight the battles of their country. The aliens who wish to come in on a parity with native Americans have all the industry, but have not the assimilable quality by which they will blend and make a homogeneous race. Physically they are incapable of that assimilation; and the laws of several States deny them the privilege of intermarriage with the whites, based upon physiological laws which are well understood in this Chamber. The issue of such marriages—Eurasians or mestizos, they are called in Asia—have brought out, we know from experience, the evils which inhere in both races; and such a mongrel or hybrid race supplanting the Caucasian in California would be the death of the political and social life of the country. Where it is desirable, intermarriage is the only source of racial equality.

These aliens have no conception of our form of government, but still adhere with loyalty to their system of government and are governed by their consuls. They respond to the call of their consuls; and it is said that, in a military sense, their presence in large numbers, they being mostly military reservists, is a positive peril in case there should be any conflict between the countries.

Naturally the Japanese are gregarious and form a solid block. Ever since Chinese exclusion in 1884 they have been coming into this country, and they remain fixed and unchangeable. They are very prolific, and their children are trained, before and after regular hours, in Japanese schools. Denied agricultural land by State law in California, they are taking it in the names of their native children, who are ipso facto citizens under the Federal Constitution. They make the Constitution the instrument for law evasion.

I think, then, it is apparent that the danger ought to be checked. I shall not now go into that question, as I rose merely for the purpose of setting at rest the facts concerning the peace conference in their consideration of the resolution providing for the equality of races. I desire at the same time, however, to explain what that equality means—a word so pleasing to the ear and which is accepted politically, in a general sense, by us all.

We can not on terms of political equality or of social equality or of commercial or industrial equality admit freely the Japanese without inevitably involving the destruction of the American population now upon the soil. It is a question of self-preservation. There is no other question involved. If we did admit them, there would be abundant production, if that is the only end and purpose of our Government; but I am sure the Senate will agree with me in the statement that that is perhaps one of the least purposes of our Government. It is to produce and protect and to build up a nation of men and women who are homogeneous, believing in the principles of free government, and ready with their lives, if necessary, to defend them. That is the spirit of Americanism. The infiltration of an alien and nonassimilable race will destroy the American population and with it all that we hold dear.

The penetration by the Asiatics of the western coast of North America has raised, therefore, a very serious and fundamental question, and it can not, in the nature of things, be confined to any one section of the country. We are busy making preparations in Congress and in the legislatures of the Western States to correct this evil, first, by denying them the privilege of acquiring the soil—for without the soil there can be no race; there can be no free people; there can be no pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness.

Without the soil the people expelled by the incursions of the foreigner become vagrant and vagabond. It requires no flight of the imagination to see the fruits of such a policy borne in abundance by the development of the lawless and the criminal, by the I. W. W's and the Bolsheviks, because well might the people, driven off the soil by the pressure of these aliens, say "The Government under whose flag we live has failed to protect us"; and they would turn from love to hatred toward those institutions which they had believed would shelter them against—against what? Against the impossible competition of a man who can not assimilate and who will not take up the burdens of society and government, either in peace or in war, but who dedicates his life to unremitting labor, knowing neither hours, nor holidays, nor social, nor political, nor religious duties, but pursuing, to the exclusion of everything else, the acquisition of mere wealth.

Let me in a word show the results: I was told by the Rev. Dr. Lathrop, which impressed me very much, that he went to a farmhouse where he was accustomed to meet a family of Americans, the unit of a great Nation, in which he took a tremendous pride, and he saw the house dismantled while the orchard flourished. He then learned that Japanese had taken possession of this white man's house, either having acquired the land by lease or by purchase. The loss to that community and the loss to the State and to the Nation of the farmer and his family was, he well knew, irreparable. Without such units composing the community and the State there can be no State and no Nation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move an executive session with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 21, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 20 (legislative day of February 18), 1920.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

E. J. Smith, of Denison, Tex., to be United States attorney, eastern district of Texas, vice Clarence Merritt, resigned, effective March 1, 1920.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Frederick Lockwood Peacock, of New York, to be hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, in the Department of Commerce (by promotion from junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer), vice Harrison R. Bartlett, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, we lift up our hearts in gratitude and praise to Thee, that under the dispensation of Thy providence the course of human events has been upward not downward, forward not backward; hence we confidently look forward to the coming of Thy kingdom in all its glory, in the fullness of time, when every man shall know the truth, the truth that makes him free; and the ruling passion shall be to serve, not to be served; and brotherly love have its sway in accordance with the laws which Thou hast ordained. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS ON FEBRUARY 23.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Chair was authorized to designate a Member to read Washington's Farewell Address on Monday, the 23d. Under that authority the Chair designates Mr. RODENBERG, of Illinois.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROANOKE RIVER, N. C.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12351.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12351, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12351) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved March 1, 1919, to be built by the county of Halifax, N. C., across Roanoke River between Hills Ferry and the ferry near the town of Halifax, in said county and State, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there any amendment?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPECIAL MESSENGER AND ASSISTANT PAIR CLERK.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William E. Kenney be, and he is hereby, appointed a special messenger and assistant pair clerk to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Kenneth Romney, named in the resolution adopted by the House May 19, 1919, to be effective from September 16, 1919.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how is it that this does not come from the chairman of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. This is one of the minority employees that were provided for in the resolution adopted on the 19th of May, when the House organized. Mr. Romney was named in that resolution for this place. Mr. Romney was formerly in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, and at the request of the Sergeant at Arms he remained there for some little while, up until the 19th of September, whatever the date here shows. Another young man was put in the place temporarily to fill that place. It then developed that the Sergeant at Arms was going to retain Mr. Romney permanently in his office, and he so notified us, and this is to fill that place. It is one of the regular minority places.

Mr. GARNER. It is already provided for by law. It is no new place.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. It is one of the regular minority employees.

Mr. WALSH. Is this retroactive?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes. This man has been on the job ever since the 19th of September.

Mr. WALSH. Who has been paying him?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Nobody.

Mr. WALSH. Has he not been receiving any pay?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. DYER. Has he been doing any work?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the pay?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Eighteen hundred dollars, I think.

Mr. DYER. How much time has he been giving to the work?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The same amount of time that every pair clerk gives every day.

Mr. WALSH. Has this been referred to the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No. This has not been referred to the Committee on Accounts. It would not belong to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. He is one of the minority employees. The custom for years has been at the organization of a Congress for the minority to offer a resolution for the employment of the person. This changes the designation of the person, not of the office?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know why it has not been brought in before.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is touching upon an interesting story. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an index of the conference report on the railroad bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an index of the conference report on the railroad bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Who prepared it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. It was prepared in my office.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, as to-morrow will mark the fourth anniversary of the Battle of Verdun, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on that historical event and the achievements of the French Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the achievements of the French Army. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12610, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12610) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I arose to a question of what I believed to be personal privilege to reply to a statement appearing in the Washington Post of day before yesterday. I will read that brief portion which I felt entitled me to speak in my own behalf at that time.

In the Washington Post of February 18 is the following statement:

The chairman of the subcommittee was Representative JAMES A. FREAR—

Referring to the aircraft committee report—and the Democratic national committee charges he favored the McLemore resolution forbidding Americans to take passage on ocean liners, as well as a resolution favoring an embargo on the sale of munitions to the Allies.

It is further charged by the Democratic national committee that Mr. FREAR voted against war with Germany, against conscription, against the espionage act, and against the first war revenue bill, "amongst others."

I have omitted portions of the statement, in order to get the specific bills and votes of which the Democratic national committee complains. It has no direct bearing on the report and no remote relation to the report of the aircraft committee, but I wish to meet it squarely at the time it is made.

The purpose of this statement from the Democratic national committee, as I assume, was to discredit the report on aviation made by the committee of which I am a member and chairman, appointed over my protest. Let me say, I preferred not to serve and afterwards tendered my resignation, which was refused. But that is only an incident. The report has been made to the House. Four thousand pages of testimony have been submitted, with our findings, so that Members of Congress can determine whether or not the facts therein set forth are true.

At the outset of our hearings last July and prior to the swearing of a single witness, Mr. Homer Cummings came before our committee. He is the chairman of the national Democratic committee. He vouched for a statement given out to the press before a witness was heard which discredited the purpose of this committee and called it a political investigation, partisan in character, but admitted before the committee that he had no evidence on which to base that statement except his own personal judgment.

When informed that the House had unanimously voted for the passage of the resolution, he criticized the House for its action and said it would result in no good. I cared nothing about his judgment, but from that day to this, through the press, he has constantly given out through the Democratic national committee reflections upon the acts of this aircraft committee. We have endeavored to make a fair and nonpartisan investigation from start to finish. I ask any Member, from now on until the matter shall come before the House for discussion, to indicate a single line in the hearings, of 4,000 pages, where there has been a word of partisanship or politics injected from the majority members of the committee.

Now, I wish briefly to take up the objections that he presents against the acceptance of this report at 100 per cent value.

The first statement he makes is that I opposed tabling the McLemore resolution on March 17, 1916, a year before the war. I did. I have no apologies to make for that, never have made any, never propose to make any. The McLemore resolution, as we all know, was based upon a situation which arose after the Secretary of State had written to the belligerent countries a letter in which he said it was "a doubtful right" to ride upon their armed merchant vessels, and President Wilson was thereafter elected because he kept us out of war. I am not going to discuss the resolution. That is one reason why I did not care to discuss the question of personal privilege yesterday or to enter into the merits of the proposition. I desire to say this: That I voted my best judgment and the following gentlemen voted with me. I ask the House to pay attention to their names, to determine whether the House will accept any reports or any recommendations made by these gentlemen hereafter, for Mr. Cummings, chairman of the Democratic national committee, objects to them on the same ground. These gentlemen voted with me on the McLemore resolution:

Mr. JULIUS KAHN, present chairman of the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. TOM BUTLER, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. JOE FORDNEY, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Dr. FESS, chairman of the Committee on Education.

Senator LENROOT, promoted to the other branch of Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois, who was then the minority leader and one of the ablest Members of the House.

Mr. MONDELL, the present majority leader.

Mr. REAVIS, chairman of one of the subcommittees with myself upon the war-expenditures investigation.

Mr. STEENERSON, chairman of the Post Office Committee.

Mr. ESCH, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. TOWNER, chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Kent, who was appointed by the President of the United States a member of the Tariff Commission in recognition of his ability and past public record.

Mr. LONGWORTH, the gentleman who at present occupies the chair just vacated by the Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN, a gentleman whom we all respect very highly.

And Uncle JOE CANNON, a patriot second to none.

Think of it! I am criticized by the Democratic national committee for being found in such eminent company.

In 1916 there was an election, and this matter was thrashed out by self-anointed patriots in my State, and I received the largest majority I ever had in the district—in a State that furnished more volunteer soldiers in proportion to its population than any other State in the Union.

But for the purposes of the argument I am going to admit that I made a mistake in being found in the company of these distinguished gentlemen. Is that any excuse or justification for the expenditure by American officials of $1,000,000,000 appropriated by Congress for aeroplanes and only getting 213 flaming coffins at the front after 19 months of war? I will establish in your minds the fact that they were "flaming coffins," in the judgment of the men who flew them, before I get through.

The war vote is second among Chairman Cummings's complaints. Yes; I voted against the war. Judging from absolute lack of war preparations and waste of one thousand millions of dollars without getting aircraft, I might suggest many reasons if necessary. I found myself in distinguished company in that vote, because the gentleman who was then the leader of the Democratic majority of the House, now present, Mr. KITCHIN, throughout the war bore the brunt of all the labors of the great finance committee of the House, the Committee on Ways and Means, and is entitled to the thanks of the country for his untiring work, he voted the same way that I did. Sitting here immediately in front of me is a distinguished old gentleman who voted the same way—the oldest and one of the most honored in the House. I wonder if you are ashamed of him. A Democrat, yes; a man whom we all highly admire, who proudly wears the emblems of 40 battles of the Civil War in which he participated, Gen. SHERWOOD, rose from private to general. I am found in his company. Think of Homer Cummings, the politician, compared with Gen. SHERWOOD, the patriot. I am found in the company of Mr. Van Dyke, another Democrat, now deceased, who was the commander of the Spanish-American War Veterans at the time we cast that vote in April, 1917. Also with ROYAL C. JOHNSON, a soldier and patriot in the war. My friends, I can name any number of gentlemen whom the country know and respect above this man Cummings, but I do not care to discuss the votes we cast at this late day. That is past. That is water over the wheel, and our districts have returned us again. I do want to ask this, however: What justification does that afford Cummings for criticizing a report which says in so many words that $6,000,000 was wasted experimenting on a Bristol plane when there was no possible excuse for attempting to put a Liberty motor into the English Bristol? What justification is Cummings's criticism of me for waste of $17,000,000 for a "Standard J" training plane which everyone knew, or ought to have known, at the start could not be used, because of its dangerous construction, and was discarded after 1,660 worthless planes had been built? Why did not these responsible American officials build any one of a half dozen recognized types of fighting planes that were used by our allies throughout the war?

What justifies Cummings's charge against me when Director Ryan was spending $50,000,000 for flaming coffins that needlessly caused the death of many American aviators who were compelled to fly in them, as I propose to show before I get through? What justification for the needless loss of valuable lives of American aviators? Mr. Cummings, chairman of the Democratic national committee, criticizes me for my two votes. He criticizes at the same time the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KITCHIN, the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD, and every other man who voted as I did, although all of us voted for every other proposition that was offered to carry on the war thereafter. Why, the Democratic platform during the Civil War declared that war was a failure, and yet Cummings criticizes those who voted their convictions on a matter that involved this country in the horrible war then being fought in Europe.

Conscription? Of course, they lie about that as they have lied heretofore and will hereafter. I voted to admit volunteering in an effort to raise an army after war was declared. I never questioned but what that vote was right then; I believed it then and I believe it now. My father, who is still living, was commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of this District then. He served three and a half years as a volunteer during the Civil War. He believed the chance to volunteer was right and I believed it was right. My son was one of the first to volunteer in the war, and returned to his wife and baby after over two years' service. Who did I have in my company on the vote favoring volunteers? Ex-Speaker CLARK, who gave his boy to the service, as I did mine. The American people think more of the little finger of CHAMP CLARK than they do of the whole anatomy of Homer Cummings, who has pursued from start to finish bushwhacking political attacks against our committee. I did not vote against conscription, but voted for it as a necessary war measure, and Mr. Cummings's statement to the contrary is false and childish; but if true, it had no relation to the aviation committee's report.

Now as to the embargo. That is the next thing that Mr. Cummings, through the Democratic national committee, has charged me with voting against. Why, gentlemen, no embargo bill ever came before the House; it never even came out of the committee. That is a fair sample of the falsehoods which Mr. Cummings promised would be printed, and I submit no reliance can be placed on statements from such a source.

As to the espionage law, I voted for it. He charges I did not, and that is another falsehood. I have sometimes doubted the method of its administration in different forums, but it was a war measure and we accepted it as such.

I voted for every war measure after war was declared, and Mr. Cummings is again wrong. That is only another falsehood by this man, who is seeking to discredit the report of our committee by striking at it over my shoulders. Cummings has been declared unfit to be chairman of the Democratic national committee by high authority. I submit his present statement is not honest but it is the act of a prejudiced politician; it is maliciously false, and the American people do not put any reliance in it or in him, and they will never be deceived by his effort to cover up and whitewash incompetent responsible aircraft officials, whatever their politics.

Let me say a word about the De Haviland 4 and fix responsibility for the manufacture of machines that we have declared in our report were "flaming coffins." I am going to give you unimpeachable authority for the statement that they are rightly named. I quote from the chief aviator of the United States, who appeared before our committee. He had 26 victories to his credit and was given the cross and distinguished service medal by Gen. Patrick, who also appeared before our committee. I allude to Capt. Rickenbacker. He stood up there in the gallery after his return, and you gentlemen all paid homage to him, to a splendid soldier, the ace of aces, when he was there. Here is his statement:

> From every side Fokkers were piquing upon the clumsy Liberty machines, which, with their criminally constructed fuel tanks, offered so easy a target to the incendiary bullets of the enemy that their unfortunate pilots called this boasted achievement of our aviation department their "flaming coffins." During that one brief flight over Grand Pre I saw three of these crude machines go down in flames, an American pilot and an American gunner in each "flaming coffin" dying this frightful and needless death.

Does it make any difference what I have done to which Homer Cummings objects, when you have Rickenbacker's judgment on "flaming coffins"? He says again:

> The Germans * * * had seen the spring months pass, and instead of viewing with alarm the huge fleet of 20,000 aeroplanes sweeping the skies clear of German Fokkers, they had complacently witnessed the Fokkers occupying the air back of our lines whenever they desired it, with never an American plane to oppose them.

The Germans were free to bomb American troops in the trenches, and, according to testimony of reputable witnesses before our committee, that is what they did repeatedly without an American plane to oppose them. And we had appropriated $1,000,000,000 and over for airplanes to protect those boys.

Rickenbacker next speaks of the French Nieuports bought for our aviators by the aviation officials of this Government. Your boys were over there flying them; Gen. HULINGS'S son was with them. My colleague, Mr. LAMPERT, had five sons in the war. Here is what they had, and I am later going to give you as good authority as Capt. Rickenbacker in support of that same estimate.

Capt. Rickenbacker says:

> From the frequency of accidents to our Nieuport it may be wondered why we continued to use them. The answer is simple. We had no others we could use. The American air forces were in dire need of machines of all kinds. We were thankful to get any kind that would fly. The French had already discarded the Nieuport for the steadier, stronger Spad, and thus our Government was able to buy from the French a certain number of these out-of-date Nieuport machines for American pilots, or go without. Consequently our American pilots in France were compelled to venture out in Nieuports against more experienced pilots in more modern machines. None of us in France could understand what prevented our great country from furnishing machines equal to the best in the world.

Many a gallant life was lost to American aviation during those early months of 1918, the responsibility for which must lie heavily upon some guilty conscience.

That is the judgment of the first aviator of the United States. Now I read from the Senate subcommittee report.

I may speak of that as a Democratic report. No; I would rather say a fair report by a Democratic committee of the United States Senate, and if you will read our report you will find that we quote from it repeatedly. Here is what the Thomas committee says on this particular proposition of defective French machines sold to us for use of American flyers. It appears on page 10 of the Thomas report. It is not quoted in our report:

> An Army officer recently at the front testified that the American troops are using many antiquated machines purchased from the French that were discarded by them a year and a half ago. They are using the Sopwith, one and one-half strutter, which has been declared unsafe by the French and British for observation work.

Our American aviators were using unsafe English and French obsolete machines and a few "flaming coffins" of American manufacture.

That may explain why three times as many of our aviators were lost and killed in battle as those of the Allies, according to the statement of Gen. Menoher, shown by our report. These aviators came from your families and from the families of hundreds of thousands of people in this country, and then in reply to this awful indictment Homer Cummings attacks me personally because I voted on one proposition or the other he did not approve, and only two of the six were correctly stated, it is farcical and shows Mr. Cummings fails to appreciate the seriousness of the facts disclosed. With him everything is believed to be political, but this comes from a Senate committee of which a majority are leading Democrats of the country. I do not believe that he can prevent a correct judgment in the mind of anyone who reads the report.

I wish now to read to you a letter which came to me yesterday just before I left my office. I read it on the way over to the House, as also I did another which came to-day. This letter is from an American aviator, a young lawyer, a Democrat in Lexington, Ky., and this is what he says:

LEXINGTON, KY., February 17, 1920.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I read with interest in the morning papers an account of your exposure of the mismanagement of our Air Service during the late war, and especially the portion of it regarding the "Great Liberty" planes, which were rightly named "flying coffins" by those on the front who were so unfortunate as to be assigned to fly them.

I volunteered at the beginning of the war, and after serving two months in an officers' training camp, threw away my chance for a commission in the cavalry and enlisted as a cadet in the Air Service, and was trained by the Royal Air Force in Canada, later flying a few months in Texas, and then again in England, before going out to the front in France, where I was a pilot on a "flying coffin," doing day bombing until November 5, 1918, when I was transferred to be a pilot on the French Spad machine. Having used machines of Canada, England, France, and the "Liberty," think that I am qualified to give an opinion on the merits of the "coffin," as I was discharged last July.

The Twentieth Aero Squadron lost 11 aviators out of 12 on September 26, 1918, on the "coffins." I personally saw five go down in one fight in flames. If you would ask the opinion of the boys who are left out of the Eleventh, Twentieth, and One hundred and sixty-sixth, the only three "Liberty" bombing squadrons on the front, you will hear nothing but curses for the criminals that sent that machine with an unprotected gasoline tank to be used on the front. The aviators who were taken prisoner and returned from Germany after the war told me that the Huns ridiculed them for using such a death trap. No Frenchman, Englishman, or Hun would start over the lines with a DH-4 Liberty as we used. It was heralded over this country in the papers that the speed was 140 per hour, while we never secured one on the front that would go over 100, while if you placed bombs on it, as we did, 70 miles was the limit. You can figure your chance to fight a German machine making 140 and with a protected tank.

I have no grouch at anyone, but know that many of my friends were uselessly shot down in flames in France, and I have yet to find a friend of the "coffins" among the boys who used them and are the only ones qualified to speak, not some general in Paris surrounded by the many pleasures of that gay city. I am a Democrat, worked for Wilson before his nomination in 1912, voted for him in 1916, went to Washington to see him inaugurated, March, 1917, and went A. W. O. L. in France December 14, 1918, to see his triumphant entry into Paris, but some of his appointees have sure played havoc with the Air Service and sacrificed many lives.

If you need the addresses of the real aviators who used the "coffins" on the front, will take pleasure in sending them to you, and I am sure that they all appreciate your stand in the matter, also the Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE. Do not care to have my name used as yet, before I think it necessary.

Yours, very sincerely,

———.

What think you, gentlemen, of that statement, coming from a Democrat who is unprejudiced? He saw 11 out of 12 American aviators fall at one time in one fight, 5 of them in "flaming coffins." Other witnesses have testified to the same general effect. Who was responsible for this? Mr. Cummings would say, "Oh, well, that was one of the accidents of war." Let us see if it was. Let me quote from Senator REED, one of the ablest Senators at the other end of the Capitol, when examining Mr. Ryan, who was then Director of Aircraft. Listen to this, please:

Senator REED. You know that the best and most experienced fliers, a number of them in this country, have testified before this committee that they regard the De Haviland machine as utterly unsafe, and that they would refuse to go up in it or send subordinates up in it?

Mr. RYAN. I understand that some have testified that they have refused to go up in it or let subordinates go up in it.

Senator REED. You propose to go on making the De Haviland 4 machines?

Mr. RYAN. Until we can put the De Haviland 9 into production.

Senator REED. Do you intend to do that regardless of any testimony that may be given by experienced fliers that the machine is utterly unsafe?

Mr. RYAN. I am not convinced that the burden of testimony of the fliers throughout the country is that the De Haviland 4 is an unsafe machine.

That is taken from the Thomas Senate hearings and quoted in our own hearings and in our report. Mr. Ryan knew during the war the character of machines he was furnishing American fliers. He did know. Senator REED compelled him to know what he should have known many months before.

I might add here that only one De Haviland 9 plane ever reached Europe, and that never got to the front.

Mr. Ryan continued manufacturing these "flaming coffins" until $50,000,000 had been expended and wasted upon these utterly dangerous machines. Some one may say that Mr. Ryan was not the responsible man in power, that it was the Secretary of War. Then read from page 12 of our report where Senator NEW is quoted. Senator NEW says there, in the same Thomas committee hearings, that every man who appeared before their committee, every flier, said that the De Haviland 4 was an utterly unsafe machine. Many officers would not permit their men to fly in them. He was then examining the Secretary of War, Mr. Baker, and when he got through with his question in which he stated these facts, Mr. Baker said:

The subcommittee, of course, has a great advantage over me in that I have not been permited to see any of the testimony the committee has taken, so that I do not know anything about this concurrence of opinion to which you refer.

That occurred in the Thomas committee, and later Secretary Baker testified as follows before our committee:

Mr. Ryan and I talked over the general question, * * * and I approved we should not suspend making any machine we were then making, but we should go on and make it and get ready to make others.

And they did. They never got another American machine, except a handful—213 "flying coffins" for our aviators at the front, and we had 4,000 flyers there in Europe. Mr. Ryan complains because he is criticized in this report, and his method of getting revenge is to criticize me personally. I might point with equal right to the enormous profits, reaching many millions annually, which Mr. Ryan made out of the war when his Anaconda Copper Co. increased its profits over $75,000,000 during the war, but that is beside this question of responsibility for the lives of American aviators who were protecting men in the trenches. If I could only tell you what influence has been brought to bear to whitewash in this report you might feel we are justified in speaking far stronger in condemnation of responsible officials.

You have got no whitewash, and you can not have from the majority of this committee. You have the facts as we believe them to be—not political, not partisan. We have endeavored to give you those facts. You sent us unanimously to do the work, and we have made our report. There is a minority report, and I have no criticism to offer here. Everyone has a right to his own conclusions with regard to the testimony, but our report is as we find it. I had a son who was over there during the war, and he wrote a letter that I read to the Secretary of War without giving the authorship. He was at Chateau-Thierry, and he sent back word in his letter to me, "Send us more planes and still more planes." He said, "You do not know how disheartening it is to our boys; we have not any planes over here." When I read that to Secretary Baker, then before our committee, he said, "That is a touching and beautiful letter." But that did not meet the situation. We needed planes over there. One thousand million dollars were expended for planes, and we did not get them. And on a showing like that Mr. Cummings says, "You should not listen to Mr. FREAR. He voted against tabling the McLemore resolution in 1916 and against war." I did, with Mr. KITCHIN and Gen. SHERWOOD and scores of other men who are among the most trusted men in this House; but I have never dodged responsibility and have ever acted on my own judgment, without fear of criticism from men of the Cummings type.

Read the testimony, the sworn testimony, before our committee, that is all we ask of you. We say to you, gentlemen of the House, that the people back home who raised a billion dollars in money for airplanes, a million and more fathers and mothers who gave their boys, are entitled to know the facts. I have letters received this morning from aviators, and they all say that we have their indorsement in exposing those who are responsible for a needless tragedy. You are getting just exactly the facts as we believe them to be. That is all we desire to offer. We do not care to burnish them or to add anything to what appears here, but the plain testimony is offered, as it would be taken in any court of justice. This question is too great to be dismissed by ridicule or abuse of the committee. The people want the facts, and we have given them to you in the report as we believe them to be. Gentlemen, I thank you for this courtesy. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. How much time did the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON]. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Reserve Board has recently raised discount rates to the following figures:

	Per cent.
Notes, 1 to 90 days, secured by certificates of indebtedness of the United States	4½
Notes, 1 to 90 days, secured by Liberty bonds and Victory bonds	5½
Bankers' acceptances	5
Commercial paper (all kinds)	6
Agricultural paper	6
Notes secured by War Finance Corporation bonds	7

This was done January 22, and was slightly modified on February 2. This action was greeted by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], member of the Banking and Currency Committee, on January 29 with joy, and he made the following statement, which was greeted with prolonged applause on the Republican side. He said:

A month ago they began what some of us wish could have been done before. They began raising the discount rate. This month they have raised it still further. Speed their action. Encourage them at every opportunity to put on the brakes to prevent this constant increase in rediscounting commercial paper, which is threatening us with so much peril, * * * it is time for us to open our eyes, time for us to know that we are entering upon another great discussion of money, time for us to realize that we ought to understand whether we are going to pay our debt now or postpone its payment, whether we are going to deflate the currency and bring it back to where it was before the war, whether we are going to return the activities of Government to that stage which amply met the needs of the people but a few short years ago.

How does he propose to deflate the currency? He says reduce the Federal reserve notes issued, which he calls "fiat money." Now, they are only issued on (a) commercial paper, (b) agricultural paper, and so forth (see sections 13, 14, and 16, Federal reserve act), and can not be issued "for the purpose of carrying or trading in stocks, bonds, and so forth, except bonds of the United States," section 13. Hence, to begin to contract Federal reserve notes unduly will at once contract manufacturing and other commercial operations and agricultural operations and thereby directly decrease the supply of necessities and increase the price.

The distinguished speaker ran over the financial history of the country, with more or less accuracy, and praised the order raising discount rates. Now, I desire to consider the wisdom of this highly praised order and will glance for a minute at the beginning of our modern financial history. I cite the per capita circulation at the beginning and end of the Civil War and, by decades, to date:

Year.	Population.	Per capita.
1860	31,000,000	13.85
1865	34,000,000	20.58
1870	38,000,000	17.51
1880	50,000,000	19.41
1890	62,000,000	22.82
1900	76,000,000	26.93
1910	90,000,000	34.33
1917	104,000,000	45.74
1920—Feb. 1	106,000,000	54.77

So in 1860 to 1865, in war, circulation increased $6.73 on 13.85, or 49 per cent. In 1917 to 1920, in war, it increased $9.03 on 45.74, or 19 per cent. In 1860 to 1865 coin decreased from $235,000,000 to $25,000,000 and bank notes and Treasury notes increased from $207,000,000 to $745,000,000, and of this national banks had out $205,000,000, secured by 5 per cent gold reserve, and that left Treasury notes $540,000,000, backed by nothing in the world but the fiat of the United States, and gold was at a premium of two and sometimes three to one. While to-day our currency runs equal with gold everywhere and there is security for every dollar of Federal reserve notes out, first, nearly 50 cents of gold in the reserve fund and the Treasury, and, second, the credit of the merchant or farmer, whose note is up to secure it, worth 100 cents on the dollar, and, third, the United States Government to back it. Why, then, compare the great financial system constructed and conserved by the present administration with the haphazard makeshift rigged up by the Republican Party and perpetuated for 50 years by them for the benefit of people who could, with a 5 per cent reserve and United States bonds on which they drew interest while using them for a basis for money, expand or contract the currency at their will? Who wants to return to the days of 1890, when there was 22.82 cents per capita circulation, when Kansas and Nebraska burned corn for fuel, and stock raisers could ship their stock and cattle to market and about realize the freight on them? I have seen cotton sell at 4 cents a pound for good lint in those days, and now the laborer gets 3 cents a pound for merely gathering it out of the fields. Evidently, though, the increase in the circulating medium is not responsible for the high price of necessary commodities, as they have gone up about 200 per cent on the average since April 1, 1917, while the circulating medium has increased only 19 per cent, and from January 1, 1920, to February 1, 1920, decreased $1.12 per capita. Then the cry is made, as cited above, that it is the expansion of credits. Now, there are—

(a) Credits for use in productive industries;
(b) Credits for luxuries and extravagances; and
(c) Credits for speculative purposes.

Consider industrial credits a minute. If you increase credit facilities for the farmer or manufacturer, you enable him to produce more and to take advantage of every improvement which tends to reduce the cost and increase the output and hence to make more produce and more goods for the market, and this is the first requisite to a reduction of the price. The trouble to-day is largely scarcity of necessities and scant production. Let the great credit institutions stand behind the farmer and the manufacturer and the transportation companies in their endeavor to feed and clothe the world and they will begin soon to show a reduction of cost to the consumer. No, sir; credit to the industrial classes should never be contracted while the wails of starving, naked, destitute people are ascending to Heaven in a pitiful plea for aid. A manufacturer has a call for cloth. He goes to the market for cotton and locates 1,000 bales suitable for his purpose. He tells his banker, "I want $200,000 for six months to buy cotton for manufacture." The banker says, "No; bank credits are too much expanded; I can not let you expand them any more." Do not you hear the manufacturer say to that man, "Why, people are freezing and dying for clothing; my operatives, 1,000 of them, are ready and eager to work. If you do not let me have the cash to buy the raw material, the mill must stop, and the horrors of unemployed, starving population will be transferred from Europe to my door and your door. I must have the money"?

And that is the actual condition that exists at some places right now in regard to raw products, as I shall show presently.

And the banker then relents a little and says, "Well, I will let you have half of it at a higher rate. We are warned that we must contract our loans and restrict bank credits." The manufacturer, to save the situation, accepts half what he needs and pays a higher rate of interest for it, and can not buy enough cotton to go on advantageously, and, necessarily, adds the higher rate of interest and additional cost to the price of his goods, and there goes another rise in the cost of living.

If he got the thousand bales of cotton promptly the $200,000 would go to probably 10 farmers, and they would put it in bank and it would merely distribute the funds from the large city bank to the country banks, who would immediately redeposit it in the city bank or pay off rediscounts, and no one could say there was inflation there. The factory would run, the firemen and engineers, the spinners and weavers, the loom fixers and room bosses would all be paid remunerative wages and goods would be turned out and sold and the $200,000 returned to the bank that loaned it. Can such a transaction be called inflation of bank credits? True, there is a loan placed to the manufacturer's credit in exchange for his note, which is probably rediscounted at the Federal reserve bank, but that credit is drawn in favor of 10 farmers who have the cotton to sell and is by them placed with their banks, and you say there is a $200,000 increase in bank deposits. Possibly so; but more than likely those farmers owe notes that are up with the Federal reserve bank for money to make the cotton; they retire their notes and the Federal reserve bank then holds the manufacturer's paper instead of theirs, and a commodity worth the money represents it in the manufacturer's hands. Can that be an injurious inflation of credits?

The raw material has gone into the hands of the man who can convert it into cloth necessary for the needs of the world, and when converted it goes to the relief of the people and provides work for the men who work in the factories, and they should be encouraged to buy and manufacture same to the limit of their capacity.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not yield at the present time.

The same applies to the wheat and corn growers and millers of the West and the stock and cattle men and their stockyard connections. Is it possible that raising the price of money on them and restricting their operations can decrease the cost of living? Will it not increase it? I would say put the price of discounts for productive pursuits, for the farmer, the dairyman, the stock and cattle men, the mining of coal and iron, the manufacture of all the necessities of life, and of business to the lowest possible figure. Say to them, "Capital is ready for you; go to work and let the hum of your industries cheer a desperate and starving world." To that call industry will respond and the goods will be produced which will satisfy the world and competition will bring down the high cost. You can not get goods cheaper by making it cost more to produce them, and charging a higher rate for money and making working capital harder to get will increase the cost and decrease the output. Then what can the banking system do? It can put a prohibitive rate on loans to the man who wants it to finance gambling transactions, either on exchanges or in lands or oil-well ventures or any other gambling ventures. The speculator is easily identified. He neither produces anything himself nor does he finance anybody else to produce. He bets on a stock or piece of land or oil prospect or gold prospect, selling for more to-morrow than he contracts to pay for it to-day; he takes an option on it for $1,000 to-day, expecting to sell it for $2,000 to-morrow. He is nonproductive, and until we get enough produced to relieve the wants of the world the rate of discount to him should be prohibitive. The Federal reserve act prohibits the rediscount of his paper except when secured by United States bonds, but when so secured, under the order referred to, he gets a preferential rate. Again, the rates should be put up on loans for extravagances. Many people are borrowing money to indulge in things of which they do not stand in need, and thereby are competing with people who need such things and stimulating production in excess of the country's needs of certain articles and diverting labor and energy from needed production to needless production, leaving the world short of the things most needed. Rates should be prohibitive to people for such purposes. The automobile business is an instance—many people need them badly; many people do not need them at all, but borrow money not only to buy them but to operate them. The B. F. Goodrich Tire Co. has had its statistician to get approximately the number in use in the United States in 1919, and it is 7,555,269, an increase over 1918 of 1,531,664. If these machines cost on the average about $1,000—and that is exceedingly conservative—we have $7,555,269,000 that they cost, or one-third of the entire cost to the United States of the late war. Half of them were needed; and if only half had been bought, they could have been bought cheaper and a lot of high-priced labor engaged in making and repairing the other half could be in other pursuits making other necessary things. I protest, therefore, against contraction of loans and of the currency as against the producers of this country. As to them, the most liberal policy consistent with safety should be pursued and the hand of the usurer should be kept off the neck of industry, but the speculator and the wastrel should find the door of credit closed to them until the world has been supplied with the necessaries of life and until production has become so great that competition in the markets has brought prices to a reasonable level. If the gentleman from Massachusetts really means that he wants the currency contracted to its pre-war basis and commercial credits contracted, does he speak for his party, who applauded the sentiment expressed, and does he desire to slow down production and increase the cost and demoralize industry?

I do not believe that the Federal reserve bank intends to do so, but if they do, by their order, destroy the power to produce, along with the power to waste, and cripple the power to transform into useful and necessary goods the raw material that is produced, as well as cripple the speculator in his promotions, then they are pursuing a policy of ruin to legitimate industry that will react on the system as sure as day follows night. The prospective use of the proceeds of paper should determine the rate of discount and not the form of the collateral, assuming that all the collateral accepted is good. This is recognized by the Federal reserve act. See pages 27, 28, and 33. The speculator may, and probably will, have bonds to put up and get his money cheaper than the farmer and manufacturer. You may applaud the plea for contraction of credits for productive industry now, but the plain people who are being asked to increase production will be heard from as a result and in no uncertain terms. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts also complains that bank deposits have increased $786,000,000 in two months and amounted to $17,000,000,000 on November 1, 1919. About this he says:

> Why, sir, the agencies of the Treasury Department itself do not understand what is happening. Let me call the attention of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] to another publication which perchance he throws into the wastebasket. It is a bulletin from the Comptroller of the Currency. The copy in my hand came early in the week. In it he boasts, as he has boasted month after month all winter, of the inflation of the bank deposits, the increase in the things that do the work of money, that are adding to our danger.
> The first thing I wish my Democratic friends to do is to wake up their own administration and have the Comptroller of the Currency send out this news with grief rather than with joy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. SISSON. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can not; I have not the time.

Why announce it with grief? Has it not been recognized that a people's thrift and prosperity are measured by their bank deposits? Does the gentleman advocate a campaign to reduce bank deposits? Does he approve of a drive to educate people back to the "coffee pot and stocking" bank? The worst disaster that could befall the Nation would be shaking the confidence of depositors in the banks and the withdrawal of deposits. The gentleman is the Republican representative of the great State of Massachusetts on the Banking and Currency Committee and, I presume, represents the New England idea of finance. Does his party intend to wage war on prosperity and attempt to decrease bank deposits? If it succeeds, another "Black Friday" is in store both for it and the Nation. It is true that deposits in national banks have increased from 1913, when they were $7,948,000,000, to $17,000,000,000—an increase of about 140 per cent, and the banking power of the country, as represented by capital, surplus, deposits, and circulation of all banks, as of June 30, 1919, was $45,756,000,000, an increase over the year before of $6,673,000,000. This makes the present banking power of the United States nine times what it was in 1890, 30 years ago, and three times the total banking power of the world for that year. But it is caused by the increased amounts which the products of this country bring and the spirit of thrift and banking enterprise developed in the last decade. Wheat has increased so that a farmer selling 1,000 bushels now gets about $2,500 for it, whereas in 1913 he got about $800. Corn has increased so that to-day 1,000 bushels brings about $1,350, whereas it brought about $550 in 1913. One thousand bales of cotton now brings about $200,000, whereas in 1913 it was bringing $60,000. Necessarily the agricultural countries have prospered and shown good sense by placing their money in bank, where it will finance the development of the limitless resources of the great agricultural sections. It has made them independent of the great money centers of the Northeast and makes the future of the South and West bright with promise. Does the gentleman's party desire to replace the bands on those great sections by destroying their bank balances, decentralizing their cooperative efforts to finance themselves and make them resume their tributary position financially to those who have many dollars and wish to restore the good old days when a dollar will buy two dollars' worth, when corn sells at 50 cents, wheat at 80 cents, and cotton at 10 cents? If this is not its purpose, why does its representative on the Banking and Currency Committee come out to bring back the conditions existing "before the war"? If he does not mean that, and if the Republican Party, especially of the East, does not mean that, why these tears over the bank deposits, testifying in unanswerable terms as to the prosperity and thrift of the great producing sections? My answer to the wail and this call to the mourner's bench is that the farmers are too well satisfied with their bank accounts and too happy in their lately acquired independence to weep, and are too busy trying to produce more crops to relieve want and destitution and further swell their bank accounts to turn aside to listen to the exhortations of this prophet of evil, and be by him persuaded to tear down this splendid financial structure reared by those who understand their needs and desire to serve them. The reason for this attack and the New England attitude on the bank deposits of this country and the banking resources may be found in the fact that, while 20 years ago New England and the Eastern States, comprising 6 per cent of the continental United States, had 60 per cent of the resources of all the national banks; but since that time, and especially since the organization of the Federal reserve bank, the power has so shifted that the resources of the national banks of that territory are now only 47 per cent of the total, and while they have increased enormously in that territory, the increase in the South and West and the Pacific coast States has been so phenomenal that they have largely become independent of the New England and eastern control. The Western States have gained in banking resources 500 per cent; the Pacific States have gained 1,340 per cent in their resources; and the Southern States, including Oklahoma, have gained 889 per cent. The national banks of my own State of South Carolina have gained 1,343 per cent in their resources. All of which spells not disaster but prosperity and financial independence. [Applause.] I append a statement of the Comptroller of the Currency, dated January 30, 1920, which is exceedingly interesting as throwing a light upon the anxiety of New England because the banking resources of the country are making such remarkable progress:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, January 30, 1920.

WIDER DIFFUSION OF THE COUNTRY'S WEALTH AND CREDIT—ASTONISHING PROGRESS OF NATIONAL BANKING POWER IN 20 YEARS—GROWTH OF 1,000 PER CENT OR MORE IN EACH OF 16 STATES—IN PACIFIC STATES BANKS' ASSETS ADVANCE 1,340 PER CENT, OR $1,620,177,000—OUR NATIONAL BANK RESOURCES INCREASE FROM FOUR AND ONE-HALF TO TWENTY-TWO AND ONE-HALF BILLION DOLLARS IN 20 YEARS.

A geographical analysis of the November 17, 1919, returns of the national banks of the country, and a comparison of the present resources of these banks with their resources just 20 years before, or, say, on September 7, 1899, not only furnishes convincing evidence of the stupendous and unprecedented growth of this country's banking power, but the comparison is particularly significant in another respect, for it emphasizes the widespread distribution of the country's wealth and the decentralization of its banking resources.

Twenty years ago the banking power of the country was mainly concentrated in the East, and the national banks in the New England and Eastern States, comprising 6 per cent of the territory of the continental United States, held about 60, or, to be exact, 59.87 per cent, of the total resources of all the national banks of the country. Since that time the resources of the national banks in the New England and Eastern States have increased $7,710,937,000, or 277 per cent; but the proportion of the national bank resources in those States to the resources of all national banks is now 46.78 per cent of the total instead of 60 per cent.

BIG GROWTH IN THE MIDDLE WEST.

In September, 1899, the proportion of the total resources of all national banks in the Middle Western States was 25.64 per cent. Since then the resources of these banks have increased $4,333,390,000, or 363 per cent. The proportion of their resources to the resources of all national banks is now 24.62 per cent.

HUGE INCREASE, BOTH ACTUAL AND COMPARATIVE, IN THE SOUTH.

In 1899 the total resources of all the national banks in 14 Southern States, including Oklahoma, were $348,554,000, or 7.50 per cent of the total resources of all the national banks. Since that time the resources of the national banks in these States have increased $3,097,707,000, or 889 per cent, and the proportion of resources now held in these Southern States is 15.35 per cent, against, as above shown, 7.50 per cent 20 years ago, the proportion having more than doubled.

WESTERN STATES GAIN 500 PER CENT.

In 1899 the national banks of eight Western States, including the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, and New Mexico, had resources of $204,733,000. Since that time the resources of the national banks in those States have increased $1,025,668,000, or 500 per cent. Twenty years ago these banks held 4.40 per cent of the total resources of all banks. The percentage to-day in the same States is 5.48 per cent of the whole.

GREAT STRIDES ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

The resources of the national banks in the Pacific States, including California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, and Alaska, in September, 1899, amounted to $120,905,000. Since then the increase in resources in these States has been $1,620,177,000, or 1,340 per cent. The proportion of the total resources of all national banks which the national banks in the Pacific States held in 1899 was 2.60 per cent. To-day these banks hold 7.76 per cent of the total resources of all national banks of the country.

In every State in the Union save one the increase in resources of the national banks since 1899 has amounted to more than 100 per cent, the exception being the State of Rhode Island, where the increase in 20 years was only 21.93 per cent; but, although the resources of the national banks in Rhode Island actually declined 15 per cent between 1899 and 1913, they have in that State, in the six years since 1913, when the Federal reserve law was passed, increased 44 per cent.

LEADERS IN PERCENTAGE GAINS.

The States whose national banks have shown an increase since 1899 of 1,000 per cent or more are, in the order given: Oklahoma, 6,537 per cent, or $357,722,000; Nevada, 3,275 per cent, or $17,423,000; Arkansas, 1,700 per cent, or $79,116,000; Idaho, 1,691 per cent, or $79,486,000; California, 1,685 per cent, or $1,000,214,000; South Carolina, 1,343 per cent, or $139,359,000; North Carolina, 1,255 per cent, or $171,402,000; North Dakota, 1,250 per cent, or $96,627,000; Wyoming, 1,237 per cent, or $55,874,000; South Dakota, 1,234 per cent, or $103,732,000; Virginia, 1,177 per cent, or $396,554,000; Florida, 1,174 per cent, or $102,736,000; Mississippi, 1,125 per cent, or $56,018,000; Georgia, 1,119 per cent, or $196,953,000; Arizona, 1,028 per cent, or $29,001,000; and Texas, 1,013 per cent, or $869,611,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall devote the time allowed me in this debate to a very abridged discussion of the railroad bill upon which we are to vote to-morrow. I want to call the attention of the country to the fact that within the last few months there have been housed within the city of Washington two of the greatest, most dangerous, and pernicious lobbies ever known in the history of this country, one the railroad lobby, the unprecedented lobby maintained here by the railroad corporate interests in their behalf, and the other the lobby, likewise unprecedented, maintained here in behalf of the railroad employees under the direction and manipulation of Samuel Gompers. I am sorry to say that during all of these months, while the capacity of the leading hotels, and especially of the New Willard and the Raleigh, have been taxed to the utmost limits to take care of the personnel of these two big lobbies—one the railroad lobby, the other the brotherhood's lobby—there has not been here in the city of Washington one single official or one single individual to speak for the people of the United States. Who has a greater interest in this bill than the people of the United States? Is not their interest most involved? Who appears for the people? It is in behalf of all the people that I rise to make some observations. The guaranties assured railroads in this bill are out of all proportion. The guaranties of this bill are beyond what the railroad corporate interests justly deserve, and yet they come and say that Congress is responsible for the conditions which call for such guaranties; that Congress took their properties away from them forcibly, and without their consent permitted the Director General to increase their wage pay roll over $900,000,000 annually. They say that while we have had charge of the railroads one man has been able to increase their liabilities, by one, two, and three scratches of the pen, of nearly a billion of dollars.

The railroad owners tell us that by reason of the increased wages alone, allowed the four great brotherhoods during the war, concerning which the owners had no voice whatever, their operating expenses were thereby increased over $900,000,000 annually, for which they claim the employees are alone responsible. These owners claim that inasmuch as the Government permitted the employees to increase such expenses $900,000,000 the Government ought to assume full responsibility for its own action by making the railroads whole because of it.

And we are forced to admit that the railroad owners in this respect told the truth, for it is a fact that while our Government was engaged in a world war, the result of which involved the peace and happiness of all civilization, and when the slightest restriction of the full capacity of our combined railroad traffic menaced the successful conclusion of the war, upon which not only the United States but all of our civilized allies depended, these railroad brotherhoods came to their Government with deadlier threats and weapons than used by highwaymen and to Mr. McAdoo said, "If you do not pay us $754,000,000 in cash we will tie up every road in the land," and that McAdoo, by a mere scratch of the pen, was forced to hand over the cash—$754,000,000—that came not out of their pockets, but came out of the pockets of all the people. That is an annual increase that must be made good each year. It is a fact that it did not stop there, but that these same highwaymen leaders, with a like threat, the threat of absolute destruction, if you please, said to Mr. Hines, "Give us $67,000,000 more in cold cash. If you do not do it, it means death to this Nation and its institutions." And Mr. Hines, by a mere scratch of the pen, was forced to give them the $67,000,000 in cold cash. And it is a fact these organized union leaders again forced Mr. Hines upon demand to give them more millions as a third raise during the war, and they are still demanding another, and they say in this bill, which has been drawn largely in their behalf, that these raises shall stand, as it provides that not a single change in the salaries shall occur prior to September 1, 1920. These are the conditions which the corporate interests say the union employees are responsible for and made necessary such guaranties in order to do justice to the people who own their bonds. But everything considered, I am of the opinion that no such guaranties as are contained in this bill should be granted, and that much more than is just and right has been done for the railroads, and if I had my way I would make many changes in the bill.

But, on the other hand, much more than is just and right has been done for the employees. It is the poor, suffering public whose rights have been ignored and not protected in this bill. I would that the public could have been represented in its making. But very unfortunately no lobby appeared for the public. The bill-paying "Jones" did not seek an audience. So full of clamor and insistence was the railroad lobby and the brotherhoods-Gompers union lobby that I am much afraid the suffering public was wholly forgotten.

In the past Congress and Washington have seen some remarkable Republican caucuses. We have had in Congress during its past history some very remarkable Democratic caucuses, if you please. But never until last night, in the whole history of this Congress and the Nation, have we ever had before what is known strictly as a Gompers caucus of Congressmen, if you please. Why, yesterday every Congressman, Republican or Democrat, who voted for what is known as the Anderson amendment had his office rung up, and his secretary was told that the Congressman should appear that night in the House caucus room, as Mr. Gompers was going to address the Members—not the ones who voted against the Anderson amendment; they were not so honored. Yesterday's newspapers told us that Mr. Gompers would give us his ultimatum on the railroad bill. But not a single Democrat and not a single Republican who voted against the Anderson amendment, now commonly called "the organized-labor amendment," was invited to this caucus. Blood was put on his door and he was skipped.

Congressmen who disobeyed Mr. Gompers and voted against the Anderson amendment did not receive this summons and they were not so honored, but the ones who voted for the Anderson amendment, an amendment which we know was just exactly what Mr. Gompers and his leaders wanted in the way of legislation, they were all told to be there without fail last night.

And the most remarkable thing about this Gompers-congressional caucus was that when telephoning the summons to Members yesterday, if they happened to be Republicans, they were then told that the affair was going to be a Republican caucus, while if they happened to be Democrats they were told—at least, a number of them—that it was to be a Democratic caucus, because when that question was raised last night in the caucus—I was not there, but some of my Gompers friends told me—several Congressmen stood up who are Democrats and said that they had been informed it was to be a Democratic caucus and a number of Republican Congressmen stood up and said that they were told that it was to be a Republican caucus. A caucus for what? To hear Mr. Gompers deliver his final orders and tell Congressmen what they should do in respect to the railroad bill when it is voted on Saturday.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry, but I have only 10 minutes, and I could easily use an hour on this great subject, if I had it. I hope the gentleman will not consider me discourteous for refusing to yield.

This dictator of legislation, Mr. Gompers, told you last night that he wanted you to vote against this bill and kill it. Why does he not like it? The conferees obeyed his mandate and eliminated the antistrike provision. The bill is most liberal in its terms for all employees, with no harsh provisions against them.

Mr. Gompers says he does not like this bill because it does not tote fair with the public. All of a sudden he is very much interested in the public. He does not like the labor section. Do you know why he does not like the labor section? It is simply because that in a mild way the labor section makes a stab at protecting the interests of the public, but it does not go far enough. He certainly could criticize it in the interest of the public, if he really had the public's interest at heart. He would then be compelled to ask that the decision of the labor board be made worth something, after spending much public money to get a decision. The labor section says there shall be a tribunal. The labor section says there shall be a tribunal established to arbitrate differences; that upon this tribunal three men are to be selected who are nominated by the corporate railroad interests, three men are to be selected who are nominated by the employees themselves, and three men are to be selected on behalf of the public. It is the first time that the public has ever been given even a show-in on the question. And Mr. Gompers objects to that. He is objecting to the labor section because the public has been given representation thereon. These nine men will get $10,000 a year each out of the people's money. But it does not go far enough, because their decision can be wholly disregarded by Mr. Gompers and the brotherhoods, if they do not like it, and we know what Mr. Gompers will do when he does not like a decision, because he has frankly told Congress that if it passes a law which he and his unions do not like they will not obey such a law, but will wholly disregard it.

The decision of this labor board, to be worth anything, should be one that could be enforced in the interest of the public, and not one to be obeyed or not by the employees, as they will. The railroad company must obey.

You notice in this bill, prepared by the conferees, that every time the railroad is told it must do so-and-so there is a penalty attached to it, but no penalty is ever attached to anything the employee must or must not do. It is left optional with such employees as to whether or not they want to obey the decision of this board.

Mr. Gompers met the Members of Congress in the House Office Building, in the House caucus room. Who authorized it? I went to the Speaker yesterday to see if he authorized it. He did not. There are three men only who have charge of this House Office Building—the Speaker, the ex-Speaker, and Mr. BACHARACH, of New Jersey. Mr. BACHARACH told me yesterday he did not authorize it. Who authorized it? I am informed that the ex-Speaker did not authorize it. But when Mr. Gompers wants a meeting, no authority is necessary. How many men obeyed that summons? How many men are going to obey the ultimatum of Mr. Gompers, who tells you to your face and through the press that if you do not obey the summons and his orders to vote against this bill he is going to put you out of Congress and elect somebody to take your place? Has he got you scared? He has not scared me. He has not made me flinch. Is he going to make you flinch to-morrow? If there are sections in this bill which ought to be amended, why does not Mr. Gompers ask that they be properly amended? Why does he ask to kill the whole bill? And why do not we properly amend the bill? It does need amending. Why should it be killed? All of us agree that it is absolutely necessary to return the roads to their owners. Why, if we kept them these employees would hold us up every month in the year.

I say the time has come when the railroads of this country must be turned back to their owners. [Applause.] Why, if we kept them it would be a constant burden upon the people. We would be held up every three months in the year. We must turn them back. I am going to vote to turn them back. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, there are now pending for consideration by this Congress bills for two canals affecting my district in Georgia.

One of the proposed canals—the St. Marys-St. Marks—begins at Cumberland Sound on the Atlantic Ocean near St. Marys, in my district, proceeds along the border of Camden and Charlton Counties, through the Okefenokee Swamp, possibly touching the counties of Ware and Clinch in the Okefenokee Swamp, and thence into Florida to the Gulf of Mexico.

The other canal—the Altamaha-Apalachicola Canal—would use the harbor at Brunswick, Ga., in my district, as the Atlantic terminal and would proceed along the Altamaha and Ocmulgee Rivers, bordering on the following counties in my district, to wit: Glynn, Wayne, Appling, Jeff Davis, Coffee, and across near Cordele to Flint River, and down Flint to Apalachicola River and to the Gulf. This canal would be in close touch with every county in my district and within easy access by motor truck and railroad with every community in the eleventh district.

The Altamaha-Apalachicola Canal would help not only my district but would touch about 25 south Georgia counties, and would do more to improve all of south Georgia than has ever been done by any improvement.

The St. Marys-St. Marks Canal, if dug on a sea-level basis, would also be the financial salvation of my district, and while it would not touch near so much of my district as the other canal, yet it could be reached easily by everybody by motor trucks and rail service.

But, Mr. Chairman, my heart is set on legislation looking to the drainage of the Okefenokee Swamp and the level wet lands of south Georgia which are near the Okefenokee and which make up a large part of my district, and I am now working on a bill along this line.

A sea-level canal through the Okefenokee would drain the swamp and would drain thousands of square miles of good land in the counties of Camden, Charlton, Wayne, Pierce, Ware, Atkinson, Clinch, Echols, and other counties in my district where live some of the best people God's sun ever shone on.

I would be oh, so happy, if a sea-level canal were built through the Okefenokee. It would mean so much for not only the whole Nation but especially for the people of my district and would mean everything for the people of the low-level lands. I am for a sea-level canal through the Okefenokee first, last, and all the time. When a barefoot plowboy in Clinch County there was implanted in me the ever-present burning desire to be of service to the good people of not only the county of Clinch, where I first saw the light, but to all the good people who make their living by the sweat of their brow, and I will never be untrue to that heartfelt desire.

One of the greatest desires of my life has been to be helpful in some way in the drainage of south Georgia. I shall do everything I can here in Congress to secure the drainage of the lowlands of that section. The St. Marys-St. Marks sea-level canal would in a large measure accomplish the drainage of the Okefenokee and the adjoining level lands, and it is not in the minds of men to understand the good that would result. I would be one of the happiest of men if I could help in the construction of a sea-level canal through the Okefenokee Swamp and adjacent wet lands. But it is suggested that if a sea-level canal can not be built, then a lock canal should be built.

A lock canal means to dam the Okefenokee Swamp and St. Marys and Suwanee Rivers and hold the water in the Okefenokee and back the water up the Suannoochee Creek and other creeks flowing into the Okefenokee and these rivers, and means to flood the thousands of square miles of land which I have been praying to get drained.

A lock canal means to make the wet lands of south Georgia still wetter and means good-by to all hopes of drainage. It means for thousands of people in a half dozen counties around the Okefenokee Swamp to move away from their little water-flooded and ruined homes. It means that the fields where I plowed shall be left vacant and bare and that my kin people and other hundreds of people that I love as I love my life shall sacrifice their all. It means that I will never stand for it.

I may be untrue to myself, but I never will knowingly be untrue to the great mass of men and women who toil and whom I love as I love my own life.

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely anxious for a sea-level canal through the Okefenokee. It would be valuable to the Nation and would drain the lands I want drained so much. But if a lock canal is to be built then I shall object to its going through the Okefenokee Swamp unless the Government pays the people of the half-dozen or more counties to be injured full value for the lands to be flooded. I want the canal, but I also want drainage. If I can get the canal and drainage, then good. If the canal kills the possibility of drainage, then I want drainage and favor a barge lock canal up the Altamaha and Ocmulgee Rivers and across to the Flint and down to the Gulf.

This canal will not injure any large tract of land. The Altamaha and Ocmulgee are navigable now and so are the Flint and Apalachicola Rivers. It will be necessary to deepen these in some places and possibly put in locks at each end of the canal across from the Ocmulgee to the Flint. This canal would be about 25 miles long through the hilly section of Georgia and would probably follow other streams most of the way and would not injure the hilly land close by.

Suppose we can not get a sea-level St. Marys-St. Marks Canal. Then is it not best to build a barge lock canal along the other route?

It would mean much for Brunswick. It would put half a dozen counties in my district on one of the largest inland waterways in the Nation. It would put a great inland waterway through the very heart of south Georgia. With good roads and trucks the people of all my district could carry their cotton and freight to cheap water transportation in two or three hours. Freight rates would be cheaper in my entire district, and every man, woman, and child in my district and in Georgia would be benefited.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be misunderstood. I am for the St. Marys-St. Marks Canal on a sea-level basis. But if a lock canal must be built, if any at all, then I am for the Altamaha-Apalachicola Canal. If I know myself, I am for the thing which is best for the greatest number of the people of my district and Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I pray for guidance that I may never prove false to the people whom I represent. I was reared among them, and I shall never cast a vote nor take a position which I do not honestly believe is for their interest. If I take a wrong stand, and I probably will some time, as all men do, then it shall be an error of a mind seeking for the light and not of my heart.

In the cabins and in the cottages and in the larger homes by the roadside, among the pine trees in my district, lives the farmer surrounded by his toil-worn wife and little flock. "God grant that no act or vote of mine may ever add to the burdens which they now bear, and that in every word I utter and every vote I cast while I stand as their representative on this floor I may have no higher motive and no loftier aim than to promote their best interest and to alleviate their condition. Then when I return to my home I can look them in the face and say of a truth, 'Thy people are my people, thy country is my country, thy God is my God.'"

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, the same permission, practically, that I asked for heretofore. I believe the objection made at that time has been withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back nine minutes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I address myself to the railroad legislation which now pends before the House by the report of the conferees on the Esch and Cummins bills and which are to be acted on to-morrow.

So many misstatements have been made as to the increases of wages given employees of railroads under Federal control that it is in order to say that the increase for all railroad employees averages less than 50 per cent. The largest increases have been given to the poorest-paid employees. Firemen receive only 40 per cent increase; engineers, 27 per cent; and conductors, 18 per cent; and, as I have said, the average increase for all employees of every kind and character—transportation, shop, and otherwise—is under 50 per cent. In the meantime the increase in the cost of living to these men is not less than 80 per cent. The fact yet remains that men who work for railroads have received a smaller increase in wages since 1914 than any other class of labor outside of Federal employees. So much for that matter.

"MISSHAPEN, BENT, BORN OUT OF TIME."

The conferees have made their report. The mountain has labored and brought forth not a squeaking, harmless, and ridiculous mouse but a hideous monster. The Cummins and Esch bills, ugly and forbidding as both were, have been married, and the result of this unholy union is the conference report—a Frankenstein, which is in the way of devouring the American people. "A creature swart, misshapen, bent, born out of time," is the conference report on the railroad legislation.

I do not make partisan speeches on this floor, and what I say now is not for partisan advantage. But I can not keep from feeling a deep satisfaction that my side—the Democratic side—is not responsible for this legislation. Whatever stigma is due for this legislation belongs to the Republicans and to the Republican Party, which is in control of both branches of Congress. Congress has done a good deal of meanness in the last two or three years. Some little of that maybe I participated in. The Democrats have been bad. The only thing that saves them is the fact that the Republicans have been worse, for it is under their instigation and under their leadership and by compromises with them that we have done the mean things that we have committed. It has been because we abandoned our own precedents and traditions and went over to those of the other side.

A REPUBLICAN MEASURE.

But in this railroad legislation we are not guilty. The Esch bill passed the House by a majority of only 45. A change of 23 votes would have defeated it. On the vote upon the Esch bill the yeas were 205, of which there were—Republicans 175, Democrats 30. The nays were 160—Republicans 22, Democrats 136.

I refer to this, gentlemen of the Republican side of the aisle, not for party advantage, because I love more than the interests of my party the welfare of my country, and I do not want to see my party get an advantage which comes at the expense of the public welfare. [Applause.] But I refer you to this to warn you of the responsibility that you are taking, a responsibility which you do not divide with us, a responsibility which is yours exclusively. I warn you that this is a Republican measure and that the damnation that will follow its passage into law will be visited upon you.

I do not claim to be a political prophet, but let me venture in my modest way to say this: In my judgment if this measure becomes a law in the form in which it is reported by the conferees, or substantially in that form, it will defeat any man or any party that supports it if the people find out the wrong that has been done them. Nothing can save him but ignorance on the part of his constituents.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman will please excuse me. I have not the time. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman, but the gentleman must realize what an immense subject this is.

THE PEOPLE WILL PUNISH.

The only thing that can save the advocates of this measure is that they may not "be found out." The people are forgiving, and perhaps after a few years they may forgive the wrong. But if the consequences and nature of this bill are realized before next November, then you might well to-day repeat the language of the gladiator and look up at the galleries and the powerful financial interests there who have dictated this legislation and say, "Cæsar, men about to die salute you."

I do not gloat over your situation. I do not gloat, I merely give you warning. I beg of you, my friends, I beg you to examine this bill, to study and see its iniquities, and to serve first your country and then yourselves by defeating it.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hope the gentleman will not ask me to yield. I would be glad to yield to him if I had the time.

When the people of this country realize that you have passed a measure which necessitates an increase in railroad rates of from 25 to 40 per cent above present rates; when they realize that the Government guarantees and underwrites the profits of the railroad owners and that you have put your people at home behind it—your people in New York and in Ohio—your constituents and their faith and credit behind this guaranty—when they realize that you have gone into the Treasury of the United States and taken therefrom $300,000,000 plus of the people's money and turned it over to the railroads for their rehabilitation and to restore their credit; when the people realize that you have taken another $200,000,000 of the people's funds for the purpose of winding up the Railroad Administration, so that we may extend credit to the roads for what they owe us for 10 years, and pay them cash all that we owe the railroads; when they realize that, my friends, and many other iniquities which, if I had the time, I could point out in this bill, they will wreak vengeance upon you.

When the 2,000,000 railroad employees find out what you are trying to do to them upon the demand of reactionary railroad financiers, woe unto you.

LEGISLATION DEMANDED BY SELFISH INTERESTS.

I do not say this for any purpose other than to urge you not to allow anybody to force you into supporting this measure under the pretense that it is necessary for the occasion. I call your attention, my friends, to the fact that the people of this country are not asking for this legislation, and that they have no need for it for their interest or protection. Neither are the railroad employees asking for it.

The people, so far as they are informed as to its details, are against the legislation, and do not want it. They have been deceived by a false propaganda into believing that Government control has been a failure. They only want to get rid of the railroads. They say, "Turn the railroads back." That is all the people say—"Turn them back in the same condition as when we took them over."

The railroad employees do not want it. Who is it that wants the legislation? The only interests that want this legislation—the selfish interests that are demanding it—are the railroad owners, their associates and bankers, their parasites, and those who are back of them and who stand with them because of class interests and prejudices.

Bear this in mind: The people do not need any additional law. The railroad-control act authorizes the return of the roads to their owners. All the President has got to do is to hand them back, and that will end it. But this legislation is for the railroad stockholders' protection; it is to put them on their feet, so that they can take their own property back—that is why it is being demanded, and that is why you are being asked to pass this measure. We are being asked to finance the roads for their owners' benefit and to guarantee their profits; that is the sole purpose of this legislation.

We took the railroads over; we took them under a law which authorized us to turn them back at the will of the President. The President has exercised that will. According to the law as it now stands, these railroads go back on the 1st day of March, and no legislation for the protection of the people and none for the protection of the railroad employees is required for that purpose. But the railroads think they need protection; they demand help. They are the ones that are demanding that you shall take action to protect them.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I can not yield. I have just declined to yield to other gentlemen, and I can not make an exception of the gentleman from Texas.

NO NEED FOR HASTY LEGISLATION.

Now, perhaps Members will get up here and insist that we must have some sort of a bill, and that here this is, and we must put it through, because it is only a few days until March, and the President will return the roads. That is the frame of mind some people are in—a half-hearted, evasive frame of mind that apologizes for what it is going to do. But this excuse for jamming the bill through is a bad one. We can reject the conference report and send the bill back to conference for such changes to be made in it as will make it a decent and fair bill for the people of the country as well as the railroads. We can easily send this bill back to conference and require it to be changed and amended in such manner as to be an acceptable and honest bill, fair alike to all interests. Any argument that we are bound to swallow the report of the conferees before us in order to pass any law upon the subject at all is based on a false premise.

Another thing. Assuming that the President is without power to recall his order turning the railroads back on March 1, Congress can in a few minutes pass a resolution directing that the railroads be held by the President for a few days longer, so as to give all the time we might need for further and careful consideration of the subject. Out then upon the argument that we must act now and upon the measure before us only.

I have explained this to you gentlemen, not pretending to instruct you, for that would be presumption on my part, but merely to remind you that we need no legislation in order to get rid of the railroads, and that if we wish to legislate there is ample time and means to do so without being hurried with it.

Now, we may go further. If we turn down the conference report, reject it in toto and send it back to conference, they will have opportunity to discuss, to negotiate, and to reach terms which are acceptable to the people and in the best interests of this country. They have several days yet in which to do it.

The responsibility for the situation is not on the Democrats. This condition was not produced by this side. Last May the President gave notice that on the first of the year he would turn back the railroads. For eight months those in control of Congress dillydallied, delayed, and chaffered. When the time came to turn the roads back nothing had been done. Then the President gave another stay of execution and gave two months more. Now for two months more the mountain has been laboring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman 10 more minutes.

"THE WITCHES' CALDRON."

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This pot has been boiling. We had but one day's notice that the Esch bill was coming up in the House, and nobody had time to read it before it was brought up for discussion. We considered it for two or three days, and then it was rammed through. The Senate took their action. Then a few days elapsed and the bill went to conference. Months of conference, months of secret consultations——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; I must decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. For weeks the conferees considered this bill in secret conference. Nobody knows what went on. Back somewhere in a room, locked up, they took all the time needed for conference, but we are to have none for discussion and consideration in the House. Now they come back here at the last moment. The pot has been boiling and boiling, and from the result which the conferees have produced I think it must have been some kind of a witches' caldron—

"Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog."

God knows what else they must have put into the pot to have brought out such a mess as they have spread before Congress and the country.

We took the railroads over for their own benefit. They had broken down. They were inadequate. We took them over to keep them out of bankruptcy. We have paid them more than they ought to have had. We have paid them an extravagant return. I opposed it at the time it was agreed to. We have rehabilitated them and reequipped them and spent the people's money on them, and now, behold, having done all this, it is proposed by this measure not merely to turn the railroads back but to pay their owners for taking them back. That is what I say the people of this country will resent. That is what I say they will punish, and they ought to punish it.

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEES PROFITS.

I have some figures here. It is proposed to guarantee to these railroads not less than 5½ per cent net earnings, and in addition to that we are to permit them to charge additional rates to the extent of 1 per cent on their valuation for a revolving fund and for one purpose and another. Any way you look at it, it is money that is taken out of the people's pockets.

For the present, there being no other way of ascertaining the value of the railroads, their book value as carried by them must necessarily be accepted as the basis upon which this percentage is to be paid. That means that not only will the actual investment in the railroads be realized upon at 5½ per cent net, but the people will be taxed upon all the water that has been injected into them, upon all the fraud and stealing that has gone on. They will have to pay the railroad owners their 5½, 6, or 6½ per cent on that as well as on the true value.

The approximate value of the railroads as carried on their books is $19,000,000,000, upon which a 6½ per cent return will be about $1,300,000,000. Now, the "standard return" which we have paid during Government control has yielded to the railroads about 5 per cent on their value, water and all. We have been paying them 5 per cent return upon their water already, and it is proposed to increase that return to somewhere from $200,000,000 to $500,000,000 more by this measure.

Some people believe the Government has lost money in running the railroads. The real truth about it is that there has been little or no actual loss, and that Federal control has been a success if we consider it fairly in all its aspects. But we have spent more money than we have got back, and that is the chief reason why the people of this country have been encouraged to turn the railroads back. But when you turn them back under the terms of this bill the people will not only have to make good the loss we have already sustained but in addition will lose somewhere from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000 a year under the Government's guaranty or through increased rates.

DIVIDENDS OF 12 PER CENT.

We have been paying many of these railroads very handsome dividends. Take for illustration the Union Pacific. Its owners have received under Federal control 12.8 per cent upon their investment. The Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe has had 10 per cent and numbers of others have had 6 and 7 per cent.

But, mark you this, gentlemen, some of these roads have received under the standard returns no net income because they had not made any net income before Government control. We have not paid them anything in net profits. By the new arrangement provided by the conferees' report the guaranty to these roads that have not earned anything for years is 5½ per cent return upon their capitalization, water and all. When you begin to figure out that, you observe that there will be a vast increase in the return to many of these bankrupt roads that at present are liabilities and not assets. They earn nothing and are worth nothing, but the Government must pay them the 5½ per cent net.

FULL OF JOKERS AND INIQUITIES.

I can not undertake to point out the many iniquities in this measure other than in the very hasty and general way in which I have attempted to do it. There is not time sufficient for me to do it. I have read the bill, and I have studied it, and I realize that it is full of jokers and contains many clauses that a common man can not understand. A great many of its clauses are of the authorship of men who have been brought here for that purpose. I do not mean Members of Congress or of the committee, but cunning railroad lawyers and lobbyists. Many of these jokers have been put over on the committee. They will be interpreted to mean things that were never dreamed of when the committee adopted them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON had leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident from the impatience of the gentleman from Alabama and from the argument he makes that that argument would not stand the test of interrogation. I rise to say good-by to the gentleman, for I understand that I am to be beaten when the people find me out. Anyway, one of us will be beaten when they find us both out. So good-by. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have no opposition, so it must mean the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, there have been many bills introduced by Members of Congress to provide for a bonus for the soldiers, sailors, marines, and others who have served their country during the recent World War. I have introduced two myself, and after investigating the matter very thoroughly I have come to the conclusion that the first thing to be done is for the soldiers, sailors, and marines to get together through their representatives, decide the kind of a bill they want, let the Members of Congress know, and we will pass it. I believe Congress is ready and willing, and I believe the people of this country are ready and willing to provide the money, to grant a bonus, if such it must be called, to those brave men and women, who left their families, wives, and husbands, children, parents, friends, and warm and peaceful firesides and went 3,000 miles away to uphold the honor of the Nation and the glory of the Republic.

We who remained at home made no sacrifice. These men and women are the only ones who made any sacrifice, and we who remained at home have no right to ask the cost or where the money is coming from.

Many of them died. It is our duty to care for their dependents and honor their memories.

Many of them were maimed and wounded. It is our duty to care for them and make them as near whole as possible, whether they had war-risk insurance or not. I never was much of a believer in the provision that made the soldier pay for his own risk that we forced upon him by entering the war.

Many others went and served their country faithfully, for $30 per month, less insurance charges, while the alien slacker, who claimed his exemption because of his alienage, remained at home and earned from $5 to $25 per day.

Why, we treated the alien enemies within our gates better than we did our soldiers, for they, together with the alien slacker, remained here under the protection of our flag, safe from danger and earned large wages, and some of them are now holding the positions held by our soldiers before they went to war.

It is our duty as representatives of a grateful people to see that something is done to sort of even up this inequality. It is not a bonus or a gratuity, it is a debt we owe them.

We are the richest people in the world and ours is the richest country in the world, and yet we have done less for our soldiers, sailors, and marines than has any other nation in the world engaged in this war.

We have not done as much for them as have some of the States in this Union. The States of New Hampshire and Massachusetts have given their soldiers, sailors, and marines the sum of $100 each. The State of Minnesota has allowed each soldier toward his education the sum of $200. The new State of North Dakota has allowed each of her loyal sons the sum of $25 for each month of service with which to purchase a farm or go into business. The State of Oregon allows each of her defenders the sum of $25 per month toward his education. The State of Wisconsin has given each of her fighting men $10 for each month's service, but not less than $50 in any event.

Yet the United States, that squandered millions on this war, paid the contractors all they asked, loaned money to Europe by the billions, and extends the time of the payment of the interest; the United States that squandered millions on ships, millions on flying machines, millions on railroads, has done less for her brave men and women than the poorest country engaged in this war.

No one asked where this money came from, but just as sure as something is asked for the soldier, sailor, or marine some ingrate asks, where is the money coming from?

Sixty dollars is all we pay our fighting men. Not enough to buy a suit of clothes. A soldier who returned and only had his bonus did not have enough to provide himself with an outfit and live for a day, and unless he had relatives or a job ready he found himself hard pressed.

But some one asks where is the money coming from? Why from taxes, of course, the same way in which we secure all the money with which we pay all of our bills. Is it wrong to collect taxes and pay the men who saved the honor of the Nation in the hour of its greatest peril? Was it wrong for the States and the National Government to pay bounties during the Civil War? All collected by taxation.

Why Canada, much poorer than this country, has done several times as much for her private soldiers as we have, and more for her officers. She pays each private soldier from $280 to $600. Just think of it; in some instances ten times as much as we pay. As one Canadian told me, "We can not afford it, but we are going to do it, for we owe it to them."

France bled white. France who lost her sons by the thousands, almost by the millions, and had the enemy upon her soil for over four years, pays her private soldiers from $82.99 to $233.53. All these countries pay their officers much more.

All of these countries were in the war much longer than we were, and some of them had the invader upon their soil and destroying the wealth of the country. This country is now in the midst of an unequaled prosperity. We can afford to do justice to these men and women, and if we do not do it we will suffer for it in the near future. We will need these men in the future. We need them now. In these days of unrest we need the strong arm and the moral support of those who fought the battles of the Republic.

We had no war-risk insurance during the Civil War, yet we have paid and paid justly and gladly to the defenders of the Union millions—yes, billions—of dollars, and no one has ever uttered a protest. The people would rather tax themselves to pay this bonus than to tax themselves to pay certain debts contracted during the war and even since. We might sell some of the war material that is now wasting and help pay this bonus. We might get a little better price for those German ships and help pay this bonus. We might be a little more concerned about the people at home and less about the people in some other country. Oftentimes we hear the question asked, Who won the war? Well, it was not the desk officer, although he did his part. It was not the munition worker or the munition manufacturer, although they did their part. It was not the banker or the farmer, the contractor, or the merchant. It was the boy who took his life in his own hands and went into the trenches and went over the top. It was the man behind the gun, the man up in the aeroplane, and down in the trenches. It was the sailor who carried the soldier over. It was the marine who covered himself with glory. It was the nurse in the hospital who cared for the wounded and dying. It was not any of us who remained at home and bought Liberty bonds who won the war. It was the man who dared. It was the man who risked his life for you and for me. It was not the President. It was not Congress. It was our soldiers, sailors, marines, nurses, and all who did active service near danger. We can never pay the debt we owe them. We can simply show our appreciation in this very small way by doing justice now. [Applause.]

I desire to attach a statement showing what States in this Union and what other countries have done for their soldiers, sailors, and marines.

STATE LAWS GIVING A BONUS TO SOLDIERS, SAILORS, AND MARINES.

Massachusetts (Laws, 1919, ch. 283): All honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who resided in the Commonwealth at least six months prior to entry into service and who entered the service subsequent to February 3, 1917, and prior to November 11, 1919, are given the sum of $100.

Minnesota (Laws, 1919, ch. 338): All honorably discharged male citizens and residents of the State who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps are allowed tuition not to exceed $200 at any school within the State which maintained a Students' Army Training Corps.

New Hampshire (Laws, 1919, ch. 140, as amended by special session, 1919, ch. 1): All residents of the State who served prior to November 12, 1918, in any capacity in the military or naval service, including Marine Corps, are entitled to $100 in recognition of such service.

North Dakota (Laws, 1919, ch. 206, as amended by special session, 1919, ch. 55): Each honorably discharged citizen who served in the military and naval service is entitled to $25 for each month or fraction thereof that he was in service for the purpose of purchasing a home or farm, establishing or investing in a business or trade, or for educational training.

Oregon (Laws, 1919, ch. 428): All honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines who were inducted or enlisted in the State who desire to pursue a course of study in any institution in the State are allowed a sum not in excess of $25 for any one month, and not over $200 for any one year, for a period of not more than four years. This act not to include members of Students' Army Training Corps or limited service men who did not leave the United States.

Wisconsin (Laws, 1919, ch. 667): Each soldier, sailor, marine, or nurse who at the time of induction into service was a resident of the State is given $10 for each month of service with a minimum of $50 as a token of appreciation. Not to apply for time spent in students' Army training camps or to a person who although inducted into service did civilian work at civilian pay.

NOTE.—The acts of the 1919 sessions of Alabama, Florida, Iowa, and North Carolina have not been received in the Library of Congress.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, since the election returns from the third Missouri district have been received, showing increased Democratic majority, I suppose our Republican friends will cease claiming Texas in the next general election. But that is not what I rose to discuss. What I desire to briefly discuss is the question of rural highway construction—of Federal aid in the construction of good roads.

There is a vital connection between good roads and farming and a still more vital connection between farming and the high cost of living. Complaint is heard everywhere of the high cost of living, and complaint as to scarcity of food is general throughout the world. Upon one phase of this question all seem to be agreed, and that is that no substantial and permanent relief can come until there is a marked increase in production. We may pass all kinds of drastic laws against profiteering but will find no certain remedy until production is greatly increased. If the prices of food products are to come down, we must produce more wheat, corn, cattle, hogs, sheep, dairy products, poultry, eggs, garden vegetables, and so forth. This can be done only in two ways—first, by more intensive and intelligent methods of production so that greater crops can be produced by those already engaged in agriculture, and, second, by increasing the number of people already engaged in agricultural pursuits.

While there have been great advances made in agricultural knowledge as result of experience, instruction afforded in agricultural colleges and other schools teaching this subject, also as result of the great work done by the Department of Agriculture through farm-demonstration work, distribution of bulletins, and various other ways by the different agencies of the department, yet in spite of all this people continue to leave the farms in droves, not so much for the reason that farming is not profitable but because of the isolation, lack of social advantages, lack of good roads and other necessary improvements and advantages that go to make country life attractive. Something must speedily be done to stop the rush from farms to the cities and towns or serious consequences will ensue.

When the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration in the House last week the majority side of this House trimmed down many of the items far below the estimates of the department and the needs of the country, one member of the committee stating on the floor of the House that where there was any doubt at all he resolved that doubt in favor of economy. No man is more in favor of proper economy than I am, as my record here will show; but at the time when there is unusual demand, world-wide, for a greater production of the prime necessities of life, it is no time for parsimonious action upon this vital subject. This is a penny-wise and pound-foolish economy and bound to work great injury to the entire country. What we need to do is to encourage and stimulate, and not discourage, those who are engaged in the most important of all pursuits, that of raising food for our own people and the hungry nations of the world.

No one thing that can possibly be done will have greater influence in making country life and farm life happy and contented, as well as profitable, increasing production and lowering the cost of living, than the building of good rural highways. The Sixty-third Congress, which was Democratic, realized the great importance of this matter and took the first effective steps ever taken toward carrying out a policy of giving Federal aid in building a better system of public roads. That Congress constituted the first Committee on Public Roads, which was appointed June 3, 1913, Judge Shackleford being the first chairman. I have had the honor of being a member of this committee since it was first created. In the Sixty-fourth Congress we passed a bill appropriating $5,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1917, ten million for the year 1918, fifteen million for 1919, twenty million for 1920, and twenty-five million for the year 1921. Then, in the Post Office appropriation bill in the Sixty-fifth Congress, also Democratic, we supplemented the original appropriation by the additional amounts as follows: Fifty million for the fiscal year 1919, seventy-five million for the year 1920, and seventy-five million for 1921, making a total of two hundred and seventy-five million appropriated by a Democratic Congress for the years 1917 to 1921, inclusive.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman says that the committee made such a basis for distribution. The State I represent gets less than any State in the Federal Union, and yet it pays more income tax than nine States south of Mason and Dixon's line and less than nine States north of Mason and Dixon's line. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a fair distribution of the money?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not care to go into a discussion of that subject elaborately, but I will say that the needs of Federal road construction can not be based on wealth, as the gentleman seems to assume. It is based on the needs of the rural communities of the various States, and if he will study the law he will see that it is eminently fair and fully justifies the money expended under the bill.

These appropriations were made by the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses, the first covering a period of five years and the second a period of three years. As a result of this action on the part of the Federal Government, road building throughout the entire country has been given a mighty impetus. The various States are cooperating freely with the National Government, and road building is going forward by leaps and bounds. Encouraged by the Federal aid, the States are increasing their revenues for road building, and the counties in order to cooperate with the State and Federal authorities are voting bonds and getting ready in every way to carry forward at full speed successful road-building programs. What has this Congress done to show its interest in the farmers of the country or to assist or encourage road building? If the Committee on Roads is functioning at all, I have never heard of it. I think there have been one or two short meetings, held sometime last summer, to consider a project out in Oregon or on the Pacific slope. In the last or the Sixty-fifth Congress, which was Democratic, we not only made additional appropriation of $200,000,000, as before stated, to aid in the construction of good roads, but we also provided for, or authorized, the War Department to turn over to the highway authorities of the different States certain machinery, war material, equipment, supplies, and so forth, suitable for use in the improvement of highways, the same to be distributed to the highway departments of the several States and used on roads constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid. Under this authority the Secretary of War has turned over quite a number of Army trucks, but has not complied with the full intention and purpose of the statute, as there is on hand, held by the War Department, a lot of other material, machinery, and so forth, such as steam shovels, hoisting derricks, scrapers, plows, wagon loaders, and so forth, which are badly needed by the various highway authorities.

At the urgent request of the various highway authorities of the several States there was passed through the Senate on the 22d of October last a bill directing the War Department to turn over to the highway authorities of the various States machinery, material, and so forth, aforementioned. For some reason that bill was delayed in the House until the present week, when it was finally passed upon the suspension of the rules. However, a change was made in the Senate bill, necessitating its return to that body for concurrence, and if it sleeps there as long as it has in this body it will not become a law until much of this machinery is ruined by exposure to the weather or has been disposed of by the War Department. To my knowledge the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee urged upon the Rules Committee again and again that a special rule be given making this legislation in order. I have received numerous letters from the chairman of the State highway commission of North Carolina emphasizing the great need of this machinery, material, and so forth, to be used in road construction in the several States, as originally intended.

It would be interesting to know why this legislation has been so long delayed. Is it possible that it is being strangled for political expediency, or has Will Hays, the national Republican chairman, given orders that it must be killed by long delay? If this kind of tactics is to be continued by a Republican Congress, then Mr. Hays will need to offer more than $10,000 for some one who can write a satisfactory platform, and need to appoint a larger advisory committee than the one already appointed, containing 171 members. You need not be deceived, the people will not be mocked. The farmers of the country know what party has given them substantial relief by the enactment of numerous pieces of legislation in their interest, such as the rural-credits law, good-roads legislation, and so forth, bringing more favorable conditions to those engaged in agriculture. But when they ask relief or help in any way of this Congress they are confronted with the response that everything must be subordinated to economy. When the people ask bread they are given a stone. Political expediency is the governing policy of this Congress and has been since the day it first assembled. Instead of considering first the interests of all the people, the needs of the Republican Party in the coming campaign are given the right of way. As the matter now stands, the last appropriation for carrying on the work of road building expires at the end of the fiscal year 1921, and the Department of Agriculture and Bureau of Roads do not know whether to go ahead with plans for the future or not. If this Congress intends to continue the splendid work now in progress it should, by appropriate legislation, extend the present road-building plan, or one similar, for a period of at least three years, so the Bureau of Roads can go ahead with its work. "He that provideth not for his own household hath denied the Faith, and is worse than an infidel." And if we fail to provide adequate legislation for the great American household, we will merit and receive a just rebuke from them. Efficiency should be our first motto, then economy. Not a dollar should be collected in taxes save and except for proper and necessary purposes, and every dollar so collected should be wisely and economically expended. Joshua commanded the sun to stand still in order that he might fight the battles of the Lord, and the sun obeyed. Will Hays, the chairman of the national Republican committee, has commanded this Congress to stand still for the purpose of political expediency, and it has obeyed. When an epidemic of influenza breaks out in the country we do not economize by employing fewer doctors, closing drug stores, and discharging trained nurses, but we use these agencies for the restoration of the sick to health and the prevention of the spread of the disease.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman has referred to rural-credits legislation. The gentleman has been greatly interested in that, and I would like to know if he is familiar with the provision in this bill which provides that the Federal Farm Loan Board shall levy an assessment on the banks, on the borrowers, to pay the expenses of the Federal Farm Loan Board at Washington, amounting to $284,000 a year?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have heard a statement made, but have not studied the provisions.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman approve of that provision?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not.

Mr. MORGAN. I am glad to hear the gentleman is not in favor of that provision in the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am not; I am in favor of everything that helps the farmer. May I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I see it reported in the newspapers that he has requested a Republican caucus in order to get consideration of his bill for relief of returned soldiers. Is he driven to that extreme in order to get his own party to take up that needed legislation?

Mr. MORGAN. We have not had any conference yet, but I think we are going to act without a conference.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I was just asking whether the newspaper article which I read was a true statement.

When we were in control of the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth Congresses our Republican friends clamored and complained about the high cost of living, and one would have thought that when they came into power they would have brought the cost of living down by magic, but since they assumed control of the legislative branch of our Government living costs have soared until the blue sky is the limit. And yet they do nothing but criticize the administration. Did I say nothing? Beg pardon, they did increase the tariff on shirt buttons about five or ten hundred per cent and the price of shirts has increased about 100 per cent. When we were in control of Congress you accused us of being rubber stamps, and only registering the will of the administration, but under the leadership of our President we went forward with a positive, well-balanced program of wise, constructive legislation, in the interest of all classes—the farmer, the business man, the wage earner—and as a result the country has experienced the greatest period of prosperity in the history of this or any other country. As a result of our legislation the country prospered before the war, during the war, and since the war. Where is their program of constructive legislation, either enacted or contemplated, to match such legislation as the Federal reserve law, rural credits act, farm demonstration act, Bureau of Markets, parcel-post law, Federal Trade Commission, and numerous other salutary measures which might be mentioned? They will not dare repeal any of this legislation, not even the Underwood tariff bill, against which they inveighed incessantly before coming into control of Congress.

I pause for any one Republican to tell me what legislation they have enacted or what they contemplate that will match this remedial, constructive, necessary legislation that we placed on the statute books at the demand of the American people.

Playing politics may seem temporarily expedient, but you will need something to go before the country with in the next campaign save and except expediency, false economy, and destructive criticism. You are now sowing to the wind and are bound to reap the whirlwind, and when placed in the balance of justice and weighed upon the record you are making you will be found wanting by the American people and the just recompense of your reward will be political death. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CARSS].

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have looked forward with great interest for the return of this conference report, realizing, as I do, that this is perhaps the most important piece of legislation that will be brought to the attention of Congress at this session.

The question of transportation is one of the fundamentals on which our modern complex civilization rests. There is not one of our 110,000,000 people who is not vitally interested in the proper solution of this great problem. I regret exceedingly that the membership of the House has not had proper time to study this bill. The report was available on Wednesday at 6 p. m. and the bill is put on passage at 11 a. m. Saturday. I do not believe that there is one Member of the House, with the possible exception of the conferees, who has had time to make a thorough examination or study of the bill.

This railroad bill is being railroaded through the House, and on a pretty fast schedule. I desire to refer briefly to the labor feature of this bill. I believe that I have a fair understanding of the wishes of the 2,000,000 men and women employed on the railroads of this country. They are a class of citizens who rank second to none in the love of and loyalty to this great democracy. They take to themselves no special credit for their loyalty and sacrifice to the cause of democracy during the Great War, but they do protest against some of the features of this bill, which they consider an infringement on their constitutional rights, and object to being set aside as the victims of the first great experiment in Government wage regulation.

They simply want to be allowed to sit down at conferences with their employer and have the opportunity to participate in a free, fair, and full discussion of their claims and grievances and settle their differences and adjust their relations in such a way that they can secure that feeling of mutual respect that leads to the cooperation that is so badly needed in American industry to-day.

Under section 301 of this bill it would appear that just such conferences as I speak of are provided for, but on further reading of the bill we find that a board is provided known as the railroad labor board. This board has arbitrary power to set aside any agreement reached by the employees and operating officers of the carriers if such agreement affects wages to the extent of unsettling rates. If the railroad employees of this country are justly entitled to increased wages they should receive increased wages regardless of the effect on freight and passenger rates. This provision of the bill would effectively prevent an increase in wages, no matter how badly needed, and at the present time I believe all fair-minded men will admit that the wages of railroad employees are at least 30 per cent lower than wages paid in other industries. This section of the bill is the initial step toward compulsory arbitration. All that is needed to bring about compulsory arbitration is to enact laws fixing a penalty for refusal to abide by the decision of the labor board.

When the railroads were taken over by the Government the railroad employees were free men. When they are turned back they want to be turned back free men. These men want the report recommitted with instructions to insert the Anderson amendment or, failing in that, they want the entire labor feature of the bill stricken out. The provisions of the bill which allow any 100 employees to select boards and take up grievances or negotiate wage agreements will result in unending confusion and have a tendency to disrupt the present organization and will lead to the breaking of agreements and general demobilization of the morale of the employees.

There is another feature of this bill that strikes me as unfair to the masses of the American people; that is the guaranty feature. I can see no justice in taxing the people, through railroad rates, to guarantee a fixed return to the holders of railroad securities. We do not guarantee the farmers any return on their investments, although the product of the farms are more necessary to sustain human life than is transportation. We lived before the advent of the railroads, but civilized humans never lived without farm products.

I also object to section 422 of this bill, which takes all over 6 per cent of the earnings of the prosperous roads and uses them for the assistance of weaker roads. I think this provision absolutely indefensible and is not justified by any sound economic or moral rule and seems to be a clear violation of the Constitution, as it takes private property for the use of the public, and without compensation. For this, if for no other reason, I could not conscientiously support and vote for the passage of this bill. Much has been said regarding the need of immediate railroad legislation. I do not feel that this great need exists. I think the proper course to take at this time is to leave the railroads where they are, and will briefly set forth my reasons.

I believe that the two things most vital at present to the people of this country, in so far as the railroad problem is concerned, are that the railroads should be able to handle the enormous and continually growing traffic, which is pouring upon their rails, and that there should be as little change in rates as possible.

Everybody knows that there are not enough cars, that facilities are inadequate, and that a billion or more dollars are needed at once for additions and improvements. Every well-informed and honest man will admit that it has been possible to carry more traffic with insufficient cars and inadequate facilities under unified control than would have been possible if the roads had been separately managed. If Federal control is continued, Congress has it within its power to supply new capital at the lowest possible cost, and in the meantime the country can retain the advantage of unified administration of every car, rail, and terminal.

Under the proposed bill every dollar of the immediately needed billion and more, over and above the $300,000,000 which Uncle Sam is to loan to helpless companies, must be supplied by private railroad corporations whose securities are now selling at woefully low prices. There is no prospect whatever that this capital can be raised by these companies except at exorbitant cost to the people of the country, and no certainty that it can be raised at all. In the meantime the advantages of unified control will be lost unless we can expect rival companies to compose differences for the public good, which they have never been able to compose, or unless we can expect relief from the exercise by an overburdened judicial commission of administrative powers similar to but not as complete as those which have been exercised in the past two years by the Railroad Administration. The only reasonable expectation is that railroad traffic will within six months be in a worse tangle than it was in 1917, just before the Government was forced, for public protection, to take over the roads.

Although there has been all manner of loose talk about the benefits of private initiative, this bill places final responsibility for the functioning of the roads upon a judicial governing body composed of 11 men, without whose advice, consent, and regulation the private railroad managers will hardly be able to sneeze. If this commission is to exercise effectively these enormous powers, far greater than have ever been delegated to any judicial body anywhere in the world, it must build up an organization which will cost the people of the United States millions of dollars, and which will parallel in many respects and cause additional work for the still more costly private railroad organizations. The results desired can plainly be secured far more simply, with far less cost, and with much less restricted initiative by the Railroad Administration, which is now in existence and which has already done excellent work, although it has never been given a fair chance to show what it can do.

Coming to the question of rates, it is perfectly obvious that in these times there is nothing more important than the avoidance of anything that may have a tendency to increase the already highly oppressive cost of living. It is just as obvious that a general increase in railroad rates, affecting every manufactured product and every item of raw material used in the country, will have precisely such a tendency to drive the cost of living upward and that the effect of the initial increase will be greatly magnified as it is passed along the line.

Director General Hines has given us reason to believe that if Federal control is continued, which he believes should be done, an increase in rates can probably be avoided without throwing the cost of railroad service upon taxation, and that at worst only a small increase will be necessary. Under the proposed bill the commission is given the duty also of fixing rates which will yield 5½ per cent, and possibly 6 per cent, upon the aggregate "value"—aggregate value instead of fair present value—of the railroad property of the country. This "value" must be determined at once, although the valuation work which the commission is carrying on is far from completed. No one knows what this "value" will be, and at best it will be nothing better than a guess.

No one knows what the effect of this mandate to the commission will be upon rates. The country under this bill will be buying a pig in a poke. Only two things are certain. One is that the private owners of the railroads confidently believe that the result will be a large increase in rates, which will greatly elevate the value of their securities. The other is that rates will become a constantly fluctuating quantity to the detriment of the various business interests of the United States. The mandate to the commission is that it shall fix rates which shall produce earnings of 5½ or 6 per cent, but no more, upon its guess as to the value of the railroad property. If more traffic or less traffic moves than the commission anticipates, or if the cost of operation decreases or increases, or if the commission has reason to believe that its value guess was wrong, or that value has changed with new conditions, it will be its duty to adjust rates accordingly and as often as may be necessary to prevent the return from rising above or falling below the specified figure. No plan more certain of introducing confusion into the business affairs of the country or the element of speculation into railroad securities could possibly be devised.

Further uncertainty and confusion will be caused by the fact that eminent counsel believe that the provision for appropriating one-half of the excess earnings above 5½ per cent of such roads as are prosperous is unconstitutional and will test the question in the courts, and by the fact that it is proposed to deprive State commissions to an extent which will also be dependent upon court interpretation of the right to regulate railroad matters of purely local concern. On top of this it is proposed to continue the present guaranty of a standard return for a period of six months and thus give private owners an opportunity to build up their properties at the expense of the United States, unless the commission is equipped to prevent such operations by undertaking the extraordinarily difficult task of policing the accounts of every carrier in the country.

Summing the matter up, this bill will make it more difficult than it is now to provide and operate the railroad facilities which are necessary to handle the traffic of the country, will probably result in a large and wholly uncertain increase in rates, and a constantly fluctuating basis of rates thereafter, but will give Wall Street bankers the satisfaction of returning to the seats of railroad power which they have occupied in so lucrative a manner in the past. The alternative is to leave the railroads where they now are—in the hands of the Federal Government—to give the Railroad Administration proper support, so that it can proceed with necessary additions and improvements, to avoid uncertainty and unsettlement of railroad affairs in these times of general unrest, and to postpone final solution of the railroad problem until it can be faced with deliberation and sanity. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, inasmuch as this discussion has covered many subjects, I wish to use the 10 minutes allotted to me to call attention to some information that, I think, will be of value relative to the State of Oklahoma.

When this section of the United States was set apart for the colonization of the various Indian tribes, some of the Indians were displeased and refused to follow the advice of the Government authorities. At that time they never dreamed what the future had in store for them, and that this particular section of the country, when fully developed, would prove to be the richest section of the Nation. Since that time some of the Indian tribes who refused to move to Indian Territory have come to Congress asking that they be allowed to participate in the distribution of the wealth that has come to those who listened to the advice of the Government.

It may be of interest to know that in the State of Oklahoma there is one Indian who even refused to take a Government allotment. This made it necessary that the Indian Department select a tract of land for him, which happened to be on the top of an oil dome, and to-day he is the richest Indian in the world. A few weeks ago he gave $1,500,000 to charity. In the Osage Nation, where the Indians own all their property in common, each member of the tribe has a community interest in all of the money that is derived from the production of oil, and each member of the tribe gets approximately $2,000 a year.

Many other citizens of Oklahoma have amassed huge fortunes, and practically all of them before coming to Oklahoma were men without means. Those who have prospered in the development of the State's natural resources represent every occupation of life. I happen to know of a young man who was formerly a secretary to a Member of Congress. In the early development of an oil field he secured possession of a number of leases, and to-day he is rated as being worth over a million. The president of one of our large oil companies did not have sufficient money to take passage on a passenger train, and now he does not object to having it told that he came into the State without any money, aboard a freight car.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to have sent to the Clerk's desk, to have read in my time, a short statement published in my State, which will give the people of the country some idea of the wonderful development of the natural resources and agricultural interests in the State of Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OKLAHOMA IS SOME KID, ALL RIGHT.

The industrial department of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway, in cooperation with the field agent of the United States Bureau of Crop Estimates and the statistician of the Oklahoma State Board of Agriculture, has compiled some interesting figures concerning the progress of Oklahoma, a part of which are as follows:

AGRICULTURAL PROGRESS.

The State of Oklahoma was 12 years old last November. Its wonderful development agriculturally since Statehood is indicated in the following comparative figures from the Crop Reporter:

	1919	1907
Crop:
Corn	$94,488,000	$49,837,000
Wheat	107,912,000	7,164,000
Oats	34,650,000	3,009,000
Cotton	188,873,000	54,948,000
Total	425,923,000	114,958,000
Live stock:
Horses	61,752,000	54,312,000
Mules	31,680,000	16,128,000
Milk cows	38,148,000	8,788,000
Other cattle	63,825,000	29,024,000
Sheep	1,475,000	282,000
Swine	17,301,000	8,464,000
Total	214,181,000	116,998,000

This shows an increase in production of four leading crops in 12 years of 270 per cent and in live stock of 83 per cent. In 1909 Oklahoma ranked twenty-second in value of all crops. In 1919 the State ranks tenth in value of all crops. A good record! "I'll say it is."

SOME COMPARISONS.

Iowa's average land is priced at $160 an acre. Yet Oklahoma's $38 average land produced 12 field crips in 1919 with a value per acre of only $2.70 less than Iowa's acre value for its 12 leading crops. And Oklahoma's oats made 96 cents an acre more than Iowa's.

Oklahoma is just the size of Missouri. The borders of the two States touch. They grow the same crops. Missouri is 100 years old. Oklahoma is 12 years old. Missouri's average plow land is priced at $72; Oklahoma's at $38. The acre value of Oklahoma's 12 leading field crops exceeds the acre value of Missouri's 12 leading field crops by $7.38. Oklahoma exceeds Missouri in the acre value of: Oats, $3.93; wheat, 48 cents; rye, $3; tame hay, $6.90; potatoes, $26; sweet potatoes, $21.52. Missouri ranks eighth in value of all crops, with a total of $549,105,000. Oklahoma ranks tenth, with a total of $522,565,000. In the race for supremacy this hustling, inexperienced 12-year-old kid, Oklahoma, is right on the heels of "Old Missouri."

FARMERS' INCOME FROM OIL.

Oklahoma is often thought of as an oil State rather than as an agricultural State. It leads all the States in oil and natural-gas production, with an estimated total output for 1919 of $250,000,000 in oil and $6,000,000 in gas. Yet this is less than half the value of farm crops alone. It is estimated that nearly half of Oklahoma's 44,000,000 acres is under oil lease. One dollar an acre is a common yearly rental. It is estimated that landowners received in 1919 from oil leases $20,000,000; from royalties $30,000,000; from bonuses, $2,000,000; or a total of $52,000,000. Adding this to the value of crops, eggs, and butter fat we get $621,981,000 as the farmers' gross income. This gives the approximately 200,000 farms of the State an average income in 1919 of over $3,000, not including live stock and poultry.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. UPSHAW].

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in these anxious times, when the strained relations between labor and capital make the theme on every lip and practically on every editorial page of every paper and magazine in the country, it is very refreshing, and I may say comforting, to see such an illustration of the ideal fellowship between employer and employee as I find here in the daily papers from my own home city, Atlanta. The names of 68 prominent employers of labor appear at the bottom of the article which I shall read. It is a beautiful picture, indeed, that these fair and far-visioned men buy a page in every daily newspaper in the city to show their faith in the working men of that great metropolis. Listen, gentlemen, and it will make the blood of every patriot tingle to your finger tips. Look at these blazing big letters and the stirring tribute to patriotic workingmen which follows:

MAKING THE WORLD SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY.

Since American labor had such a hand in helping to make the world safe for democracy, it can be depended upon to help largely in making America safe from Bolshevism.

American labor will tolerate no ism that conspires and plots to undermine American industry.

American labor knows that Bolshevism hopes to get power and position by defaming or dragging down the reputation of another.

Bolshevism means this and nothing more.

Men who conspire and plot and who lend a ready ear to Bolshevism are marked by American labor, and when the hour is ripe American labor will drive them out.

The man or system that plots another's undoing is digging its own grave.

Now that we are shifting from war production to peace work, in which there is a greater need of skilled workmen than ever, trained American labor will tolerate no interference from outsiders who seek to tear down and stir up strife.

There must be no intervention or interference from foreign conspirators who seek to undermine the supremacy of American manufacturers that they may profit by the exclusion of goods made in the United States of America in competition with other nations for the world's enormous demand for everything in which American industry excels in producing.

Bolshevism would reduce wages and put American labor, which is the highest paid in the world, on a par with the most miserably and miserly paid labor in Europe.

It would banish forever the opportunity of America to take supreme place in the gigantic industrial struggle now beginning.

Bolshevism has no standing with American labor.

For this reason and many others American labor and American capital must unite and crush the evil without an hour's delay.

Mr. Chairman, I count it an honor to represent a great city of a quarter of a million people, the commercial and educational capital of the great Southeast, where such wisdom prevails and such faith and fellowship exist between employers and employees. Last year when there was a strike by the railway shopmen the remarkable picture was seen every day—2,000 of these men who felt they had a grievance and knowing no other way to secure redress, met every morning in the great Baptist Tabernacle, seating 3,000, and opened their proceedings with song and prayer, godly men, urging the workers in overalls to be careful in their every step for their own behalf. It is in such a spirit that we find the hope of the future of both labor and capital. When a Republican like COOPER, of Ohio, and a Democrat like CARSS, of Minnesota, stalwart, honest men who have climbed out of engineers' cabs into Congress, stand here and plead that nothing be done to discourage them as they are trying to save the ranks of the workingmen from the red devilry that threatens within and without, it is a call that this Congress and the country ought to honor. [Applause.]

No man of wealth is prepared to catch this vision and interpret it in terms of every-day application who has not at some time in his life known how it feels to be both hungry and tired; and no man whom we count in the ranks of labor is capable of interpreting this vision to both the inspiration and the restraint of his comrades in this critical and anxious hour who begrudges the success that has come to his employer through the dedication of intelligent energy and honest purpose.

It is not in denunciation but in counsel, not in suspicion and ferocity but faith and fellowship between each other, that peace and victory will come; and if we give proper encouragement to the workingman in his organization we will help to save him from going astray, and in the spirit of Christian duty and God-fearing fellowship we find the hope of labor, the hope of capital, the hope of America, and the hope of mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, so many diverse inquiries have come to me asking the attitude of the Rules Committee upon the Sterling-Graham sedition bills and protesting against this departure from our traditions that it is impossible to answer them all, and I am moved to make a statement.

I am satisfied that this body would not pass them in their present condition. Still there are well-intentioned men who honestly believe that by shutting off fanatics who preach destruction they would be doing away with class hatred and the arousing of it, but in my opinion they would provoke the very condition they seek to remedy.

I am not in sympathy with sabotage, syndicalism, or the anarchistic movement. But I am not content that no change of our Government can be advocated. I am a Republican—a Progressive Republican, a Lincoln Republican, a Roosevelt-Johnson Republican—who glories in the American ideals and traditions and who believes in the Constitution and insists that any change in these guaranteed constitutional rights shall be made in the orderly way prescribed.

Article I of the amendments to the Constitution says:

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievance.

But I maintain that the Constitution is not so sacred an instrument that it becomes our master instead of our servant, that it can not be revised and amended to fit progress. If parties will not keep up with the thought of the masses, if the dreams of the ages can not come true, we should be worse than the Egyptian, who was in love with death and had ever in the chair of honor at his banquet board a skeleton.

The grinning death's-head of the past can not, must not, be the arbiter of the future. The past can not chain us to the tenth century, can not bury us in the sepulchers of feudal Europe. And the conditions that prevailed 142 years ago—before the inventive era—might very easily be out of harmony and should not bind us to-day, should not chain us to any part of the Constitution that has become obsolete. And the wise founders of our country fended against the racking of other Galileos, who might assert, "The world moves, the world moves," when in their Declaration of Independence, they said, "to secure the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, * * * governments are instituted, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute new government."

This proposed law, if closely construed, would bar from the mails our Declaration of Independence.

Friction of ideas creates the power that drives the engine of progress, and free discussion is its safety valve.

It is in the very conflict of opinion of men and of parties wherein lies the secret of American strength, American success, and American education. America, born in travail, baptized in the blood of patriots, reared amid privation and hardship, mastering civil dissension, breathing forth love of humanity, in its fight for the liberation of peoples and "the safety of democracy," to-day lifts its conquering head, the Hercules of the nations.

The struggle and example to the world of America has always been for liberty. As a nation aids or retards liberty, so is it blessed or cursed by the judgment of time. Ancient nations fought for territory and for glory. Alexander the Great for universal empire. Attila, the scourge of God, for plunder. Hannibal for vengeance and to fulfill a vow taken at the sacred altar. Cromwell for fanaticism. The French revolutionists for anarchy. America fought, and is still fighting, for liberty. [Applause.]

About 40 republics have followed our example of government. The shot fired at Lexington was heard round the world. It was heard in Holland; it was heard in France; it was heard in Italy; it was heard in England; it was heard in Switzerland; it was heard in Germany; it was heard in China; and there is no land where its influence has not been felt. France has sung the Marseillaise and waded through blood to her disenthrallment. Italy, dismembered and tempest-tossed through centuries, through our example, now ordains her laws under a monarch of her choice. England, through our influence, has advanced with hesitating step to the amelioration of her less-favored classes.

The trained lightning flashes the lessons of our civilization to the home of the Pyramids. The land of the heathen has our teachers in its desolate places, and the great orb of day sets not upon the boundless triumphs and influences of America among the nations.

Free speech, free press, free discussion, free religion have made the United States the vanguard of liberty. Builded by a century and a half of patriotic toil, it covers its wounds with the noblest achievements for the rights of man. It is not perfect in the administration of its vast and responsible powers. But when was it so? When shall it be so? No human work is perfect. No government in all the past has been without its misshaped ends; and few, indeed, have survived three generations without revolution. We would be more than mortal if our history did not present much that we would be glad to efface. We should be unlike all great peoples of the earth if we did not mark the ebb and flow of public virtue and the consequent struggles between the good and evil elements of a society in which freedom is at times debased to license. We have had seasons of war and of peace. We have had tidal waves of passion, with their sweeping demoralization. We have enlisted the national pride in the perilous line of conquest and vindicated it by the beneficent fruits of civilization. We have had the tempests of aggression and profound calm. We have revolutionized the policy of the Government through the bitter conflicts of opposing opinions and it has been strengthened by its trials. We have had the fruits of national struggles transferred to the vanquished without a shade of violence. We have invoked the extreme power of impeachment in the midst of intensest political strife, and its judgment has been patriotically obeyed. We have had fraternal war, with its terrible bereavements and destruction, where the skies darkened, where the wind rose, and the storm of angry popular feeling burst in all its fury; when the wild elements of disorder hissed and seethed in maddened turmoil, and the Republic reeled and rocked in the storm of the greatest civil strife the world has ever known; when we stood upon the brink of destruction and, looking into the abyss of the future, saw the world without an America.

For four long years the battle fronts crashed in conflict and the red tide of carnage swayed to and fro. But the end came at last, and out of the havoc and wreck of battle arose that titanic figure, Gen. Grant, who extended his hand to Gen. Lee, and said, "Let us have peace." And America was again America. And born of such a strife, when sedition was a fact, are the laws that are now upon our statute books. They have stood the test of such a time and have played their part in making our Government the example of the world.

We have completed the circle of national perils, and the virtue and intelligence and good sense of the people have ever been the safety of the Republic, and have thereby proven that the safety of our great Republic, the greatest Government in the world, lies not in its growth alone, for nations have sunk of their own ponderous weight. Not in her armies and navies, for Rome scarce knew defeat in battle, yet lives to-day but in the annals of history. It was the suppression of free speech that overthrew Rome. Not in the perfection of her laws, for laws when suppressive will be disregarded, and disregarded law is poison, eats away the very pillars on which rests the temple of liberty, undermines our independence, and stands like an evil spirit behind the Stars and Stripes, ready to strike when the moment shall come the emblem of liberty to the earth and hoist in its place the black flag of anarchy.

The safety of our Republic lies in her free institutions, in free speech, free press, and our public schools, from whose towers the Stars and Stripes proclaim the spirit of our coming men. [Applause.]

Why make laws for sedition when we have laws sufficient on our statute books? By the addition of the words "proposes" and "urges" before "incites," the "one-man act," so called—section 5334—would, in my opinion, be sufficiently strengthened to take care of any contingency. The other section, the two-man act—section 5336—is admittedly sufficient as it is. We have recently provided adequate law to deal with aliens. This bill is aimed at Americans. Ship the aliens out of the country and hang the American who is too free with his opinion!

We have downed kaiserism and imperialism and militarism over there only to try to foster it over here by the introduction of such measures as these sedition bills. I am not pleading the cause of the radical, but the cause of the Republic, its traditions, its principles. Even Germany under Bismarck could not stand such ordinances. A law was passed against being a socialist. It made socialists by the thousand, till their party grew so powerful that they caused its repeal.

James I of England said of the Puritans, "I will make them conform or I will harry them out of the country." But the outcome of his oppressive efforts was a Puritan Party, of strength sufficient "in 50 years to deliver up James's son to the executioner."

The Federalist Party fathered such a bill and it proved its death knell.

The Sterling and Graham bills or the Attorney General's bill, in the form in which it comes before the Rules Committee, in my opinion is bristling with iniquity, is unconstitutional, is a possible instrument for the greatest tyranny, and carries extreme and cruel punishment. From abridgement of speech, press, petition, and assembly, which abridgement is expressly forbidden by the Constitution, it is but a step to the everlasting "verboten" of kaiserism. With its death penalty for a radical opinion, it takes us back to hanging and burning for witchcraft. It makes a mock of our war for democracy.

It is a vicious bill in principle. It would foster an intolerable spy system and unlawful interference with individual liberty.

This proposed law insidiously interweaves what is crime with what is not crime, so that it enmeshes within its toils the users of force against the Government with those who advocate a change of law or criticize public officials, measures, or law. It would terrorize and intimidate the weak in their effort to ameliorate their condition, while it would be a screen for the outrageous profiteer to hide his gains behind and the official who disregards or slights the law to shield himself withal.

It opens the way for the surveillance of mail by the Postmaster General, which, in the hands of a petty minded official, becomes an instrument of unbearable tyranny.

Without due process of law one man has it in his discretion to bar a paper or a publication. It is not in accord with our institutions that one man shall be legislative, judicial, and executive all at once as to another's guilt or innocence without a trial and a hearing. The question as to whether a publication should or should not be barred from the mails does not enter into this at all. The objectionable feature is its centering in one man this autocratic and unusual power. It makes an implement for political use of the worst and most deplorable kind. We are a Government of law, not of men.

You can not suppress political discussion and preserve the health of the body politic. Fumes poured into the open diffuse themselves and pass harmlessly away. Part of the present unrest is due to the necessary restraint during the war. Now we are at peace. Our business is to remove the cause for unrest. If these bills were too drastic for war times, then what immense proportions do they assume for peace time? Bottle up an idea, shoot it, martyr it, and you increase it a thousandfold. That is human nature. That is history.

Truth need not fear the light. It is only untruth and half truth that gather strength from darkness. America has existed lo these many years and has not fallen, despite the many criticisms and attacks made against her and the changes advocated or instituted. Arguments must be met, not suppressed. There is no inherent danger in argument. Our sturdy Americanism is in less danger from diseased European ideas than if, through hysteria, the servants of the people should be coerced into fastening upon them this un-American thing that in the hands of stupid and petty tyrants would reduce us to the state of Germany and Russia before the terror.

Not so lurking and unheralded, but far more deadly and disastrous a maelstrom menaces us to-day than the maelstrom of 1914. Unrest from deep-seated causes shudders over the country in convulsive waves. Here it takes the form of a lynching mob not satisfied with one victim and trying to hang their mayor. In another place it sweeps out in a riot, where murder ensues, the wrong man is hung, and false reports spread class hatred. Class hatred is the ugly visaged monster we are due to meet. There is a bullheaded blindness about the ones who hold the reins that recalls the saying, "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad."

First of all, the country has been flogged into an hysteria by impostures of false patriotism, by self-constituted guardians, who wrap the flag about them, question the patriotism of others, and put them to the proof. There is an irritating quality to their loyalty that insists on being noticed and is incapable of taking for granted what has always been a sterling and integral part of every American, born and adopted—that love for our native land and our flag that goes without saying, that brooks no insult and is eager to avenge. Unwisdom and unnecessary harshness characterized the whole period. Now, when the air is pregnant with danger, when the clash of interests has been so intensified by the universal greed and selfishness of the profiteer, this bill comes a sinister menace to the sufferers from industrial unrest and to provoke strife and discontent.

It behooves the powers that be to take counsel, to temper their judgments with common sense, and not by senseless oppression of those who do not deserve it or do not come within the intent of their project render the conflagration imminent.

The patience of the people is strained to the breaking point. Profiteering is going on everywhere. Laws made to curb it are set aside at will by Cabinet heads and administration agents. Regulations are a farce. Fair-price committees are an excuse for establishing not lower but always higher prices. Excess-profits taxes, instead of helping bear the vast burden of war expenditure and lifting some of the weight from the shoulders of the masses, are only made the excuse for tremendous orgies of expenditures by every big and little profiteer in the country. Firms who never advertised before take whole pages of expensive advertising. They charge it up to the consumer anyway, and then a smaller profit shows. One firm even bought a great daily newspaper with the purpose of wrecking it because it was a competitor. They feel that now is the time to get rid of competitors and to advertise and build for the future, all at Uncle Sam's and the consumers' expense. Anything to beat the Government out of the hated excess-profits tax. The cruel circle of higher prices, higher wages, goes whirling madly on, to the betterment of no one and to the bewilderment of the poor purchasing class who have lost all hope of relief. Instead of legislation aimed at existing abuses comes this bill which would cure unrest with hangman's nooses. Instead of removing the cause, it seeks to curb the result. Department heads and the class in this country who favor this legislation are wont to question, thwart, and oppose the will of the majority.

To these the mass of the people is an unwashed rabble, filthy, ignorant, without honor or substantiality; unfit to judge what they want or what is good for them, let alone to govern themselves. They must be ruled, these think, only by and through the superior few. Exploiting the herd they consider imperative to the success of business. They can only conceive of labor as a gang corruptible to their purposes, useful only when it toils, and not entitled to reach above for greater opportunity lest they, the finely bred, the dainty, the exquisite in food and dress and living, be run over and bitten by these creatures, these swarms of ants. They who seek to create caste are the ones responsible for the hatred, the antagonism, which has been fed, fostered, multiplied by the injustice and ill-treatment they perpetrate.

The hateful force has been there long, and they who called it into existence will have to face and answer it. They have had chance after chance to read the handwriting on the wall. But instead of learning wisdom and moderation they only seek at every opportunity to force reaction; rivet cast-off shackles on limbs that have outgrown them. They have within their hands the power, the means, to work out our salvation.

If, by larger visioned response to tortured humanity, they would lighten instead of pile up the unbearable burdens of the masses, where would then be the unrest? But the only answer they make to the ever-increasing rumble of the approaching storm is higher prices, and higher, and yet higher. And now they want a law to hang any American that criticizes them or their puppets in authority.

It must be the strong, whole-souled American spirit, with its honesty, order, and intelligence, that will leaven and sweeten the whole mass. We do not want the dictatorship of the capitalist; we do not want the dictatorship of the proletariat; we do not want the dictatorship of anyone. We want the will of the majority and laws that will give opportunity for all.

The solid body of the people will not permit such yokes to be fastened upon them. They will not be confused, on the one hand, by the glittering specious promises of the agitator, nor, on the other, to be stampeded by the intimidation of the pseudo-patriotic foes of our free American institutions, but will hold steadfast to the course which destiny has intrusted to them.

The liberties of America, the right of free press, free speech, free assemblage, and free religion, the props and pillars of our democracy, are in the balance. You can not tamper with one of our liberties without jeopardizing all the others. They are too indissolubly intertwined.

The battle for democracy is never won. It goes on forever. The Magna Charta of our liberties will be wrested from our grasp if we do not guard it with constant vigilance. It is for us to keep our sanity, nor be excited or frighted by scarehead propaganda. "'Tis but the eye of childhood that fears a painted devil." Because the waves of feeling roll higher to-day than they did in similar period of unrest in history, greater temperance and moderation are imperative.

Americanism must save us.

Our Government is the servant of the people, not the people the servants of the Government. If it is right to say wise things, who shall decide what are unwise things? When truth and error grapple in an open, fair fight, who can doubt the result? Our constitutional birthright is free speech, free press, free religion, right of assembly, and petition of grievances. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FESS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on February 19, 1920, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 3620. An act to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to change the names of vessels.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on Monday, under suspension of the rules, the House passed H. R. 12507, a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus motor-propelled vehicles and motor equipment and road-making material to various services and departments of the Government and for the use of the States. For some time it has been thought by a good many Members of Congress, which thought I shared, that there was a very considerable amount of road-making machinery in the hands of the War Department that would be available for road-making purposes by the various road departments of the States of the Union. I, in my work on the Expenditures Committee, together with my colleagues, have been to various ordnance establishments over the country and there we have seen at various places large amounts of machinery that might be available for that particular purpose, and I thought that there was a good deal of it to be had for that purpose. I know that the road departments of the various States are depending largely upon this source of road-working material for the next year. Some of the leaders of the majority side I am informed have been trying for some time to ascertain how much of this material there was. Only last week I was in conference with Mr. McKENZIE, at that time working on the bill in the absence of Mr. KAHN, on this bill, and, as a result of that conference, I addressed a communication to the War Department asking that they give me in detail for use on Monday last information as to how much of this material there was. As is usual in such matters there was great delay in answering and I did not get an answer until day before yesterday, after the bill had passed the House, and on that occasion I got the following communication from the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 17, 1920.

Hon. W. J. GRAHAM,
Chairman Select Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As requested in your letter of February 12, I am attaching hereto an itemized list showing all the items called for in H. R. 9412 in connection with the transfer of surplus material to the Department of Agriculture for the Bureau of Public Roads.

I would call your particular attention to the fact that the figures given are as reported in the latest inventory from the various bureaus and operating services of the War Department. Sales of this material are being made continually, and from time to time additional surplus is reported.

I believe the attached statement will give you the information desired.

Respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

H. R. 9412 was a former bill that was rewritten as H. R. 12507.

Statement showing the total amount of material surplus as shown by the latest commodity statements of surplus issued and forwarded to the office of the Director of Sales by Ordnance Salvage Board of the Ordnance Department, December 25, 1919; Surplus Property Division of P. S. & T., December 31, 1919; the Air Service, November 30, 1919; the Signal Corps, January 31, 1920; the Chemical Warfare Service, January 31, 1920, of the items which would be turned over to the Department of Agriculture, as provided for in House resolution No. 9412. Quantities given herewith are not permanent, as sales are continually being made on this material, withdrawals from surplus to meet any requirements are being made, and additional quantities are constantly being declared surplus, all of which change these totals from day to day. The entire list of items as provided in House resolution No. 9412 are listed herewith, and where there is no surplus the word "none" is written.

Now, I would like to have you give your attention to this list. It impressed me as so remarkable that I could hardly realize the facts presented by this communication, even after I got it and looked at it.

Air compressor, outfits with power	174
Blasting machines	None.

Now, gentlemen, you will observe that in this list, which includes, I believe, all the articles that are named in the House bill that we passed, aside from the item of wagons, of which there are about 4,700, there is hardly enough of material for the needs of any one State in the Union. Now, in view of the general understanding that we all had that there was a great mass of this material, in view of the knowledge that we had that in almost every industrial plant of the country where the Ordnance and Construction Divisions were doing business they acquired a large number of these materials, the question arises in the mind of any man as to what became of the material.

There are only two things that could happen. One is that these articles have not been declared surplus by the War Department, and the other is that they have been disposed of in some way. I do not know whether the Members are familiar with the method that is pursued in declaring machinery or other articles surplus. It is this in brief: The General Staff has provided a mechanism in the War Department by which they decide on a certain program, and they say how many of a certain kind of thing must be kept for the needs of the Army which they are planning upon, and then before anything can be sold the salvage department or sales department must refer the matter back to the procurement division and have them O. K. it before it goes through. So that ultimately the War Department agency that sells this material must have the consent of the official who bought it, and in that way, if those who originally purchased it had any tacit or implied understanding with the manufacturer that this stuff was not to go back on the market, of course they can stop the sale of it by withholding their assent to having it declared surplus. In some cases I am satisfied this private arrangement existed. In my judgment, there is an immense mass of stuff in the country in these establishments that ought to be declared surplus, but it has not been done. And I think it entirely fitting and proper that some action be taken by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House, that has jurisdiction over that matter, by which some affirmative action may be taken requiring the War Department to give to the Congress an inventory of the amount of this kind of stuff they have in the country, so that Congress can determine for itself whether it is advisable to keep all of it off of the market and in these various establishments. But that is not the whole answer to the proposition. A lot of it has been frittered away and gotten rid of with very little financial return to the Government.

Some time ago I made a few remarks in the House with reference to Nitro, W. Va. I do not want to burden you with that thing, but I want to call your attention to what we discovered when we went out there as to this kind of machinery. You will remember that plant cost us $70,000,000 in cash. We sold it recently for $8,550,000 to a number of Charleston gentlemen who are holding it, I assume, for the purpose of investment and speculation.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Has the land on which this plant was constructed been paid for?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Not entirely; we have not title to a part of it yet.

Mr. KEARNS. It was taken from a number of farmers there?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Have any of them received any money at all for those farms?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Some of them have, but as yet the Government has not title to several tracts on that reservation, unless it has been acquired very recently.

Mr. KEARNS. I will say to the gentleman that in the Anchor nitrate plant, located near Cincinnati, they took 1,800 acres, and none of those men have received a cent.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I may say, just in brief, about that Anchor business, that in my judgment there are ample funds in the hands of the War Department available out of which the people who gave the land at the Anchor plant can be recompensed. There is general law for that, without any independent legislation. There are funds there to pay them, and they ought to be paid, and the only reason they are not paid is that the War Department does not pay them.

Mr. KEARNS. Why do they not?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know.

Now, let me tell you of the plant at Nitro. They sold that plant for $8,550,000, payable in installments in about 10 years. Only about $350,000 in cash has been received by the Government. There was over $9,000,000 of inventoried property there when the sale was undertaken. In addition to the $9,000,000 worth, approximately, of property, there was conveyed in that sale to these gentlemen a lot of machinery, such as in discussion here, and they have it now. I have here a list of contractors' equipment, quite a large pamphlet, that has a large list of this road-working machinery. This is a list of what we conveyed to these gentlemen at Nitro, W. Va.:

4 back fillers; immense number of parts.
Blasting equipment—3 batteries, large number of caps, large amount of fuze, 10 boxes dynamite, 140 kegs black powder.
27 clamshell buckets; large number of parts.
115 carts.
Large amount concrete tower equipment.
16 crabs and winches.
14 cranes and immense number parts.
35 derricks and immense number parts.
3 Gin. poles.
4 graders.
10 tar and pitch heaters.
183 hoes.
69 hods.
28 scaffold hooks.
30 hoists and large number parts.
210 ladders.
7 loaders and immense number parts.
45 concrete mixers and immense number parts.
6 mortar mixers and immense number parts.
Large amount pile-driver equipment.
51 plows and large number parts.
2 windlasses.
1,238 wheelbarrows.
1,432 trench braces.
1 trenching machine; immense number parts.
1 posthole digging machine and parts.
2 rock crushers and large amount equipment.
8 road machines.
47 rollers.
1 road gauge.
168 scrapers.
96 slings.
1 steam shovel and large number parts.
4 street sweepers.
143 concrete tampers.
38 tractors, mostly caterpillar, and immense number parts.
Large number motor parts.

These hoists above referred to had engines attached to them. Most of the tractors mentioned are caterpillar tractors of the most recent type.

Now, gentlemen, all these things were conveyed in that one sale where these gentlemen at Charleston bought this plant, and I am advised from the best sources of information that most of these other ordnance establishments around over the country that are being disposed of are having lumped in with the other equipment an immense amount of this road-making machinery, that is being given away practically for nothing, while the States of the Union are expecting Congress to provide for them by letting them have this machinery. When we come to the place where the law has been finally passed through the Congress we will find that there is nothing to give under it.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Is it not a fact that whereas the War Department has sold this immense plant and property for about $7,000,000 they are still keeping on hand down there numerous governmental employees, and that one of these employees is drawing a salary of $50,000 a year?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The manager for the Charleston Improvement Co., a man who before he was employed there was working for the Red Cross for nothing, as I remember, is now getting $50,000 a year to run that institution. They are acting as the agents of the Government in the disposal of the plant, and I assume that ultimately the Congress will find that the $50,000 a year is taken out of the expenses of conducting the sale of that property down there.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was very much amused by the remarks just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], chairman of the Committee to Investigate Expenditures in the War Department. I was very much impressed by the information which he conveyed to this House. That information consisted principally of propounding questions to the House as to things that he supposed were transpiring in the War Department about which he said he had no information. Gentlemen on his side of the House for many, many months have been clamoring because it was said that the War Department had on hand great masses of all kinds of material which ought to be disposed of and turned back into the useful lines of commerce. They have been demanding by resolutions that the Secretary of War be required to sell such products, and after the resolutions have been adopted and the Secretary of War is notified that such articles must be disposed of the gentleman from Illinois comes back into the House and makes a complaint here because the Secretary of War has on hand so few of the very articles which he and his committee have been declaring should have been disposed of. They have been denouncing the Secretary of War for his neglect in not selling supplies and now condemn him for having on hand too little.

I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that if he really wants to serve the Government of the United States, I would suggest to him that his committee, clothed as it is with extraordinary powers, would do well to summon witnesses, to compel their attendance, to produce books and papers; that his committee will better serve its purpose if they busy themselves with finding out some of the things that he is always inquiring about on the floor of this House. If the gentleman from Illinois and some of his colleagues would exhibit the same zeal in really finding out facts that they exhibit in their orations upon the floor of this House and in their interviews in the public press, if they will talk more with witnesses and less with reporters and political press agents, the gentleman from Illinois, instead of coming on the floor of this House and making inquiries and propounding interrogatories to us, would be able to impart to this House some information.

I, for one, as a Democrat on this side of the House, earnestly and sincerely hope that if the committee investigating war expenditures find any crookedness, any criminality, or wrongdoing in the War Department, the committee will report the facts to the district attorneys throughout the land and to the Federal grand juries, and that they will pillory at the bar of public opinion those who are guilty of that wrongdoing. But I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that no useful purpose can be subserved by coming on the floor of this House from day to day simply finding fault, or rather making reports without suggesting action, as the gentleman's committee did some time ago; that such action can serve no purpose except to inflame those minds who are abroad in the land who are already preaching that the Government has done all the things that are wrong, and that this existing system of ours is topsy-turvy and is ready for an industrial or social revolution.

Of course, gentlemen of the minority and the majority both well know that in the prosecution of a great war waste is inevitable. There can be no escape from extravagance when a great, busy agricultural and industrial people turn their activities from the ways of peace into creating a great war machine. When we lay aside our usual occupations and, under the press of necessity and under the spur of hurry and of speed, divert our activities into making war machines, of course there is going to be waste and extravagance and inefficiency. And I want to say to the gentlemen on that side that that is not a condition that is unusual or peculiar to the war that has just come to an end. Even during the war for our independence such was the case; it was so during the Civil War, and in a lesser degree it was so during the Spanish-American War. Those conditions existed. But as the result of this Great War we hear now, throughout the land, talk of unrest, social unrest, industrial unrest.

I do not believe that we are in any danger of any serious disruption of our political or social system. We hear people talking about social revolution, and repressive measures are suggested as a remedy. I am not alarmed by that. I do not believe that we are going to have revolution. If anybody contemplates revolution let them start something, and the American people and the American Government will take care of that situation when it arises in a manner that will leave no doubt that the United States is an unhealthy place for anarchy. I believe it is all talk and buncombe. But I do want to suggest that reports and statements of the character made by the gentleman from Illinois a little while ago are not calculated to reduce the tension under which the people of the United States are now laboring. I am not hostile to the gentleman or to his committee. I trust that they will go out and find out something, and if anybody has violated the law, prosecute them.

If any crooked work has been done over at Nitro, W. Va., for God's sake go to the grand juries and tell them about it. I assume the sale of the property at Nitro, about which the gentleman complains so loudly, was conducted in accordance with law. I assume the property was advertised for sale. I assume everybody had an opportunity to bid on it. I know nothing about the proposition; but if anything is wrong about it I challenge the gentleman's committee to take those steps which are provided by law for the bringing of the guilty parties to justice. The assumptions of legality and regularity always exist until overcome by contrary proof. The gentleman's committee was appointed to secure such contrary proof, if it exists. Gentlemen on that side would have complained bitterly if the plant had not been sold. Now that it has been contracted for sale they are equally displeased at the sale.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEARNS. What I was complaining about was that the people who owned this land in West Virginia and Ohio for these two nitrate plants had their land taken from them. They were forced to move from the land, and they have never received any money for it. That is what I was complaining about. Does the gentleman know why they have not received any compensation for the crops that were destroyed and for the lands that were taken?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know why, in the particular cases, but I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if any of them resided in my State or district I should find out about it. I have had no occasion to investigate that situation, but if the gentleman from Ohio can not find out the information I commend him most heartily to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], who has at his command an instrumentality for bringing even the Secretary of War before his committee and putting him on the stand and asking him, "Why have not you paid those people out in Ohio and West Virginia for their land?" The gentleman well knows that under the Constitution those citizens are guaranteed compensation for whatever of their property may have been taken from them by the Government.

Mr. KEARNS. I have asked the Secretary of War about this some half dozen times in the last year, and the Secretary of War has never told me how any of them can get their money.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will tell the gentleman that one reason why they have been delayed so long in getting their money is that the gentleman's party on this floor last May, the moment it got into power, was so afraid that the Secretary of War would do something wrong that it passed through this House an amendment to an appropriation bill providing that no portion of money theretofore appropriated in the various appropriation bills then in force should be used by the Secretary of War in payment for land or for camp sites and things of that kind; and, while I do not know the particular facts in the case which he is inquiring about, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that if he will investigate the matter, no doubt, he will find that that alone was an insuperable impediment to whatever action the Secretary of War might otherwise have taken.

Mr. KEARNS. I will grant that the Republican Party was responsible for that part of it.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. KEARNS. But the Secretary of War and the Democratic Party were responsible for the other class of claims, those of tenants who were raising crops on this land—as we call it, on shares, getting a part of the crop. This crop was taken from those tenants—not the land, but the crop.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand.

Mr. KEARNS. And they have never received as much as a nickel. How can the gentleman excuse the Secretary of War for that?

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Ohio should go down to the War Department. If he will do that he will find, as a part of that organization, a number of claims boards whose duty it is to adjust claims of that character. Within the very recent past I have had occasion to inquire about claims pertaining to another Army camp, and I found those claims were in the course of liquidation, and that a great number of them had already been settled and paid.

Mr. KEARNS. But none of them at Anchor, Ohio, have been paid?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know about Anchor, Ohio. I do not know about those particular cases, but I would recommend to the citizens of Anchor that they ask their Congressman to go down and investigate those cases and bring them to the attention of the Secretary of War.

Mr. KEARNS. They have been brought to the attention of the Secretary of War a dozen times.

Mr. CONNALLY. I can not discuss any particular case, because I do not know the facts. It may be that those people out at Anchor, Ohio, want more for their property than they are entitled to receive.

Mr. KEARNS. No; they do not.

Mr. CONNALLY. It may be that their claims have not been presented in the manner required by the regulations of the War Department. I am not acquainted with the facts of the case, and can not, of course, answer as to them.

Mr. KEARNS. They have had three different investigations by officers sent from the War Department to this city to investigate those claims. On three different occasions the owners of this property—that is, of the crops that were taken—and the officers representing the War Department have agreed as to the amount that was due. The first agreement was a year ago. When the claims were presented the Secretary of War said he had no funds out of which to pay them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course the Secretary of War is not responsible for the lack of appropriations. That is the fault of Congress, of which the gentleman's party is in control. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that if he has constituents whose claims have been adjudicated by the War Department and the amounts of those claims have been fixed, and the Secretary of War can not pay them because he has no funds, that the gentleman communicate with the steering committee on his side of the House and with the Committee on Appropriations and get an appropriation to pay these claims.

Mr. KEARNS. But we all know that he does have funds.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, well, I can not yield any further.

Mr. KEARNS. Just for this one statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. KEARNS. When the contract was made at Anchor for the furnishing of materials by some corporation, 50 per cent of the value of the property to be delivered was paid before it was ever delivered. Now, if the War Department can find money to pay for property before it is delivered, why can they not find money to pay for the land and the crops that they have taken?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, that is clear. Of course, after the Secretary has spent an appropriation he can replenish it from some unknown source! The gentleman can imagine that while he might have had an appropriation, he may have exhausted the appropriation in purchases or payment of claims. Because he paid out 50 per cent of it to somebody is no reason why he has got the other 50 per cent.

Mr. KEARNS. They are paying for property that is being delivered there to-day. They have found some money to pay for property.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Ohio contradicts himself.

Mr. KEARNS. No; I do not.

Mr. CONNALLY. First he says they have not been paying for property, and now he says they are paying for it.

Mr. KEARNS. Property delivered to go into buildings and ordnance and other things delivered there.

Mr. CONNALLY. In reply to the gentleman I can not tell about the various claims in the War Department. Of course, different kinds of items are provided for in separate appropriations, and one fund may be exhausted while another still has a balance. I commend the gentleman to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], who has at his beck and call a committee with inquisitorial powers that can get the information which the gentleman desires. I trust that he will get accurate and correct information, and if he does he will find that the Secretary is ready to pay those claims which have been adjudicated, if he has funds. But I want to suggest the fact that the claimants in Ohio had to have three investigations before they were able to fix the amount, and that might be said to be one of the reasons why they have not been more promptly paid.

Mr. KEARNS. Each one of the investigators agreed that the farmers whose crop had been taken should have a certain amount.

Mr. CONNALLY. What made them send back twice three officers to settle the claims which had been settled by the first board?

Mr. KEARNS. I do not know; they rejected the first and second.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will yield, let me say that the reason that the claims have not been paid is that there was a provision put in the sundry civil bill, passed in the extra session of Congress, which in a way repealed prior legislation and prevented the War Department from paying these claims.

Mr. KEARNS. That was for the purchase of land—I am talking about the payment of these claimants for crops.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg you gentlemen not to go away saying to yourselves that I am making a partisan speech. I am not. I trust that the committee will really find out the facts, will lay them before this House and before the American people, but I am awfully tired, as I am sure Members on that side are, of this eternal growling and grumbling about things which the committee does not seem to know much about. If there is anything wrong, for God's sake turn the light on and put the wrongdoers on the rack, but do not come here like a garrulous and quarrelsome old woman with the rheumatism, continually growling and whining about the War Department. You know, as I must know, that the War Department of this Government was called upon to perform a task which in its proportions was never equaled in the history of the world. [Applause.] You know it if you know anything. You know that the little organization we had in the way of an Army, with all of the immense expansion entailed by the emergency, with the inefficiency of civilians called from civil life to take up new duties, could not function perfectly and properly in every particular. I declare that the story of the War Department in that great struggle and its achievements reads like the moving chapters of an enchanted tale. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. IRELAND] may have permission to extend his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. IRELAND] may have permission to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a few plain words on a subject that I consider of vital moment, and that is the question of some bonus for the soldiers of the World War. On the 9th of November, 1919, I introduced a bill to give a $500 bonus to these soldiers, and I understand a number of such bills have been introduced.

Shortly after that the American Legion met in national convention in Minneapolis, and they failed to indorse by official action any of these bills. There are in all four organizations of World War soldiers—the American Legion, the Private Soldiers and Sailors League, the Veterans' Legion, and the Rank and File. Later the national committee of the American Legion met at Indianapolis and changed the attitude—if they had the power to do so—of the former decision of the league. For this reason Congress is not to blame for the delay in considering relief legislation.

DO IT NOW.

Reports are now coming from all over the country—and I am getting letters from Maine to California—demanding a bonus. I do not know why they should write so many letters to me, probably because of the fact that at one time in my life I had the honor of being a soldier. I believe there is real merit in this claim for aid to our World War soldiers, and whatever is done ought to be done now.

After the Civil War, which was of four years' duration, in which we had from first to last 2,212,272 soldiers enlisted, the Government did nothing for our soldiers. I bear witness that in the Forty-third Congress, in the winter of 1873-74, Gen. James A. Garfield, then the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, afterwards President of the United States, made an address on this floor, in which he stated that the total appropriation for pensions for the soldiers of the Civil War that year was only $26,000,000. We received no substantial recognition at all until 14 years after the war was over. This neglect imposed great hardships upon the discharged veterans.

I submit a letter which is a fair specimen of the letters I have received. It is in the Toledo Blade of February 18. This soldier saw real service overseas:

If the American Legion is not going to make a political issue of the mistreatment of soldiers, both in the service and after their return home, when they were insulted with the mere beggar's hand-out of $60, then I ask of what use is the American Legion? What is it organized for?

I served 23 months on 6 fronts, and was in 2 drives—Argonne and Ypres. I am not a crab, but wish to express my views, as I have the right to. Can any fair-thinking citizen say we received a fair deal? Had we 100 per cent efficiency in the management of the Government instead of about 40 per cent efficiency we could have received a much higher bonus, and it would have cost the Government much less to prosecute the war at that.

I see many of our boys are still wearing their uniforms. Probably have never since they got home had money enough to buy a suit. One big trouble is that the people can't visualize what soldiers went through in the war. If they could understand, they would hang their heads in shame at the measly $60 we were presented upon our return.

REDUCE THE ARMY TO A PEACE BASIS.

According to reports the Military Affairs Committee of the House has provided for a Regular Army in time of peace of 250,000 men and about 18,000 officers. This is the largest army ever before organized in peace times. Why not reduce this Army of wasteful idlers to a rational military force and give to our victorious soldiers a substantial relief measure? That will not only show the Nation's gratitude, but will appeal in duty and justice to every patriotic citizen. If Congress will reduce our Regular Army to a sensible peace basis, we can then give to every honorably discharged soldier of the World War a bonus of $500 without increasing one dollar the aggregate appropriation for the Army and Navy, as now proposed by the Military and Naval Committees of the House and Senate.

WHY UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING?

All lovers of peace will regret in sorrow that the important Military Committee of the House of Representatives has indorsed in the Army bill, by a vote of 11 to 9, a provision for universal military training. According to the estimate made by the leader on the Republican side of the House, we are liable to squander $900,000,000 on this worse than useless project at a time when there is a universal demand for production of the necessaries of life in order to reduce the high cost of living. Taking the farmers' boys away from the fields, the laborers from the shops, and the miners from the mines in order to build up a military autocracy in this country is criminal idiocy. All this in imitation of the deposed German Kaiser and the imperialistic monarchies of the Old World.

LINCOLN'S VIEW OF MILITARISM.

The stars never looked down upon a more deplorable spectacle than Europe presents to-day. And the country that inaugurated universal military training and a universal preparedness for war—the German Empire—is realizing in universal ruin the inevitable result of imperialism and militarism—twin devils of greed and brutality. And shall the United States imitate the fatal mistakes of the former German Kaiser? Every patriotic American with brains enough to think says "No." Shall our stalwart young men be taken from the peaceful pursuits of profitable industry and have their well-directed energy and ambition turned into destructive pursuits? In the language of Abraham Lincoln, fix their plastic minds "upon the exceeding brightness of military glory; that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood; that serpent's eye that charms to destroy."

Restored production is absolutely essential to normal economic conditions. Hence to take our stalwart young men from the farms and shops and mines to join the great array of nonproducers and idlers, now in the nonproducing class, and add $900,000,000 burden to the bent backs of the taxpayers is an utterly indefensible policy.

WHY PREPARE FOR WAR?

Why is it to-day, when we are at peace with all the world and burdened by a national debt that staggers belief, that we should again prepare for war? How utterly idiotic is the idea that any foreign European nation, exhausted in fighting men, with business and industry paralyzed, loaded down with a debt that can not be paid, with its lands filled with millions of widows and five times as many fatherless children, with 6,000,000 maimed and crippled soldiers—legless, armless, sightless, and insane—who have escaped from the damp pity of the trenches and lurid hell of battle, are going to make an impossible crossing of 4,000 miles of ocean with an army that is impossible to equip or transport and attack 120,000,000 people of the United States between whom there is no quarrel.

JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRACY COMMENDED.

The hour is due to strike the death knell of militarism and imperialism. The hour has come to call back the Republic of our fathers to its own. The hour is at hand to cast off the greed of empire and return once more to the plain simplicity of Jeffersonian democracy. Let us hope and pray that in this epoch-making year a second Jefferson will arise, inspired with the same irrepressible genius of democracy, and redeem this Nation from imperialism and militarism and vampirism now sucking drop by drop the lifeblood of a great, brave, patient people.

RECOMMENDS OLD-AGE PENSIONS.

The uppermost and most vital question before Congress to-day is how best to deal with the acute conflicts between capital and labor and to appease the general unrest. In my judgment an old-age pension law, while not a sovereign remedy, would prove a valuable aid.

I introduced an "old age" pension bill in January, 1916, and have reintroduced this bill in this Congress. The United States is the only great country around the world, except Russia, that has failed to enact legislation for the care and comfort of its worn-out workers. The men and women of the shops, mines, and farms, who produce all our wealth and who have made this the richest Nation around the world, are treated with total indifference after their working days are over and turned out to frostbitten grass and cold neglect like a worn-out dray horse. And yet our orators and statesmen call this the only great Republic on earth, where the people—the plain people, if you please—have the rule and destiny of the Republic in their keeping. Nothing would do such valuable service in healing the constant conflicts between capital and labor as a system of old-age pensions, such as an English Province, under an English King, inaugurated way out on the broad Pacific Ocean. Not only would this benign alleviation of the woes of the workers heal the antagonism now so apparent in labor strikes, but it would be an inspiration of patriotism to every worthy worker in the United States. Our flag would then be a hope and a symbol of helpfulness, saying to every son of toil be true, be faithful to your trust, and when old age comes on apace this flag with the shining stars will be your protector and a grateful Nation will help you to make your last days on earth comfortable and full of gratitude. As a matter of national defense, it would be a cognate inspiration to every worker.

Under our form of government, with all power not conceded to the Federal Government reserved to the States, it is not within the jurisdiction of Congress to enact contributory old-age pensions. Hence my bill is based on the system successfully adopted in New Zealand. How generously or how justly have we provided for the benevolent succor of our great army of industrial workers after their working days are over? Is the proposition to take care in their old age of the men and women whose industry and skill made this the richest Nation around the world to be given no serious consideration, when the leading monarchies of the Old World have made this humane legislation the basic idea of their economic policy?

OLD-AGE PENSIONS IN FRANCE.

The law establishing a universal compulsory system of old-age insurance for workmen and employees in France was enacted in March, 1910, and promulgated in April of that year. The law is an extension of the law of July 14, 1905, which established a right to relief on the part of all persons over 70 years of age.

The old-age pension law of Great Britain provides in brief that every British subject of 20 years' standing and residence in the United Kingdom who has attained the age of 70 years and is without a yearly income in excess of £31 10s. ($157.50) shall, on application, receive a weekly pension ranging in about 1s. to 5s. To the continental island of New Zealand belongs the credit of being the first country in the world to establish a straight-out old-age pension system.

After the subject had been agitated about two years an act was passed in 1898, going into effect on the 1st of November of that year, which provided for the payment of old-age pensions out of the general revenues of the Government to persons duly qualified under the law, without contributions from either the beneficiaries or employers. This pension is fixed at $130 per year for laborers of either sex over 65 years. The first State of the Commonwealth of Australia inaugurated old-age pensions in 1901. Later, in 1908, the Commonwealth Parliament established old-age pensions for all the old worn-out workers in this great continental island, ranging as high as $260 a year.

Belgium: Pensions are paid at the age of 65 years, after 30 years' service, or in case of physical disability after 10 years' service.

Holland: Pensions are paid to all employees reaching 65 years of age, or for disability after 10 years' service.

Sweden: Pensions are paid at the age of 65 years after 35 years' service.

Switzerland: Each of the 22 Cantons has a different civil-pension system. Teachers are the only federal employees who are pensioned.

Turkey: After 30 years' service a pension may be claimed if, through sickness or bodily infirmity, the employee is unable to attend to the duties of his office.

Egypt: A service pension may be claimed after 25 years' service. All employees are retired by law at the age of 65.

Japan: Pensions are paid after 15 years' service, beginning at one-quarter of the salary and increasing one two-hundred-and-fortieth for each year of service over 15. Any official may retire at the age of 60 years.

Even big railroad corporations, that are said to have no soul, have inaugurated old-age pensions. The Baltimore & Ohio was the first railroad in the United States to grant a pension to superannuated workmen. This was in 1884. The Chicago & North Western Railroad inaugurated an old-age pension in 1900, pensioning employees of 30 years' service who reach the age of 70 years 1 per cent of the average monthly pay. The Lake Shore, the Pennsylvania, and other trunk lines have adopted service pensions for faithful employees when their days of usefulness are past, all based on merit and long service. We have bills before Congress that are meritorious pensioning the old and faithful clerks who have served the Government for a quarter of a century. My bill makes no distinction between the faithful and long-service employees of the Government and the faithful and long-service workers who do the world's work and produce the world's wealth in our mines and factories and fields.

The following important railroads have adopted the old-age pension system: Chicago & Northwestern Railroad, the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railroad, the Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad, the Houston & Texas Central Railroad, the Illinois Central Railroad, the Oregon Short Line, the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, the Rock Island System, the Southern Pacific Railroad, the Union Pacific, the New York Central Lines. All together these trunk lines aggregate 45 per cent of the entire railroad mileage of the United States. They provide for a liberal pension on the retirement of their faithful employees. Nearly 1,000,000 men are employed. They provide, on an average, a pension of 30 per cent of the salary of the employee for the past 10 years. Retirement is permitted at 65 years and compulsory at 70. No contributions are required from railroad workers.

WHAT THE FLAG STANDS FOR.

Did it ever occur to you that a national flag is chiefly valuable for what it stands for? The flag of a Republic like ours is typical of the Nation's purpose, in the line of justice, equality, and the humanities. The purpose of a people or a nation are only reflected in its laws. Humane legislation is the surest inspiration for loyalty of the men and women who do the world's work. Let us recognize the claims of the industrial classes in the speedy passage of alleviating laws. This would inspire a more sympathetic admiration for the flag and a deeper devotion to our best ideals of democracy than unmeaning flag waving and skyrocket oratory, exploiting extravagant armies and navies, and domination of the big oceans. This bill is constitutional and meritorious, and if enacted into law will appease and mollify the acute conflicts between capital and labor now threatening our industrial life. It will do more to mollify the conflicts between capital and labor than all the labor laws of the past. It will not only give hope and comfort to our great army of wealth producers but will place this Nation on a par in benign legislation with the hereditary monarchies of the Old World.

WHY COMPULSORY MILITARY SERVICE?

England had just abolished compulsory military service. Compulsory military training and compulsory military service are yoked sinister evils, absolutely hostile to democracy. Are we less democratic than Great Britain under a hereditary King?

At the close of our great Civil War Gen. Grant, then the foremost soldier of the modern world, approved the muster out of all the volunteers, reducing our standing army to 25,000 men. There was a powerful and aggressive element in the North clamoring for a war with England. During the war Confederate cruisers, built in English shipyards and armed in English arsenals, had driven American commerce from the seas and oceans of the world, but President Grant favored the Geneva court of arbitration.

Lord Morley, in his life of Gladstone, says:

> The treaty of Washington and the Geneva arbitration stand out as the most notable victories in the nineteenth century in the noble art of preventive diplomacy and the most signal exhibition of self-command in two or three of the great powers of the western world.

At Appomattox Grant stood on fame's topmost pinnacle the foremost man in all the world, but in the Geneva award he was greater than at Appomattox. [Applause.]

WHY NOT PREPARE FOR PEACE?

We are to-day at peace with all the world. Why should we prepare for war when we have never had a war in over a century and a quarter of national life that was not of our own seeking? No nation on either side of the Atlantic has ever attacked us when we were numerically weak.

We are at peace with all the world. Let us strive, as becomes the citizens of a Christian nation, to make that peace permanent and perpetual. Let us put aside all thoughts of gun and sword as unworthy our traditions and history and look to a future wherein the flag of our shining stars of States shall be a beacon light beckoning our people to peaceful pursuits and social and moral betterment. The great present, with its glowing zeal for humanity, with a culture deepened and broadened by science and enriched by all history, with its strong-winged soul of prophecy hot and glowing with blood beats of a realized brotherhood of man claims us and calls us to stand by the ancient faith. [Applause.]

It is the verdict of universal history that no military nation was ever a moral or progressive nation. Peace is constructive, war is destructive; peace means prosperity and progress, war is hell and uproar.

APPENDIX.

The following letter from a devout disciple of the lowly Nazarene is a trifle radical, but has some illuminating opinions on a pair of noted historical characters:

OBERLIN, OHIO, February 21, 1920.

HON. ISAAC SHERWOOD.

DEAR SIR: For several years it has been my wish and intention to write you to express my admiration for the attitude you have taken on various occasions on important public measures and questions.

When our country was rushed into the infernal World War, contrary to the earnest wish of the overwhelming majority of our people, and it was announced that the House had voted, I said, "First of all, I want to see the roll of honor," and I saw your name among the fifty or so noble men who had stood out against the prevailing madness. I took note that you had served in our Grand Army for the defense of the Union, a cause that demanded the enthusiasm and devotion of every true patriot and every real American. I also took note of several other interesting facts—that Elihu Root, who had been roaring for war and wanted to punish anyone who was not in favor of war, that Mr. Root was 19 years old when the Civil War began, but he never offered himself or lifted a finger in defense of his country in those trying times. Also, that Joseph Choate, former ambassador to England, who was unceasing in his efforts to crowd us into the war for defense of his beloved England—that Mr. Choate had been 26 years old when the Civil War broke out, and that he, like Mr. Root, made no move to come to the defense of his country. Also, that in one of those Eastern organizations for pushing our country into the war, like the National Security League, made up largely of old men, the only one who had come to the defense of his country in the Civil War was Mr. Putnam. I also noted that Senator Works, who voted against our going into the World War, had been a patriot and had enlisted for the defense of his country at the age of about 17 years, and served till the end of that war. One could comment at great length on these and similar facts.

I am a Presbyterian minister and far from being a socialist, but I note with pride and satisfaction that recently you had the spirit of old Americanism sufficiently to cause you to vote against the exclusion of Victor Berger from the House of Representatives. The reactionary measures that are being pushed and the acts of oppression and suppression that are being taken in our country are making socialists by the thousands, and will make hosts of men much worse than socialists.

Very respectfully and sincerely, yours,

(REV.) HENRY A. TODD.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN QUOTED.

Benjamin Franklin, the leading scientist and most thoroughgoing patriot of the Revolutionary epoch, said:

Freedom of speech is a principal pillar of free government; when this support is taken away the constitution of a free society is dissolved and tyranny is erected on its ruins.

Mr. SISSON. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I hope I may be allowed to proceed without interruption, and I wish to say in the beginning that I will not yield to interruptions during the short time I have.

I would not intrude upon the time of the committee this afternoon but for the fact that on account of the very limited time that has been granted for debate on the conference report on the railroad bill I will be unable to get very much time then. Therefore I have sought this opportunity to give expression in a meager way to what I think about the conference report as a general proposition.

I have never in my life seen a bill reported by any committee of Congress or reported by any conference committee that was as big as this bill or that contained as many provisions as this bill contains, with which I agreed in toto. I do not agree to this bill in toto. In other words, I do not agree with every provision in this bill.

But conscious of my responsibility here as a Representative at this time, who intends to do what he conceives to be his duty regardless of threats that may come from the outside, regardless of the threats that may come from any organization, either among the owners or among the employees of the carriers, conscious that whatever action I may take and whatever vote I may cast will be subject to criticism and subject to being misunderstood; believing and knowing that something must be done in this situation between now and the 1st day of March or chaos and bankruptcy will occur in one of the greatest of all of our industries, I am going to vote for the adoption of this conference report to-morrow. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] to-day made a speech here upon this floor that would have been proper probably in some places, but certainly it was not proper to be made here. It was an appeal that should have fallen upon deaf ears in a body like this. When a man gets up here and all the argument that he has to make against the adoption of a bill by this House is to try to throw fear into its Members by saying that they will be misunderstood and defeated if they vote for it, it were better that he had not spoken here. [Applause.]

Last night over in the majority room of the House Office Building occurred a most remarkable meeting. Sentiments were expressed there by men outside of Congress, and some inside, that I had hoped would never find their way into this Capitol. There was talk of the autocracy of capital. There was talk of Members of this Congress being swayed because they are afraid to go in the face of capital. They preached against this bill and against what are called the labor provisions of this bill. Every man in this presence, every man in this country who understands the situation, knows that it is not the labor provisions to which Mr. Gompers and his organization object. [Applause.] No man or set of men in America to-day can write a bill for the return of the railroads to their owners that Mr. Gompers and the other labor leaders will indorse. [Applause.] They want the Plumb plan. They want a two years' extension of Government control. And why do they want a two years' extension of Government control? It has been hard enough for the House committee and the Senate committee and the conference committee to unscramble the situation which has existed as long as it has.

These men know that if this situation goes on and if the railroads are held in Government control for two years more, it means what they are after, which is Government ownership, and Government ownership only. Has it come to pass in this country that the free representatives of a free people can be scared by the threat of Mr. Gompers or anyone else who represents less than 5 per cent of the people of this land? The fear that would come to me would be to vote against this bill and to have this riot of waste go on for two years more. [Applause.] I believe, my friends, that the time has come in this country when the people who are free and who intend to remain free, who sent their sons to the battle fields of France, there to bleed and die that autocracy in Europe may be destroyed, are going to see to it that the 95 per cent of the people of this land rule it, and not the autocracy of the 5 per cent. [Applause.] The issue is going to be joined pretty soon. This is only one of the threats with which we have come in contact. A few years ago, when we had up the antistrike provision before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I heard Mr. Gompers make the defiant declaration that if that committee reported that bill and Congress adopted it, he served notice on them in advance that he would violate that law. Surely after making such a declaration as that he can not be considered a wise and a sane leader. [Applause.]

There are some things in this bill that I do not like, but there are so many things in it that are vital, that are necessary, that I can not meet my responsibility as a Representative here and vote against the bill.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] said the railroads say that they need something, the conference committee say that they need something, but labor does not need anything. All they ask is that the Government keep the railroads for two years; that the public does not ask anything in this matter and that it is only Wall Street that asks for favors in this bill. Then he went on to say, "I have already demonstrated to you and convinced you that nothing needs to be done."

He did not convince any sane man who had ever studied this question, who had intelligence enough to understand it, that something must not be done. Every man who understands this situation, every man who has studied this question, knows that if the railroads go back to private ownership on the 1st day of March without additional legislation, within 90 days all the railroads, with the possible exception of three or four, will either be in bankruptcy or in the hands of receivers.

If I know anything I know that the people of this land are sick and tired of Government operation of the railroads, which has brought a higher rate, placed millions of additional debt on the backs of an already overburdened and tax-weary people, and which has given us a service poorer and more inefficient than we have ever known before.

The cost of material has gone up; labor has been increased practically a billion dollars. If the railroads go back to private ownership on the 1st of March without anything having been done the prewar rates will go into effect and war wages will remain in effect.

Much complaint has been made about the guaranty provisions in this bill. I would rather it could have been worked out otherwise. My primitive opinion and my primitive prejudices are against a proposition like that, but my judgment is a judgment of the cloister and not a judgment of one who is put up against the real situation and those who may have some understanding of that situation.

Those of us who live in the sparsely settled sections of the country where there are few railroads, where we know that in the past five years not a thousand miles of railroads have been built in the whole country, where we need railroads, where we need efficient service, know that if the Interstate Commerce Commission sets a rate under which the Union Pacific and the Santa Fe can make only a fair per cent on the value of their property, those small roads will starve to death.

They serve communities and they should not be torn up and these communities not be allowed to prosper and not have service. If we set a rate that will make a fair return on the investment of the capital of weak roads, then the Union Pacific and roads of that character will get an unreasonably high return. I say I do not like the guaranty feature, I do not like the name of it, but I have not got anything better to offer at this time. Have you? You who are going to vote against this bill, do you have anything better to offer? Do you want either one of the two bills that have been introduced and urged before our committee as a substitute? Do you want the two years' extension of Government control introduced by Mr. SIMS, of Tennessee? Do you want the Plumb plan as introduced by Mr. SIMS? Do you want the Government to bond itself for $20,000,000,000 and turn over to the employees of the railroad all the railroads in the country to please Mr. Plumb and Mr. Gompers?

This bill as much insures and as much guarantees that the rich roads shall not receive more than a certain amount as it guarantees that the poor roads shall receive a reasonable amount. It takes off from the rich roads and insures that the poor roads will amount to something.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen of this committee who are in the sections of the country that have the short-line railroads that there has never been a time since railroading first began when the short lines, the originating lines, have been done justice. The trunk lines to which they have been feeders have handed out to them in the division of freight a small amount—many times and most of the time upon a mileage apportionment—and anyone who has ever studied the question knows that the short line or originating carrier can not live on a mileage basis in the division of freight.

This bill says that hereafter a mileage basis shall not be the controlling factor in the division of rates between the originating carrier and the trunk line, and that the Interstate Commerce Commission is given power to make a division that may take care of the roads that originate the traffic, the roads that go out into virgin territory and develop our land, roads that are as essential to the life and prosperity of the country as the trunk lines. That is one provision I would ask you who live in the far West and many sections of the South to think well of before you vote against the bill.

Gentlemen here say that when the value of the railroads is set, poor securities and watered stock will enter into the value, and yet when you vote against this conference report you will vote against the only bill you have got a chance to vote for that will bring about a house cleaning among the railroads. This conference report contains practically word for word the bill that we passed in this House in 1914, with practical unanimity, known as the Rayburn stock and bond bill, which says that hereafter before any railroad of this land shall issue any new securities, put them on the market, it shall come before the Interstate Commerce Commission and under oath set forth the reason why it desires this issue, and before it can issue and put on the market these securities the Interstate Commerce Commission, a capable governing body, must itself pass upon the question. When you vote against this bill you vote against a law that will cause this house cleaning among the railroads, that will cause the railroad securities, instead of being hawked around as watered stock and as spurious securities, to stand for value and mean something.

No one in the future can say that railroad stocks and bonds are "wind and water" as has been the case too often in the past. Not only shall the issuance be supervised but after the stocks and bonds are put upon the market and sold the commission has the power to call the railroads' managers before them and have proof made that the money was spent for the purposes set out in the application for authority to issue the securities. It seems strange that the men who at present are the loudest in their talk about watered stock should be opposing a bill in toto which carries this most necessary feature and which will cure the very evil of which they complain.

Some argue against this provision that it will take away from the State commissions their right to control these issues and say that it is a violation of the rights of the States. I, too, stand for State rights, and I contend that my State, that has had an efficient stock and bond law for many years, has the right to be protected against the States that have no such laws. I would also call the attention of these gentlemen to the fact that the convention of State railroad commissioners of the United States have indorsed over and over again this very measure which insures that all stocks and bonds shall be regulated and also insures that there shall be uniformity.

Many other provisions of this report I would like to discuss, but my time is too limited to permit.

Men talk here of a guaranty for six months. All that we do in this bill is to extend the standard return for six months, which time it will take the Interstate Commerce Commission to work out a new rate structure.

Government control and operation of the railroads has been a costly and in many ways a bitter experience. It has cost the Government many million dollars a month more than the revenues of the roads to keep them going. Before this experience many good men were drawn to the belief that there was virtue in Government ownership. But this experiment has cured them. If the millions that we have lost in this business had demonstrated to these misguided, although patriotic and otherwise thoughtful, citizens the futility and insanity of Government ownership, the money has not been lost entirely in vain. It demonstrates a truth as old as man—when the laws of health are violated the violator will suffer for it. When governing powers violate a fundamental economic policy, the penalty must also be paid in fullest measure. It is the business of government to regulate and govern business, not go into business.

Mr. Chairman, this is only one of the many measures that I want to see passed in this and the succeeding Congress. I want to see all of these war powers repealed and the Government get out of these expensive and socialistic businesses. I want to get back to normal. When these matters are attended to then I want to see our Americanization law strengthened. I believe in an America for Americans. This country is too small for any man or set of men who pay allegiance to any other Government or any other flag. This is no place for the man who violates our law—be he high or low, rich or poor. The anarchist and the Bolshevist shall go. This is a mighty good country because 99 per cent of the people, regardless of section or party, are good citizens and loyal. And when a crisis comes, they will stand together. When the red hand of anarchy and lawlessness is thrust toward the throat of liberty, patriots will forget their differences.

But back to the question of this report. Yes, it is easy to vote against a bill like this. Many provisions will be criticized. If I were willing to shirk my responsibility and wanted to go in the path of least resistance, knowing that many provisions of this bill will be criticized and that I would be asked why did you pass this, why did you pass that, and why did you pass the other, I could excuse myself very easily by saying that I voted against the whole bill.

But realizing the situation we are now in, knowing that it is going to be destructive if legislation is not passed before the railroads are returned to private ownership, I can not, feeling as I do, take upon my shoulders the responsibility of not being willing to share here with my fellows whatever responsibility there comes in passing upon this question and solving it as I believe for the best interests of all concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. In connection with the consideration of this legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill I want to express my appreciation of the splendid work done on the bill by the members of the committee, and particularly the subcommittee. The Members on both sides have worked earnestly and faithfully on this very difficult piece of appropriation legislation. There is not an appropriation bill which comes before the House which is quite so intricate and difficult as is the legislative bill. It involves the fortunes of a very large number of people and relates to many and diversified portions of the public service, and when the time arrives when we must greatly reduce estimates on such a bill, the committee that has the matter in charge has as hard a problem before it as can possibly be placed before any legislative committee. I am certain that the subcommittee and the full committee performed their duties with an eye single to the public interest, and all of the members of the committee are to be congratulated. If they have made any mistakes, they are mistakes of the head and not of the heart. I think the bill as a whole, and practically all of its items, are entitled to the favorable judgment of the House.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the discussion of the Indian appropriation bill, the first appropriation bill to be considered this session of Congress, I briefly reviewed the financial situation and expressed the opinion that whatever else we might do, our one compelling and paramount duty was that of practicing strict economy in the appropriation and expenditure of the people's money.

I called attention to the fact that this was not only essential in order to avoid financial difficulty—possibly financial disaster—but that, in view of the fact that extravagant public expenditure is one of the most potent causes in advancing living costs, it was important to economize in Government expenditures in order to help reduce the high cost of living.

In this connection I expressed the opinion that we should, in making our appropriations, reduce the estimates carried in the Book of Estimates in excess of a billion dollars, and stated that in order to do this it would be necessary to accomplish an average reduction of about 28 per cent in the appropriations as compared with the estimates.

We have now progressed far enough in our appropriation program to be able to forecast the probable outcome, and I am very glad to be able to say that we have up to this time, and including this bill, met our expectations in the matter of reductions.

This is the seventh of the 13 regular annual appropriation bills, and when this bill has passed the House we shall have, as to the number of bills, more than half completed our appropriation program for the year.

On the appropriation bills which have thus far been reported to and considered by the House, excepting the bill for the Post Office Service, which is approximately self-supporting—to wit, the Indian, rivers and harbors, Diplomatic and Consular, Agricultural, Military Academy, and legislative—we have effected a saving of a little over $66,000,000 below the estimates, or a little less than 25 per cent. As these bills include several on which the suggested average of reduction was not anticipated, the showing made is even better than we had expected.

On the bill now before us the reduction below the estimates amounts to nearly $19,000,000, or approximately 15 per cent. The reduction below the appropriations for the current year amounts to about $23,500,000. This is certainly a splendid showing when we take into consideration the fact that this bill provides, in the main, for salaries, and that the only saving that can be made is in the number of salaries to be paid.

The reduction is very marked when we take into consideration the fact that this bill contains several large and unusual items, such as upward of $42,000,000 for the Bureau of Internal Revenue for collecting taxes and enforcing the provisions of the national prohibition act, nearly $11,000,000 for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and $5,000,000 for the expenses of the Fourteenth Decennial Census. These three items, totaling upward of $58,000,000, are in amount considerably more than half of the total carried in the bill.

I take advantage of this opportunity to again emphasize the importance of economy. We must reduce the estimates by upward of a billion dollars or we shall increase the floating, unbonded indebtedness; and even though we accomplish this reduction, which I am quite certain we shall, it will be of no avail if outside of and beyond the estimates we make enormous expenditures.

We can not increase our floating debt without inviting disaster, we can not issue bonds for investment purposes without greatly reducing the present value of outstanding Government securities and threatening the stability of our specie basis, and we can not issue bonds in small denominations which would become a part of the circulation of the country without inviting all of the disasters above enumerated and the additional calamity of tremendously increasing the cost of living through the expansion of the circulating medium.

Economy to the limit and no new obligations, unless they are accompanied with provisions to raise the sum required by taxation, is the only sound basis of action.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOODYKOONTZ].

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I wish also to extend my felicitation to the Committee on Appropriations for the work they have done on this bill. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial from the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer, written by Mr. Herschel C. Ogden, a brilliant newspaper man.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the editorial referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, have we not established a precedent of not publishing these editorials in the RECORD? If gentlemen desire to have them reprinted in the newspapers for circulation in their districts, it is easy enough to have that done. I regret very much to do this, but as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], who usually looks after that sort of thing, does not seem to be interested, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not want the occasion to pass without speaking a word of approval of the high standard of statesmanship taken a moment ago by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]. He speaks from a judgment that is well matured, out of a mind that is clear in its conceptions, and with a heart that is courageous—qualities that are very much in demand at this time, so far as legislation is concerned.

I want now to address myself for a few moments in comment upon a remarkable statement, made by probably the highest authority on military affairs in our country, in respect to the physical defects of the youth of the country as brought out in the draft findings. I read from a statement that I think is astonishing, although it is common knowledge.

I read from a speech of Gen. Wood, April 12, 1919:

> The last mobilization—in fact, the entire mobilization for this war—showed a very alarming condition, so far as the physical condition of the men of our country is concerned. The standards under the draft were dropped very low, and we took perhaps in the neighborhood of 70 per cent. Only about one in five, or about 20 per cent, would have passed the physical examination required for the Regular Army or the marines in time of peace. In order to get men for the war the bars were lowered very materially. Of the men who came certain racial groups presented very heavy percentage of physical deficiencies. Some racial groups averaged 33⅓ per cent unfit for services because of vice diseases. Others ran from 8 to 12 per cent. In addition to this condition of unfitness, bad enough in itself, but infinitely bad when you think of its effect upon the population as a whole, and remember that this condition was found in those who were considered fit to send down to the camps—and when you remember that you can imagine what the condition was in the thirty-odd per cent who were not fit to send—were certain other conditions.
> Among the men who came we found no end of physical defects which could have been thoroughly corrected or prevented by sound physical training in early youth. We had all kinds of deformities, such as curvatures, humped-up shoulders, hollow chests, pigeon chests, distortions of various kinds, flat foot—all things that, if properly looked after earlier, could have been avoided. There were a great many cases of seriously defective teeth, with resulting digestive disturbance. In fact, the draft showed an almost entire disregard, so far as our people as a whole are concerned, of sound physical training and of remedial training in early youth. The vast majority of these boys who came to us could have been made fit for military service if they had had any kind of supervision early in life.
> If you can teach boys to stand up straight, and give them the habit of deep breathing, not having them overdo in muscular exercise, but taking just enough to make them alert, giving them those exercises which develop quick coordination, real coordination of mind and muscle, when we get them then it is a very easy task to train them in military work. But of the men who came to us during the war no end of them were heavy of foot, slow in coordination, and clumsy in gait, and it took months of real hard work to make them nimble, active men. There is nothing mysterious about military training. It is very simple and very quickly accomplished with the private soldier when he gets a perfect physical specimen.

Members of the House will recall the sensation created when these results were given out by the recruiting officers. They became the subject of wide discussion upon almost every education platform, whether the pulpit or forum. People were undertaking to find the source of these defects, whether it was a mere matter of neglect, something that could have been avoided, and there was a campaign started as early as the middle of 1917 to stimulate public sentiment for a higher and better physical training of the youth of the land. The recruiting officers' report shows that there were defects in about 75 per cent of the applicants. Gen. Wood stated that not one in over five was received, which would be about 20 per cent. The draft records show that 37 per cent were totally rejected. The officials testify that fully one-half of the time spent in training in the camps was spent in conditioning the men in order to whip them into physical form ready for the training that would become necessary later on.

Nobody questions the value of training. Nobody would, I am sure, refute or attempt even to controvert the value of athletic activities, which we find throughout the high-school life, the college life, and the university life. There is a question which is very pertinent and that is being discussed widely now in respect to military training, but I do not think there would be any dispute on the value of physical training if it could be brought within the compass of the schools of the country. I am convinced that in high-school life and in college life there is no activity that means more for the esprit de corps and the upbuilding of the physical body, as well as the mental, than do the athletic exercises that are to be witnessed in the various contests carried on, whether in competition or purely for training effect. I have always said that if the school authorities could fix a standard of learning as a qualification for entry to these physical exercise, so that no one could play on a football team or a basketball team or take part in any of the athletic contests who did not bring himself up to an intellectual standard, it would be the mightiest stimulus to keep the intellectual standard up that the college could devise. I am sure that the greatest moral force that the schools of the country of to-day can exercise is to hold out as requirement to entry into athletic contests a standard of manhood and womanhood, and to establish that anyone who falls below the required standard shall be denied entrance into the contests. I think it is the most powerful moral influence in a contest to see one strike the line hard or meet another line coming just as hard, and at the same time not lose one's temper, realizing that this is the hard knock that comes in the play of life. It is a powerful stimulus of moral discipline that will sustain one in the struggles when he gets into real life.

As to the value of military training I do not now wish to speak. That is a point that is widely discussed, and variously discussed, and as to which there is a wide divergence of opinion. During my college days I had the opportunity to weigh the value of mental discipline assured by training under orders. I know of nothing which cultivates the power of attention in a greater degree. I know of no training which produces greater mental alertness which demands immediate execution the moment the command is given. These mental attributes are admitted.

However, these and other mental and physical advantages do not necessitate the Nation's entrance upon a system of compulsory military training at this time.

Personally I am not averse to the effect individually it has upon the party receiving the training.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. Considering the gentleman's experience in reference to high schools and colleges, would he consider the military training in those schools detrimental to their success and work in educating the youth of the country?

Mr. FESS. I would not agree to place military training in the high school. I am very much opposed to that. If we are to have compulsory military training, it will have to be by officers under the Government, outside of the school, in order to provide training under proper orders of all our youth and not limited to those who are in the schools. And I am perfectly frank to say to my friend that I can not look with favor upon compulsory military training at this time at all. There are reasons quite specific that I could offer against it. But this is what I am concerned about, that if 75 per cent of the flower of the country that were taken into the camps were found to have physical defects that might have been removed, it is up to the States and the Government to prevent those defects in childhood. That is the thing I have in mind.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. WINGO. Along the line the gentleman suggests, is it not true that flat feet and defective teeth and other defects of that kind, more often than otherwise, grow out of neglect in the early childhood and before children reach the age at which it is proposed to give them military training?

Mr. FESS. That is absolutely true, and high military authority holds these defects unnecessary if proper care in youth is observed.

I would say to the membership of the House, waving aside the military question about which there is much discussion, as well as general interest, I am absolutely convinced that either the States individually or the Nation, or both in cooperation, ought to set about to correct what was revealed by the draft records in the examination of our boys. It would seem to me that wisdom demands that there must be at once an effort made that will be operative in all the schools of the country to indicate to boys, for example, how to stand erect, how to breathe correctly, how to carry the body, how to go through the manual training—in a word, how to develop the physical body. There ought not to be any neglect that would cause persons to grow up with stooped shoulders if it could be avoided. There ought to be a stimulus upon every child, boy and girl, from early youth that should induce the National Government to cooperate with the States to insure a strong physical body, so that if we should ever get into a crisis where we should have to have soldiers we would have strong, physically fit young men. It would not take long to put them in shape to meet what the war would require. This is attested by every consideration of reason and by the experience of all close observers. But if we permit the persistence through childhood of these physical defects, then we shall have the same problem and one can imagine how much it is going to require to take a physically defective boy and make out of him a strong soldier. That is the thing I hope we may in some way or other avoid by providing against the defects by a system of education carried on in school age by both State and Nation.

Mr. DONOVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. DONOVAN. The thought occurred to me as to whether or not in some of the cities now there is provision made for attention to these defects in the public schools.

Mr. FESS. There is in a great many schools. This work in many cities has attracted the country. I will introduce a bill this afternoon, and I do it with the clearest conception of the great burdens upon our Government under which we are now suffering, and I will introduce it with the sharpest interest in economy, for I am frank to say that I am one of the Members of the House, and there are many on both sides, who will not hesitate to take the step to avoid any unnecessary expenditure; and I introduce it with the full understanding of the demands of the hour, for if we continue the unnecessary expenditure foisted upon us in behalf of winning the war we are destined to see the cost of the Government, which was $1,000,000,000 annually before the war, continue three and one-half times that—and none of us wants to do what will produce that result—but with this in my mind I will introduce a measure this afternoon looking to the authority of the States and the Nation supplying physical training to every boy and girl from the age of 6 to 18 in order to make impossible these physical defectives that grow up right under the shadow of our schools as now conducted. This expenditure can be properly enacted as an economy measure.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FESS. I yield to my friend from Nevada.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Does the gentleman feel that a small corner in one of these departments could furnish adequate information to the various States for them to act upon and bring it nearer to home and have it more practical? Do you feel that that would be efficient?

Mr. FESS. There is some objection, as there always has been, to the Government entering upon anything of this sort, and the objection goes to this feature, that education is a matter for the States. But the gentleman knows how I feel about that. I do not believe that the States without the stimulus of the Federal Government are going to do the work that is required. The appalling facts revealed recently show the need of education not yet afforded. We have entered upon Federal cooperation and education to remove certain disabilities in the way of ignorance. The land-grant college, the Smith-Lever Act, the Smith-Hughes Act, and the Fess-Kenyon bill all are examples of Federal cooperation with the States. The disability in the way of a physically defective body is apparent and is quite unnecessary, and I think the Government is justified in entering upon a campaign of cooperation to remove that disability.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. MILLER. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I am in perfect sympathy with his proposition, but for the purpose of information I would like to ask the gentleman under what clause of the Constitution it is possible in an educational way, of which the gentleman speaks, for the United States Government to compel the education of the youth of the land along the lines indicated? I understand perfectly how he could do it under the Army clause of the Constitution, but I am asking for information how it could be done otherwise.

Mr. FESS. I will have to be perfectly frank and say that so far as the authority under the Constitution is concerned this Congress could not step over into Ohio and compel by a Federal law the adoption by the State of any particular education, but I am sure that there is no doubt that the State of Ohio could make, as a part of its compulsory educational law, physical training possible, and then the Federal Government could go to the extent of saying to the States, "If you accept the condition, we will make a contribution." [Applause.]

The bill is drafted on the lines of the Smith-Hughes Act, except it places the administration of the act under the Bureau of Education rather than the Federal board.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compiling the Navy Yearbook for the calendar year 1919, under the direction of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, $500.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew my request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the manner referred to a few moments ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by incorporating an editorial referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the editorial about?

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. It is in reference to economy. I asked unanimous consent a while ago and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] interposed an objection, but he afterwards sent for the paper and read it, and has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman authorized to speak for that side in reference to putting in editorials in regard to economy or false economy? If we permit one class of editorials, we must permit others. My only desire it to protect the RECORD.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks a while ago, and incidentally mentioned that I desired to incorporate an editorial.

Mr. WINGO. No other Member has, while I have been on the floor, asked to put in newspaper editorials, as I recall. I am not objecting if the gentleman in charge of the House is willing to go on record as putting in newspaper editorials. I have many of them which I have been requested to put in, and which I will later ask consent to put in.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The editorial is as follows:

CUT EXPENDITURES.

Adolph Lewisohn, New York banker, in a letter urges the reduction of national taxation. If economies can not be made at Washington sufficient to allow the lowering of present tax rates, Mr. Lewisohn believes a moderate short-time bond issue should be made and taxes lowered thereby. The present heavy tax rates of the Government make for waste and for wild speculation. It is suggested that workingmen deliberately cut down their earning capacity in order to avoid the income tax. One thing is certain, many corporations earning liberal profits regularly plan to spend money in speculative and semispeculative enterprises as a means of reducing their payments to the Government.

While a bond issue would temporarily lower taxation, the real cure is in departmental economy. We must not only lower taxes but we must spend less money. The Government at Washington to-day is a monumental example of extravagance and inefficiency. It is costing the American people approximately $60 per man, woman, and child in the entire country. The average family of five is paying $300 a year, or practically 20 per cent of the earning capacity of a well-paid workman, to help keep Washington going. Twenty cents out of every dollar earned by the American people is taken to feed an army of officials, wastrels, and vagrants. If we have not the courage and the intelligence to stop this shameful condition of affairs, republican government is a failure.

Let the economies begin at Washington.

Let national expenditures be brought down to a sane basis.

Let a half million or more useless officeholders be turned loose to work in gainful occupations.

Let us do away with a myriad of useless commissions.

Let us get away from the idea that the National Government must interfere with, meddle with, disturb, and direct the daily life of the people at every point.

Let us, in short, have a return to sanity and to reason.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, $6,500; Assistant Sergeant at Arms, $2,500; Assistant Doorkeeper, $3,600; Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, $3,600; 2 floor assistants at $2,500 each; messengers—4 (acting as assistant doorkeepers) at $1,800 each, 36 (including 1 for minority) at $1,440 each, 1 $1,000, 1 at card door $1,600; clerk on Journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the Official Reporters, $2,800; storekeeper, $2,220; stenographer in charge of furniture accounts and records, $1,200; upholsterer and locksmith, $1,440; cabinetmaker, $1,200; 3 carpenters, at $1,080 each; janitor, $1,200; skilled laborers—4 at $1,000 each; laborer in charge of private passage, $840; 3 female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring room, at $720 each; 3 attendants to women's toilet rooms, Senate Office Building, at $720 each; telephone operators—chief $1,200, 4 at $900 each; night operator, $720; telephone page, $720; press gallery—superintendent $2,500, assistant superintendent $1,400, messenger for service to press correspondents $900; laborers—3 at $800 each, 34 at $720 each; 16 pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, $4,640; in all, $147,860.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting two letters on bills introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] on second-class postage.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing two letters on the subject of second-class postage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio, to the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion, dated July 20, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1919.

MARVIN GATES SPERRY,
President Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion,
National Headquarters, 810 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have introduced a bill in the House of Representatives to allow the private soldiers and sailors of the Great World War to incorporate as a fraternal organization. This bill, if enacted into law, will give the men who stood behind the guns and did the real heroic work of war the right to form a social and fraternal society under a national charter of rights.

This fraternal society will not only inculcate patriotic sentiments among the rank and file of the Army, but will remind the present generation (often too prone to forget) that the country owes a debt of gratitude to these gallant soldiers that can not be paid by flag waving or rationless public parades. It calls for practical patriotism.

Practical patriotism was well voiced by the martyred Lincoln in his last inaugural address, "To care for the soldier who bore the brunt in the battle front, his widow, and his orphan." The above is not a literal quotation from Lincoln's last appeal to the American people, but it vitalizes his appeal in spirit and purpose.

Several fraternal societies were organized after the Civil War, of which the Grand Army of the Republic is now the most numerous. The officers organized a more exclusive society, the Loyal Legion, on the plan of the Order of the Cincinnati, organized by Gen. Washington and the officers of the Army of the Revolution. Hence, there is nothing new in the plan proposed by this bill, to form a Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion for the commendable purpose of uniting in one fraternal body the men who fought the greatest battles in all history, and who gave added prestige and glory to the heroic achievement of our armies in former wars.

"Lest we forget," these men offered their lives, their hopes for a career, their all in the terrible crucible of battle.

During the Civil War I held six different officers' commissions, but I look back with more self-satisfying pride to my service as a private soldier carrying a gun at $11 a month in West Virginia in the first battle of the war—Philippi. The private soldiers of the Civil War did not form a society exclusively of private and noncommissioned officers for the reason that both officers and privates were made up almost exclusively of volunteers.

We were neighbors, both officers and privates, when we went into the war, and all on an equality as citizens and comrades. And when on the battles' front we did not part with that equality. When the private soldiers stacked their guns after a drill or a battle and the officers sheathed their swords, we associated together in camp or around the bivouac fires as social equals.

During the World War officers were regarded as a distinct class and private soldiers were made a subordinate class, whether on or off duty. In our Civil War a private soldier who showed high soldierly qualities in the trying ordeal of battles was booked for promotion. We had no grammar school for officers in order to qualify them to command. Our war demonstrated the fact that while knowledge of military tactics and discipline are necessary qualifications of an officer, that the one vital test is the courage to stand fire in the hot hell of shot and shell, and to hold the mental alertness, the cool judgment, and calm poise in this terrible environment.

If there is now some prejudice among the private soldiers against their officers it is largely on account of this new system of military training, that put schoolmaster-trained officers over private soldiers, who had no battle experience, and giving the men who stood behind the guns no favoring chance to earn promotion by real merit or heroic conduct in actual conflict.

Hence, I say in all candor and with a judgment based upon an experience of some 42 battles, that I hail the private soldiers and sailors of this World War with my most fervent prayers for a successful mission to make fraternity and real comradeship a living, vital element in their future lives, with the hope that they will so live that a grateful people will approve their conduct and example. Furthermore, that they will not have to wait a quarter of a century to receive practical recognition of a Nation's gratitude as we, the veterans of the Union Armies, were compelled to wait. Now is the fitting time to express national gratitude.

Yours,

ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, M. C.

The Clerk read as follows:

LEGISLATIVE DRAFTING SERVICE.

Section 1303 of the "revenue act of 1918" is repealed on and after July 1, 1920.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the item.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the item.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, I make a point of order against it.

Mr. MADDEN. All right.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The point of order is it is not in order in that it is legislation. I suppose the idea of the committee was that it was in order under the Holman rule, but it is not.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is our contention.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the committee makes that contention I would like to be heard, but it is up to the committee to present their views first as the burden of proof is on the committee.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it is sufficient to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the law as it now stands provides--

That there is hereby created a Legislative Drafting Service under the direction of two draftsmen, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate, and one by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, without reference to political affiliations and solely on the ground of fitness to perform the duties of the office. Each draftsman shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly.

The provision of this bill to which a point of order is raised abolishes these two offices, in consequence showing upon its face that it will save to the Treasury of the United States $10,000 a year. In addition to this, to pursue this statute further, it will save the incidental expense.

Now, as I understand it, under the Holman rule any amendment is in order if it is germane and has for its purpose the reduction or retrenchment of expenditures. If it is patent upon its face that it will retrench expenditures, it is in order.

I wish to state further that it would not even be necessary for it to appear that the amount was specific, or that any considerable amount might be saved. If it appears upon its face that any amount is saved, it is in order under the Holman rule.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. GARNER. Under the gentleman's contention, if I understand it correctly, a provision inserted in an appropriation bill which repeals any statute now in existence that costs the Government money to maintain its activities under the statute would be in order; so that you could repeal the entire statutes of the United States, provided thereby you would save money.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No. That is not the contention at all. The repeal of the legislation would displace a specific office. There are many statutes that could not be repealed by that means.

Mr. GARNER. Under that reasoning the gentleman could repeal the whole criminal code. Any statute now existing that required a salaried officer to perform a certain duty could be repealed in that way. There is no difference, whatever the performance might be. You could repeal, I repeat, the provisions for the entire criminal code of this country by an item on an appropriation bill, which is absolutely illegal. I am sure that the gentleman does not mean by that that he can repeal a statute because, forsooth, by the repeal of that statute he discontinues an office and thus saves money.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; that is not the contention. It is the contention of the chairman of the committee that under the Holman rule, where a provision simply abolishes a specific office, it is clearly in order if it shows upon its face a retrenchment in the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. It has been some time since I looked at the Holman rule, and I can not find it just at this moment. My recollection is that the provision in the Holman rule which undertakes to make legislation in order that retrenches expenditures provides that that legislation shall be offered by a committee having jurisdiction of it if introduced as a legislative proposition. I do not mean that is the exact language of the rule, but that it is the idea of the rule. Now, the Committee on Appropriations would not have jurisdiction of a bill repealing this act if it were introduced as an independent proposition.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think the gentleman is in error. It is a good deal broader than the scope he is giving to it.

Mr. GARRETT. That is one phase of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I refer the gentleman to page 361 of the manual. The gentleman is right with reference to the fact that that is one of the reasons; but if it appears on any general appropriation bill that the effect of the legislation proposed will retrench the expenditure of money, it is germane where it is for the purpose of abolishing an office.

I wish to invite the attention of the Chair to a ruling made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] when the question was up with reference to the abolishment of the Subtreasuries, and, by the way, that question will arise again during the consideration of this bill. In that ruling of the gentleman from Virginia he uses the following language:

> There is no effective proposition to reduce the amounts covered by this bill for the obvious reason that the reductions which the repealing provision will effect will not of necessity occur within the life of the bill, which is limited to a duration of two fiscal years. There is another feature, however, of the paragraph which has apparently been overlooked, and that is the reduction effected in the number of the officers of the United States.

The effect of this legislation is the reduction of two officers of the United States, and the gentleman from Virginia, basing his reasoning upon that fact—that it would reduce the offices of the United States and thus retrench the expenses of the United States—held that provision repealing the law creating the Subtreasuries of the United States to be in order. If it was in order then, it certainly would be in order now. I think the rulings are uniform upon that proposition, that where the legislation is for the abolishment of an office of the United States, and by reason of the abolishment it will retrench the expenditures of the Government, it is in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] cited some ruling that I have heretofore made in this connection. The reasoning of that ruling was good then, and I think it is good now for any state of facts to which that reasoning applies. But the trouble that confronts both the gentleman from Indiana and the committee reporting this bill, is that the present situation is different from the facts discussed in that ruling.

There are two difficulties with respect to this particular amendment. One is that under the recent rulings this rule is to be construed strictly. I know that is the attitude of the gentleman in the chair [Mr. LONGWORTH], because in an argument with me on the floor a few days ago he contended that this rule ought to be construed strictly, stating that he was opposed to legislation upon appropriation bills, and that there was great danger in affording a liberal construction of the Holman rule, whereby legislative riders could be engrafted upon appropriation bills. That is this situation. This is a legislative rider pure and simple, not related or germane to the subject matter of this bill, and not belonging to the jurisdiction of this committee.

The rule with respect to Holman amendments providing new legislation is that they shall be germane to some provision of the bill, and shall show upon their face that they will reduce expenditures. See Manual, Edition 1918, page 373. The gentleman from Ohio and myself argued that proposition in the case to which I have referred. There is absolutely nothing on the face of this bill, or on the face of this particular paragraph that gives any information in this respect. There are many precedents to the effect that you must look to the bill, and to the amendment in order to gather from them that a reduction will be effected. These precedents should be followed, if the Holman rule is to be construed strictly, and not liberally.

I will cite these decisions in a moment. But the far more material difficulty in the way of the gentleman from Indiana is that if the Appropriations Committee undertakes to report a bill containing legislation and a reduction, both the legislation and the reduction must be germane to the subject matter of the bill and retrench expenditures in one of three ways.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman, is not the abolishment of this draft committee just as germane when it comes in from the Committee on Appropriations on the legislative bill as was the abolishment of the Subtreasury when it came in on the same kind of a bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That may be.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As I understand it, the question involved at the time the gentleman from Virginia made the ruling referred to was the abolishment of the Subtreasury of the United States, not at a specific time but at a very remote and uncertain time—six months after the close of the war. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Nobody at that time could tell when the end of the war might come.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That decision may or may not have been sound, but if it sustains the gentleman's contention, I intend to cite per contra a number of decisions not made by the gentleman from Virginia, but reported in the Manual.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I presume, then, that this is more a matter of expediency than otherwise?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No; it is a matter of proper ruling.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I take it for granted that the gentleman from Virginia in making this ruling was convinced that he was ruling correctly with reference to the enforcement of the Holman rule?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will agree to that.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Here is another thing to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair. At that time the gentleman from Virginia was carrying out the policy of his party in retrenchment of the expenses of the Government. He is not so much interested in that proposition now, but that is one of the things for the Chair always to take into consideration, and if there was any doubt upon this question, it should be given a liberal construction in favor of the reason for its invocation.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Personally I think and have always thought that the Holman rule ought to be given a liberal construction, but that has nothing to do with the question raised by my second objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The amendment proposed at the time the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] made this ruling was for the purpose of retrenching expenditures. That was the reason given for sustaining the proposed legislation, and in that case it was a very uncertain proposition. The point of order might have been sustained in that case clearly, I think, because of the uncertainty of the proposition. No one could tell whether the war was going to end in 1 year, or 6 years, or 20 years.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Suppose we concede that I was mistaken in that ruling.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not believe the gentleman will be willing to concede that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes; I will concede that pro arguendo.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For the purposes of this case the gentleman has indicated that he is willing to admit now that he was wrong then. But this is not the only decision upon this proposition. There are numerous cases which the Chair will remember very well. One of them was decided also by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], if my memory serves me right. That was with reference to the reduction in the Army when it was proposed to reduce the Army by 10 regiments of Cavalry. There was nothing in the proposed legislation that would indicate upon its face that it would save the Government a dollar. Yet it was perfectly reasonable, and the gentleman was justified in assuming that 10 regiments of Cavalry could not be maintained by the United States Government for nothing, and that the very fact that it was going to reduce an instrumentality which meant an expenditure for its upkeep made it germane and made it proper legislation under the Holman rule.

The same thing was held by Mr. ALEXANDER with reference to the abolishment of the Subtreasuries the very next year after the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] held that the legislation proposing to abolish the Subtreasury was germane. Mr. ALEXANDER adopted not only the ruling of the gentleman from Virginia, but quoted at considerable length in approval of the reasoning in his decision.

If other precedents were desired with reference to this proposition, I call attention to the well-decided case with reference to the Pension Office, where there were just two words which indicated that it was going to reduce the number of those who were entitled to receive pensions, without showing upon its face that it was abolishing even any statutory office.

But because of the fact that it would result in the retrenchment of expenses under the Holman rule it was held competent. Here it is competent to take into consideration that fact as it was there, and the only change of existing law is the abolishment of two officers, thereby saving the Government the expense of their salaries.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. What part of the bill is this provision germane to. There is nothing here to which it is germane.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes; there is.

Mr. STEENERSON. If there was something in here providing some reference to the war-revenue act or to section 1303, it might be germane.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It provides that "section 1303 of the revenue act is hereby repealed"; that is sufficient.

Mr. STEENERSON. No; it is not referred to in this bill.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It carries it into the bill by reason of the reference. The Chair will have to take judicial knowledge of the fact that there is such a section as 1303 of the revenue act.

Mr. STEENERSON. In regard to what the gentleman said about the ruling on the Subtreasury there was a clause in the bill referring to the Subtreasuries but here there is nothing in the bill to hang it on.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I may have been mistaken in my ruling in the Subtreasury case. But I was not mistaken in the ruling on the amendments to the Army bill for the reason that the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction both to legislate and to appropriate. The point I am now making, and I wish to state it clearly and cite ample authority in its support, is that if a committee undertakes to legislate in an appropriation bill, the legislation must be germane to the subject matter of the bill, and retrench expenditures. That is my contention and if I can not maintain it I have no standing on the point of order.

A number of rulings have announced the above proposition. The gentleman from Tennessee made an elaborate ruling on that line, showing that legislation in an appropriation bill retrenching expenditures is not in order, if that legislation introduced in a separate bill would have gone to another committee. This case is precisely in point, and is found in the Manual, above cited, on pages 496, 497, 498. The point of order was to a provision containing legislation in a bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. It was alleged to be in order on the ground that it reduced expenditures. The Chair held, see page 498, top of page, as follows:

> The Chair is of opinion that the Committee on Appropriations may not under Rule XXI bring in as an integral part of an appropriation bill substantive legislation that, if introduced by a Member in the ordinary way, would go to another committee for consideration and action. Nor could a Member from the floor offer such an amendment, unless that Member offer it as a report of a committee, or as a member of a joint commission which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter under the rules of the House.

This decision cites an older decision to the same effect, as follows (see p. 499):

> The Chair is of opinion that a motion of this kind should come officially from the committee having jurisdiction and can not be brought before the Committee of the Whole as an integral part of an appropriation bill reported by the regular Committee on Appropriations.

The facts in the case ruled on by Chairman GARRETT are precisely the facts of this case, and his whole ruling rested upon his answer to the inquiry whether the Committee on Appropriations can report a repealing clause in its bills even if it retrenches expenditures, when such repealing clause, if introduced by a Member in a separate bill, would have gone to another committee. Apply his ruling and the ruling which he cites to the facts of the bill before us. The repealing item is in the legislative bill. If the proposed repeal had been undertaken by a separate bill, as might have been done, that bill would not have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations but to the Committee on Ways and Means. Moreover, by Rule XXI, this repealing item must be germane to the subject matter of the bill. What is the subject matter of this bill? It is the various appropriations authorized by law and proper to be made in this bill. This committee has no jurisdiction to legislate. No legislation introduced by a bill can be referred to it. If it includes legislation it must be legislation within the limitations prescribed by Rule XXI. To what is the item under consideration germane? Not to the section, for it is the whole section, not to the preceding section, for it has no relation to it. Not to the subject matter of the bill, for that subject matter is making appropriations authorized by law, not legislating in regard to them. If this repealing legislation was attached to some other language making an appropriation in this connection, a plausible argument might be made that it is germane. But there is no such language. This is a flat repeal standing single and alone. It has no pedis positio in this bill. It is germane to nothing in it, and we are all agreed that this committee would not have jurisdiction of a separate bill to effect the proposed repeal. Moreover, this amendment is not proposed by the committee that would have jurisdiction of such a bill. Hence under Chairman GARRETT'S ruling, however much this proposed repeal might effect reductions in expenditures, it is not in order in this bill. Further the facts in the ruling cited by Mr. GARRETT are identical with the facts of the present case, in that the matter held to be out of order was legislative matter contained in an Army appropriation bill, when the legislation proposed, if offered in a separate bill, would not have gone to that committee. (See Manual above cited, bottom of p. 498.) Bear in mind that the Committee on Appropriations has no greater power to include nongermane legislation in its bill, even if it retrenches expenditures, than a Member has to offer such legislation in an amendment from the floor. The language of Rule XXI makes that abundantly clear when it says no provision in an appropriation bill—referring to a bill reported by a committee—or amendment thereto—referring to amendments offered from the floor when the bill is under consideration—shall be in order. If this repealing clause, not even connected with an appropriation bill, be held to be in order, let us see what will be the necessary effects of such a ruling. It will make in order amendments from the floor designed to repeal any law under which the Appropriation Committee is authorized to appropriate, and pursuant to which it does appropriate. If this single item of repealing legislation, not even connected with an appropriation, is held to be germane on the ground that the committee has authority to make an appropriation for the officers proposed to be abolished, then, of course, with respect to any item actually making an appropriation under authority of existing law, an amendment proposing to repeal that law, or to repeal enough of it to eliminate some of the officials provided by the original act, would be in order.

The same ruling cited by Mr. GARRETT held further, with respect to another contention, that it was of opinion that the effect of reduction should not be inferred by way of argument, but should appear from the face of the bill itself.

If the Chair considers that the Holman rule should be strictly construed to eliminate legislative orders, I commend him to this conclusion of the Chairman in the case cited. (Manual, p. 370, middle of the page.)

On page 371, about the middle of the page, will be found a ruling relating to a legislative amendment to a sundry civil bill. The Chair held the amendment to be out of order on two grounds: First, because not germane to the subject matter of the bill—a sundry civil bill. Second, because it did not reduce expenditures. Suppose the amendment had been effective to reduce expenditures, it would still have been out of order as being nongermane. Yet this amendment, which was to an item in the bill for the recoinage of uncurrent fractional silver, was apparently more germane to that item than the repealing item under consideration is to anything in this legislative bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with the ruling of the gentleman which came up later about the Subtreasury. Does the Chair understand that there was any question as to the jurisdiction of the committee there raised?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not recall the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. If that question of jurisdiction had been raised——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not recall whether it was raised or not; but if it was raised and I made an erroneous ruling, that fact affords no reason why that error should be perpetuated. I will look to that case as soon as I conclude this argument.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling on page 372, which is an illustration of a germane legislative amendment reducing expenditures, and consequently in order under Rule XXI. I will reproduce the language of the Manual:

An amendment reducing the amount appropriated for railroad transportation of mails, coupled with a proviso directing the Postmaster General to reduce by 10 per cent the annual compensation for transporting mails on railroads was held to be in order. (Hinds, IV, 3891.)

In a ruling on the same page a legislative amendment to an item in the Post Office bill appropriating for Free Delivery Service, reducing that item, and making new provisions of law, was held to be germane, and retrenching expenditures. Likewise to a bill making appropriations to the Indian Service, an amendment transferring the management of Indian affairs to the War Department, was held to be germane. In both of these cases the same committee reporting the legislation in the appropriation bill would have had jurisdiction of that legislation if offered as an original bill.

On the decision in the case on page 371 on a legislative amendment reducing an appropriation, and repealing the subsidy act, the Chair held that as a condition precedent of order both branches of the amendment must be germane to the bill. The legislation was not to be germane to the bill. The legislation was considered not to be germane to the appropriation bill. Further jurisdiction of that character of legislation did not belong to the committee.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. If the committee simply failed to appropriate for this matter that would amount to a suspension for a year at least, would it not?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That would be a suspension of the appropriation, not of the act. This committee could decline to make any appropriation on this matter.

Mr. LITTLE. If the committee should do that that would amount to a suspension of the law.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. This item does not propose suspension but a repeal of the law.

Mr. LITTLE. If they can suspend the law by implication what is the difference between that and repealing it? It is their business to take care of this matter in some way.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman to the language in the bill:

Section 1303 of the "revenue act of 1918" is repealed on and after July 1, 1920.

Mr. LITTLE. But they could refuse to appropriate.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly. That raises an entirely different question. The one is a question of doing what the committee has the right to do, the other of undertaking to do something outside of its authority. The committee seeks by this amendment to exercise a jurisdiction by the terms of Rule XXI which has not been committed to it. If it merely declines to appropriate, that is an act within its manifest and undisputed authority.

Mr. LITTLE. The purpose of this is to save money.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not discussing the proposition on its merits. That would come up on a motion to reduce or cut out the appropriation for this official.

Mr. LITTLE. Neither am I. I am discussing the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It seems to me that the gentleman is discussing the merits. I now wish to call the attention of the Chair to a decision to be found on the middle of page 373 of the Manual. In this case an amendment was offered as a separate paragraph in a deficiency appropriation bill. First, I will direct the attention of the Chair to the following language in support of my first contention, and another precedent in point, if the Holman rule is to be construed strictly:

Amendments providing new legislation must be germane to some provision of the bill and show on their face a reduction of expenditures.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman contend that what he has just read has any application to this paragraph?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I certainly do.

Mr. WALSH. This paragraph in the bill is certainly not an amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But whether a paragraph in the bill or an amendment from the floor the item must be germane. Moreover, this was an urgent deficiency bill, and the amendment did not come from a committee having jurisdiction of the legislation. If in this instance the item had been included in the bill the principle of the ruling would have applied equally as well. Inclusion in the bill would not have made it germane to the bill if it was not germane to any provision of the bill when offered from the floor. If it had been germane it would have been in order on that ground, if reported in the bill, and equally in order if offered as an amendment from the floor. A committee by including in their bill matter in excess of their jurisdiction can not make that matter thereby in order. Nongermane legislative matter in an appropriation is not in order under Rule XXI.

Again, on pages 496, 499, and 501 are three very elaborate rulings, two of them by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and one by Mr. GARRETT of the same State. I read from page 498:

If the Chair be correct in this, what have we here? There is proposed here upon this bill substantive legislation, not a reduction of salaries, not a reduction of the number of employees, not perhaps a reduction of the amount covered by the bill, though the Chairman does not deem it necessary to pass upon that now; but even if it were all of those, and in order to carry it out it were necessary to enact new law, to create a new industrial enterprise, a new project not now provided for by law, would it be in order? The Chair thinks not, except it be upon a report of the committee which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter if introduced as an original bill in the House of Representatives, in this case the Committee on the District of Columbia.

In this case the matter objected to was matter already in the bill—an appropriation bill. The discussion by the Chairman related solely to the point now raised by me as to an item in the present bill, namely, whether substantive legislation proposed in a bill reported from the Appropriations Committee is in order even if it does effect a retrenchment, if it is not upon a report of the committee which would have jurisdiction of the subject matter if introduced as an original bill in the House of Representatives. In his elaborate ruling Chairman GARRETT held that under the conditions supposed such an item would not be in order. In that case original jurisdiction of the legislation proposed belonged to the Committee on the District of Columbia, in this case to the Ways and Means Committee.

The case decided by Chairman GARRETT answers the query of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], since it relates to matter in the bill and not to an amendment. Further, the Chair held in language heretofore cited that if the language in the bill was offered as an amendment then in order for it to be in order it would have to be offered as the report of the committee having jurisdiction. The Chair will find a ruling on page 500, made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], touching this same question. I read as follows:

At this point another question arises relating to the germaneness of the amendment under a ruling which seems to be well established, and that is that without regard to the question of whether the amounts of the appropriations carried in the bill are reduced within the meaning of the third provision of clause 2 of Rule XXI, if the amendment constitutes separate, independent, permanent, substantive legislation, then, even though it should meet the requirement as to a reduction of the expenditures, it would not be in order unless it came officially from the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of the amendment.

It has already been pointed out that this principle announced by Mr. HULL as to an amendment offered from the floor applied to matter reported in the bill, if that was legislative matter belonging to another committee. Chairman GARRETT's ruling, to the same effect as Chairman HULL's, related to matter contained in the bill. Later the amendment rejected by Chairman

HULL was offered by authority of the Committee on the District of Columbia and admitted.

If the Committee on Ways and Means should afford authority to offer this amendment to this bill it would be unquestionably in order since it would conform to all of the rulings that I have cited.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I understood the gentleman to lay down the principle that if this had been reported and offered upon the suggestion of the Committee on Ways and Means it would be in order, in view of the fact that that committee would have jurisdiction of legislation if introduced as a separate substantive measure. Would not the question of germaneness still apply?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. The question of germaneness would always apply, have to be considered.

Mr. GARRETT. By the express terms of the rule the word "germaneness" is used. Now, it is an inquiry in my mind as to whether or not that legislation would be germane to an appropriation bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have tried to point out that in the present connection here there is no environment, no preceding section, no portion of the bill to which this legislative amendment repealing an existing statute can be regarded as germane. But even if it were germane it would still be out of order, because the Committee on Appropriations has no original general legislative jurisdiction. It should come from the committee having appropriate jurisdiction.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Upon the contention presumably you could insert a repealing clause of an entire revenue bill in this section?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If this bare repealing item is in order then the Appropriation Committee possesses the authority to report a repealing provision for any existing act under which the committee is vested with authority to make an appropriation. Whatever may be the existing legislation providing for officials, bureaus, or departments and authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to make appropriations in that connection may be repealed by repealing clauses contained in an appropriation bill. There is no escape from that conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not contend it would not have been in order for the Committee on Appropriations to have brought in an appropriation for this service?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, no; unquestionably such an appropriation would be in order. The jurisdiction of the committee is to make appropriations, not to legislate.

There is one precedent apparently at variance with Chairman GARRETT'S ruling and the other rulings cited. I refer to the decision of Chairman JOHNSON, found on page 511 of the Manual. But that ruling may be distinguished from the present case on the facts upon the ground heretofore suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. The facts in the case decided by Chairman JOHNSON are as follows: Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, had offered an amendment to the sundry civil bill carrying an appropriation for enlarging the Capitol Grounds as authorized by an existing act. To this amendment the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] offered an amendment repealing the act itself. At least there was something there to which it could be held that the Sisson amendment was germane, namely, the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

But in the case under consideration there is absolutely nothing in the bill to which the repealing item is related or to which it can be said to be germane. It is a bald item of repeal, standing single and alone, repealing an act originally reported by the Ways and Means Committee. There is no case like it on the facts in any precedent stated. It does not on the facts come within the decision of Chairman JOHNSON, and following the principles and cases which I have cited the item is plainly not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in order for that committee under its jurisdiction——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But that is not the line of distinction.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12610, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Virginia, announcing the rejection by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the extension of the right of suffrage to women.

He also laid before the House a communication from the governor of the State of Arizona, announcing the ratification by the legislature of that State of the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the extension of the right of suffrage to women.
